This rule has been enforced on The Star because it is fair and just, and your complaint is based on entirely reasonable grounds. We endeavor to exact complete fidelity to our instructions from all employes and have on the whole no complaint to make of their willingness to obey, but in this instance, for which the only explanation given is lapse of memory, we failed to receive the obedience which we insist upon.

Apology From the Chicago Daily News.

The joke, "Keep the Home Fires Burning," appeared in several of the large daily papers. In each instance we received an apology from the paper. The following is from the Chicago Daily News.

Mr. L. Edw. Lashman,
Secretary Anti-Defamation League,
1228 Tribune Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: I have your letter in which you protest against an anecdote in The Daily News of Jan. 23.

The protest has a just basis. Such jokes are not supposed to appear in The Daily News, and I very much regret that owing to the carelessness of some sub-editor this one was published. Your letter will serve to make everyone here more careful in the future, which, I suppose, was the principal reason you wrote it. Thanking you, I am,

Very truly yours,
News Editor.

A JEW UNDER-SECRETARY FOR WAR IN AUSTRIA.

Herr Julius Deutsch has been appointed under-secretary of state for war in German Austria. He was at one time an ordinary laborer. Thanks to his exceptional abilities, he managed to gain admission to the University, where he obtained a degree. He is now one of the greatest authorities on political economy in Austria.

JEWISH DEPUTATION TO SWEDISH PREMIER.

A Jewish deputation visited the Prime Minister of Sweden with a view to submitting to him a memorial on the pogroms in Poland. The deputation consisted of Chief Rabbi Dr. Ehrenpreis, M. Hirsch, the president of the Stockholm Jewish Community, M. Lass, a member of the Swedish Lower House, and M. Thiel, an influential member of the community. The premier received the deputation very cordially, and promised to do all in his power to stop the outrages.

Anti-Jewish Prejudice

An Address Before Missouri Lodge No. 22, I. O. B. B. by A. Rosenthal, Editor, The Modern View.

Prejudice began in the Garden of Eden when Cain became jealous of Abel and slew him.

Of the last two men who will inhabit the earth, one may be prejudiced, for hatred, like love, is a passion that lives in humanity.

Anti-Jewish prejudice is a peculiar disease. Doctors who have diagnosed it differ as to whether it is located in the head or in the liver, for ignorant and so-called educated people both are subject to it.

How did anti-Jewish prejudice begin? What encouraged it? What kept it alive? Did it exist prior to the Christian era? What can cure it? What has lessened it? Are we to blame for it? Is it everywhere the same? How should we meet it? Is there any hope for its extinction? Should we fight it? Should we run away from it? What can the B'nai B'rith do to make it less?

These are some of the interesting points, any one of which would require an evening to consider fully.

The story of the Creation is told in the Bible in a few hundred words and the Ten Commandments also, so perhaps we can secure a bird's-eye view of anti-Jewish prejudice in a few short minutes.

* * * * * *

The first important individual whose anti-Jewish prejudice brought to him a peck of trouble was the Pharaoh of Egypt, of whom we read in the Book of Exodus. If we regard that news report as thoroughly authentic, his mistreatment of the Jews in Egypt brought him ten plagues, including frogs, locusts, darkness, blood and "cooties." The last-named alone must have been terrible, if we credit the tales of some of our returning heroes from the European trenches.

There have been a number of the breed of Pharaoh since that ancient day, including emperors, popes and kings, down to the recent German emperor.

Nearly every nation has had its bloody anti-Jewish page, but all such nations, with the possible exception of Poland, are either dead or else transformed today. Poland, too, must reform or die—for anti-Jewish prejudice and modern civilization are conflicting terms.

Mighty Egypt had its Pharoah—where is Egypt? Omnipotent Rome destroyed Jerusalem—where is the Roman empire? Modern anti-Semitism had its origin in Germany—and where, oh where, is that Germany?

What Are Some Forms of Prejudice?

The forms of anti-Jewish prejudice are various—ranging from a massacre or "pogrom" in Poland, to blackballing a Jewish candidate in a Masonic lodge in America. It includes burning at the stake in Spain in the Fifteenth century to not receiving an invitation to a select social dinner dance in the land of the free and the home of the brave!

What Causes Prejudice?

The causes of anti-Jewish prejudice are several. The chief cause, but not the sole one, is religious. The others are social, economic and political.

Even before the Christian era there was anti-Jewish prejudice, as the repeated conflicts of the Jew and heathen tribes would indicate. Perhaps Jewish pride in its spiritual superiority of a belief in one God, and Jewish separateness against intermarriage, fostered this feeling, as it does now.

When Christianity arose and, through the aid of Constantine, the Emperor in Byzantium, gained its ascendancy, the refusal of the Jewish people to adopt Christianity brought on religious persecution and oppression. This senseless wrong continued for long centuries. From its awful degrading effects upon the masses of our people, Jewish life is still suffering today.

While much of anti-Jewish prejudice is today attributable to religious difference, and specifically to the criminal teaching in Christian Sunday schools, that Jews crucified Christ, yet business rivalry and political considerations are as vital as the factor of religion. This is proven by the fact that anti-Jewish prejudice exists in many people who have drifted from the church.

Is Prejudice Declining?

That anti-Jewish prejudice is passing cannot be denied. Contrast conditions now and in the past.

The French Revolution, the American Revolution, the great world war through which we have just passed, have altered things. The growth of international democracy and common sense has unfanged the intolerance of church and state.

The decline of anti-Jewish prejudice is plain when we reflect, with wonder, that a Jew is England's lord chief justice; a Jew is an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, and two governors of the United States are Jewish! Ludwig Biro, a Jew, is foreign minister in the Hungarian cabinet. Baron Sonnino, a Jew, has been foreign minister of Italy during the war. A Jew, M. Louis Lucien Klotz, is minister of finance in France and member of the peace conference. Eleven Jews are in England's parliament.

Here in the city of St. Louis for 100 years there was no Jewish judge, yet within the last fifteen years no less than five Jewish men were chosen to the Circuit bench as judges! The president of the board of aldermen of the city, next in rank to the mayor, is also a Jew and a Ben B'rith! All the five judges are members of the B'nai B'rith!

How Should Anti-Jewish Prejudice Be Met?

To fight it often has invited martyrdom. To fear it signifies a lack of courage.

To conciliate it is hypocrisy. To bear it takes the joy of life away.

In America, the continued use of strange, outlandish speech such as Yiddish and of foreign customs that are un-American, enlarge unfavorable misunderstanding of the Jew. They make him seem an alien as the Chinese with his long braided queue. We are sufficiently if not too clannish without being peculiar. We have our separate lodges, social club and cemeteries. We have the Abrahamitic rite.

Political Zionism—the attempt to classify us as a separate nation—with a Jewish state in Palestine, is not a cure for anti-Jewish prejudice. The remedy is worse than the disease! It is like burning a barn to get rid of a rat! It implies divided loyalty.

Although, in America, thank Heaven, the Jew is equal before the law—and citizen and peer throughout the land—yet there are summer resorts were "neither Jews nor dogs" will be received as guests. Some snobbish social clubs exclude Jews from their membership. Some fashionable seminaries take no Jewish girls. In many university fraternities Jewish students are barred. We see firms who still advertise quite piously for "Christian help only." Occasional stories and picture films portray the Jew as criminal. "Shylock" is still used in text-books of some public schools. Jews, too, are unwelcome as tenants in certain "select" apartment houses, hotels, private streets and "places." "Sheeny" is now and then still used as an endearing term.

But all this is lessening. In America the Jew mingles freely and co-operates commercially, socially, educationally, charitably and patriotically with his fellow countrymen of other faiths in every city in the Union. He is valued and appreciated.

Jewish people are more and better understood and respected in spite of some very undesirable specimens, such as the laud-mouthed, vulgar, noisy Jew, the ostentatious, braggart Jew, the dress-and-diamond-displaying Jew (and Jewess!), the coarse, uncouth, uncleanly and odorous Jew, the "care-for-nothing-but-card-playing" Jew, the tricky, swindling, cheating Jew, the political, corrupt "job-hunting" Jew, the miserly, unsympathetic Jew, and the dissipated, pleasure pursuing, sensual glutton Jew.

Happily, the truer, better Jews vastly outnumber and exceed these objectionable types. The true Jews who are helping to diminish anti-Jewish prejudice here in America are those brave fighting Jews who stood, like Krotochinsky, fearlessly in the fierce fire of the battle of Argonne in the cause of world justice and democracy; civic Jews like Elkus, Straus and Morgenthau and all liberty-loving, law-abiding Jews, conspicuous or humble, efficient worker-Jews in trades and professions, kindly, broad-minded Jews who help the needy of all creeds, courteous, cultured Jews who care for education and good manners, worthy Jews of character and honor upright Jews whose standards of integrity in business square with honesty rather than with profit!

If we study the past, we find that along with progress of mankind there have been, in every land, bold, manly men, who, at the risk of death, have championed justice to the Jew, and stood up for his right to life, to liberty and happiness.

In this glorious galaxy a few distinguished Christian names shine with the Jewish stars. Their fight was synonymous with the battle for the rights of man, for Jewish rights and human rights are one and the same.

What Can the B'nai B'rith Do?

The B'nai B'rith and every Ben B'rith can do no nobler worth than fighting for these Jewish rights in the very midst of the nation in which it has its being, whether it be Russia, Poland or America. In America is its chief great field and opportunity to win the priceless treasure of Jewish recognition and respect, by the evidence of an undivided loyalty, a fervent patriotism and a full participation in the higher thought and progress of the land.

There is one form of ugly, serious anti-Jewish prejudice that should be mentioned with deep shame. It is the prejudice of Jew against Jew, of Russian versus German Jew, of Zionist versus anti-Zionist Jew, of orthodox versus reform Jew, of poor Jew versus rich Jew; in fact, of any one Jew who differs from another Jew. This bitterness prevents our progress. Perhaps the B'nai B'rith can in part remove this vilest form of anti-Jewish prejudice.

In the account of the plagues visited on Pharaoh in Egypt, there was one, the plague of darkness, that was "so thick it could be felt." It put out the light of the sun.

In our day we see coming the brighter, better period, when the reverse will be true, when the sun of civilization and of progress will put out the thick darkness of bigotry, religious intolerance and anti-Jewish prejudice, whether founded on religious bias, economic business jealousy, social exclusiveness or political discrimination.

In that larger, world-embracing light of education, fellowship and brotherhood, such a subject as "Anti-Jewish Prejudice" will be fit only for the consideration of the investigator of fossils and antiquities.

Every Ben B'rith, and every Jew or Jewess, who by a personal conduct and example promotes the progress of the Jewish people, is serving ALL humanity. He, or she, earns the everlasting gratitude of Judaism and of ALL mankind, for through such service the bright day is nearer brought, when the misunderstandings between man and man—of which anti-Jewish prejudice is one—will disappear, at least as far as complicated human life and human nature will permit.

RECONSTRUCTION PROGRAM PLANNED BY THE JEWISH WELFARE BOARD.

Authorized Statement by Col. Harry Cutler, Chairman of the Jewish Welfare Board.

"Our spheres of service shall be extended to meet the needs of our soldiers during this hazardous period of demobilization. Actuated by the same inspiration, and with the same zeal and solicited as during the days of war preparation, our representatives in the field and our community workers will mobilize their energies and resources to meet the emergency".

In these words Col. Harry Cutler, chairman, yesterday described the new inspiration of the Jewish Welfare Board and the new tasks it has set before it.

"The sudden advent of comparative peace has thrust upon our organization four new and momentous problems", said Colonel Cutler. "We have the returned soldier with the red chevron looking for a job; the millions of men in France, England and Germany who have borne the brunt of the fighting, and now with the inspiration and interest of the war over, need comfort and entertainment more than ever; again, there are returning soldiers with a long voyage on board often crowded transports, and finally, the men in the cantonments here, waiting to be mustered out to whom the days seem unusually long.

"These four problems, each of which is large in itself, the Jewish Welfare Board is meeting with greater success every day. The jobless soldier is, of course, the greatest of these problems. It is absorbing the attention of the United States Employment Service, and dozens of other organizations in every city.

"We took up the work as soon as the first soldier without a job appeared. Committees on employment have since been appointed in each of the 165 branch offices of the Board, located in practically every community containing any considerable Jewish population in the country. Every effort is made to get the discharged soldier and sailor a job. In all matters there is intimate co-operation with the federal, state and other employment agencies.

"Interest in the welfare of the discharged soldier is taken while he is yet in camp. As the men come past one by one for their discharges, the representatives of the Jewish Welfare Board inquire in regard to their financial conditions, prospects of employment and home conditions.

"Each discharged soldier is given a card of introduction to the chairman of the local branch in the city or town to which he intends to go. At the same time lists holding the names of these men are sent to the local chairman with perhaps a word of personal comment on each man, if the representatives have come into much personal contact with him. The chairman in each case is told to do everything in his power for the returning townsman.

"For the American troops in France we had but to amplify the arrangements for recreational, educational and religious activities established during the war. New buildings of large capacity have recently been opened at Le Mans, St. Nazaire, Dijon and Alencon, and, in addition, small canteens in the camps of the army of occupation.

"We are now recruiting one hundred men and women of the right calibre to entertain, cheer, provide counsel and take care of our soldiers and sailors, and more than half of these will go overseas.

"Arrangements are also being made to have a representative of the Jewish Welfare Board on every transport returning with American troops to provide entertainments, take up with the men any personal matters that may have come up, help them along educational lines and counsel them in religious questions.

"This brings us to our soldiers in cantonments in this country, who are impatient to be released now that they will not have any more chance to see battle.

"Three troupes of entertainers, consisting of actors and musicians, are now on a tour of the army camps. Scarcely an evening is permitted to pass without a smoker, a minstrel show, a stuntnight, a dance, a vaudeville show, a moving picture, or a concert, either in the camp itself, or in the adjacent community. For men on leave there will soon be gymnasiums and game rooms in all of the community houses of the Board.

"There is in addition a certain class of men who make use of every spare moment to increase their fund of knowledge and thus prepare for better positions than they had before they entered the service. For such men we conduct classes in English, Spanish, French, mathematics, bookkeeping, history, vocational opportunities, general industrial development and world development. Lectures on civics, citizenship and Americanization are also given in English. Yiddish and Russian.

"The Seamen's Evening College at the Pelham Bay Naval Base Training Station begun some months before the signing of the armistice, is an example of the work of the Jewish Welfare Board in this direction. Here in addition to the other subjects mentioned, classes in naval trigonometry, civil service and commercial law were conducted. This school is soon to be enlarged and will be incorporated in one of our large colleges.

"Now, that it is only a question of months before the men there will be mustered out, the Jewish Welfare Board has made arrangements to have the sailors instructed in skilled trades at the college, so that they will be definitely equipped to enter the industrial field. Under the encouragement of the Navy and War Departments this work is being extended to other stations and camps.

"At Camp Travis courses in agriculture are being conducted by the Jewish Welfare Board, with the purpose of bringing about a 'back to the farm' movement. Co-operating in this work, the military authorities have set aside one hundred and fifty acres to be used as a model farm. During the first week attendance from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. was made compulsory for every soldier.

"Five thousand Texas and Oklahoma boys, awaiting discharge from the service, are learning now how to use the ploughshare just as they learned how to use the bayonet. Men who drove army tanks across the fields of Flanders are now running tractors with plows, pulverizers and harrows across the 150 acre field. The interest taken by former city men is a certain indication that a large number of them will try farming after they are mustered out.

"This work of the Jewish Welfare Board has received the unsolicited and unstinted commendation of the general staff of the Morale Division of the Army".

THE DIASPORA.

Isaac Baer Loewinsohn (1788-1860). It is a refreshing sign that from Italy, the country which up to the middle of last century played such an important part in Jewish life and since then has been dormant, a similar news is reported. Giustina Artom of Genoa left a sum of 66,000 lire for propaganda literature on Jewish questions. The interest in strictly Jewish aims by no means prevents the interest in larger problems. Baron Edmond de Rothschild, the benefactor of the Palestinian colonies, donated 300,000 francs for a French art institute in London.

PERSONAL NOTES. The final results of the British parliamentary elections show that eleven Jews were elected and an equal number of Jewish candidates were defeated. Four of the successful candidates appear in the house for the first time, while seven were re-elected. Among the new men appears Major J. Brunel Cohen, who lost both legs in action. He is the son-in-law of Sir Stuart Samuel, the president of the Jewish Board of Deputies, and a former member of the House of Commons, who lost his seat on account of the participation of his firm in business transactions with the government. Two of the members, Mr. Edwin S. Montagu and Sir Alfred Mond, have entered the cabinet. The last house, elected in 1910, counted 16 members to whom during the session another one was added. A strange coincident is the fact that at the last election also just exactly one-half of the Jewish candidates were returned to the house. One candidate, previously a member of the house, Mr. Francis A. Lucas, died during the campaign. Death removed one Jewish member of the House of Lords, Baron Michelham, originally Sir Herbert Stern, and still more originally a Portuguese viscount. He belonged to the typical aristocracy of finance and was at best only a nominal Jew. A signal honor was conferred on Sir Marcus Samuel, Lord Mayor of London in 1902, for whom two streets in the east end of London were named. Sir Marcus lost a son in the war.

The new states formed out of the Russian empire seem to be anxious to show their liberality by giving prominent places to Jews. The Ukraine created a ministry for Jewish affairs and appointed a Mr. Rawetzki to this port, while Simon Rosenbaum was sent to Paris as delegate for the republic of Lithuania, where he holds the post of assistant secretary of state. The boycott of the Jews of Poland, admitted with brutal, though welcome, frankness by Roman Dmowski in an interview with Louis Marshall (New York Times, Feb. 2), may meet with an obstacle in Mr. Oscar S. Straus, who is a member of the advisory commission on the economic and industrial reconstruction of Poland. Of this commission Mr. Samuel Gompers is also a member, though of him hardly anything in the way of representing Jewish interests can be expected. Bulgaria lost its first and only Jewish poet who wrote in the national language, Haim Bohoratcheff, who died in the prime of life in a Swiss sanitarium. The Jews of Bulgaria with the exception of recent immigrants from Russia still cling to the Spanish dialect of their ancestors. The death of that remarkable man, David Lubin, who, working for the economic improvement of the toiling masses, admitted his indebtedness to prophetic ideals, has been noticed in the last issue of the B'nai B'rith News. The evolution of modern Judaism is recalled by the death of Samuel Franzie Berenstein, a city councillor and active Zionist worker of The Hague. He was the grandson of Rabbi Baer S. Berenstein of The Hague who died Dec. 16, 1893, in advanced years. Rabbi Baer, who represented the strictest type of orthodoxy, protesting, e. g., against the uncompromisingly orthodox rabbinical seminary of Amsterdam because Talmud was taught there without the traditional chant, was the grandson of Rabbi Berisch of Hanover, belonging to an age when Jews did not yet indulge in the luxury of family names, who died in 1807, and was the grandson of Jacob Jeshua, rabbi of Frankfort on the Main, known by his chief work, Pene Yehoshua, who died in 1756. Rabbi B. S. Berenstein was also on his mother's side the grandson of Jacob Moses Loewenstamm, rabbi of Amsterdam, an office held previously by his father Saul, his grandfather Aryeh Loeb, and the latter's father-in-law, Zebi Ahskenazi, known as Haham Zebi, and so Samuel Franzie Berenstein represents the old aristocracy of Tamudic scholarship in its modern transformation into lawyers and communal workers.

Two recent deaths show tragedies of assimilation in a manner so impressive that fiction could not have selected them in a more romantic manner. Jacob Medvedeff, a Yiddish singer, died in poverty and abandonment in a New York hospital. His father, a famous opera singer in Russia, had converted to Christianity. The son was irresistibly drawn back to his people and became a star of the Yiddish stage. The opposite side is represented in Jacob Schapiro, a laboratory assistant of the veterinary institute of Berne. A native of Kovno, he had for the sake of his career embraced Christianity. In free Switzerland he passed as a Jew, and dying suddenly he was buried in a Jewish cemetery. His family, however, claimed his body and had him disinterred and buried in a Protestant cemetery. The death of Baron Lambert de Rothschild, the Belgian banker, who rendered such signal service to his country in the days of her great distress was extensively noticed in the daily papers. The family tree in the Jewish Encyclopedia does not give his name among the members of the historic house of this name. A tragedy of American Jewish history was recalled by the notice that Jim Conley, the negro, on whose testimony Leo M. Frank of Atlanta was convicted, was shot in an attempt of burglary. He had been seven times convicted of various crimes before he appeared on the witness stand against Frank, and he is the man who could tell the truth ahout the crime of which Leo M. Frank was convicted under pressure of a prejudiced and frenzied mob which finally added an unenviable chapter to the long record of lynchings in the United States.

Pleasanter memories are awakened by the report that the king and the queen of England in a reception of the American journalists accompanying President Wilson to England, expressed to Mr. Montagu Glass their pleasure in meeting the author of "Potash and Perlmutter," which had given them so much delight. Success has a wonderfully atoning power. Nobody remembers now the vehement denunciation poured upon the head of the creator of these "Alrightnikes" types when they first made their appearance. Rabbi Stephen S. Wise received the decoration of the cross of the legion of honor, and at a reception given in his honor by the French Jews this decoration in diamonds was handed to him as a token of appreciation for his services in the cause of France. Dr. Moses Gaster, chief rabbi of the Spanish and Portuguese Jews of London, is now definitely retired. A meeting of the membership had adopted a resolution censuring the elders for their action, but the latter considering this resolution resolved that the resumption of the office by the Haham "would not benefit the congregation." Gaster's record as scholar and worker in the Jewish community at large will not suffer by what the bosses of Bevis Marks consider beneficial to their congregation. The genial chat editor of the "Jewish Chronicle" had two excellent suggestions for lectures on the topics of the day. One was for Mr. Joshua M. Levy, Gaster's bitterest antagonist, who was invited to lecture on "Shehitah"—Mr. Levy is president of the Board of Shehitah—"and the Haham," and the other was "the Chief Rabbi and Derech Erez." This is a very cruel dig, worthy of another one by the same author who wrote an exhaustive comment of the scholarly essay, published in the "Jewish Quarterly Review" by Dr. Charles Duschinsky on Chief Rabbi Hirschel Lewin, afterwards rabbi of Berlin, where he died in 1800. The essay gave abstracts of Rabbi Hirschel's sermon in which he announced the reason for leaving London and contained not the remotest allusion to present day communal affairs. The Chronicle's arm chairman gave to this essay unusual prominence under the by no means opaque caption: "The chief rabbi must go." The title of chief rabbi of England is misleading. Many people consider it the equivalent of the primate of England. The office is actually that of ecclesiastic head of the United Synagog, comprising less than twenty synagogs, and without government recognition. The chief rabbi of Vienna—unless the latest developments have changed the legal aspect—has a higher official standing. He is the head of a congregation of about 200,000 souls, but even there the anti-clerical tendencies of modern Jewish life make themselves felt. Dr. Hirsch Perez Chajes, the present chief rabbi of Vienna, the successor of the late Dr. Guedemann, is a rather young man of remarkable scholarly attainments, and as the grandson of Rabbi Hirsch Chajes of Zolkiew, a rather unique character who represented modern scholarship in the midst of an obscurantist environment, is also a fine specimen of Jewish progress. Dr. Chajes, when received in audience by ex-Emperor Charles, expressed his strong Zionist convictions much to the chagrin of the then still powerful anti-Zionist element of the board of trustees, some of whom demanded his retirement. Meantime his majesty and the Austro-German citizenship, professing the Mosaic religion, have both been retired. The incident, however, is an interesting illustration of the leadership conceded to the rabbinate which is humorously presented in an anecdote. A Polish Jew who had become emancipated, is seen in a barber shop where he was being shaved. "How could you so forget your religious obligations?" asks the orthodox friend who saw this outrage. "What of it?" is the answer, "I asked the rabbi." "And the rabbi permitted it?" "No, he said it was a grave sin, but who cares for what he says?"

AMERICANIZATION.

Important Americanization Bill Before Congress.

Senate Bill 5464. A bill "to promote the education of native illiterates, of persons unable to understand and use the English language, and of other resident persons of foreign birth; to provide for co-operation with the states in the education of such persons in the English language, the fundamental principles of government and citizenship and elements of knowledge pertaining to self-support and home-making, and in such other work as will assist preparing such illiterates and foreign-born persons for successful living and intelligent American citizenship."

The above bill is the direct outgrowth of the great Americanization conference called by the Secretary of the Interior. The hill provides federal funds to be distributed among the states for eradication of adult illiteracy and for the Americanization of foreign-born peoples. This bill answers the need which has long concerned all those interested in Americanization work.

The director of the Social Service Bureau of the Order received letters from Commissioner P. P. Claxton, director of the Federal Bureau of Education and from Dr. F. C. Butler, director of Americanization for the United States Government, offering the co-operation of the Federal Americanization Bureau in working out any Americanization plans which the Order may have in mind. Since the Americanization plan depends upon the passage of the bill, it is hoped that the readers of the B. B. News will urge their congressmen to vote favorably on this bill.

JEW HEADS LITHUANIAN DELEGATION.

Simon Rosenbaum, well-known Zionist leader in Lithuania, is at the head of the Lithuanian Commission that has arrived in Paris to lay their claims before the Peace Conference. Rosenbaum is the Minister of Finance for the new Lithuanian Government. While representing his government at the Conference, he is also working in hand with Zionists in Paris.

THE CONVERSION MOVEMENT IN VIENNA.

The Vienna Jewish Press expresses anxiety at the further spread of the conversion movement in the city. The situation was very unsatisfactory during the last year of the Hapsburg reign, but since the revolution the movement has assumed even more alarming proportions.

GOVERNOR HONORS A. K. COHEN.

One of the most prominent Jewish citizens of Boston was included in the first nominations of the newly-elected Chief Executive of that commonwealth at the first meeting of the Executive Council since his inauguration.

Governor Coolidge has named Judge Abraham K. Cohen commissioner to consolidate the laws, the appointee to this distinguished post to succeed former Attorney-General James M. Swift.

Judge Cohen was educated in the Boston public schools. He studied law in the office of Charles L. Sprague and was admitted to the bar in July, 1894. In 1907 he was appointed a special justice of the Roxbury Court by Governor Guild, and in 1912 was appointed by Governor Foss as a member of the Boston Municipal Court.

Judge Cohen demonstrated extraordinary executive ability as chairman of the District No. 5 Appeal Board. He has always taken an active part in every Jewish endeavor. He is ex-president of District No. 1, Independent Order B'nai B'rith and was chairman of the reorganization committee of the Federated Charities, of which he is a director. He is also a director of the Hebrew Benevolent Society and of Temple Ohabei Shalom. He is also ex-president of the New Century Club and is at present on the faculty of the Boston University School of Law.

U. S. TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Washington, January [illegible]

Mr. Adolf Kraus, President, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, 1228 Tribune Building, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: During the past year the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith carried on an excellent and patriotic work for the government, especially in the War Savings Campaign.

Now that the war is over, the treasury department is anxious again to enlist the splendid services of the lodges of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith of the United States in a great country-wide educational campaign on the subject of thrift. Knowing the great moral and human principle upon which your order is based, the department feels confident of your interest and loyal support in this important movement to bring the thrift campaign forcibly before our people.

Our only method of getting reasons for thrift to our citizens is through the established channels of permanent organization. Realizing your wide experience and your position as the head of a great order, I wish to advise with you how best we can come into close co-operation with all the Lodges of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. We feel that if we have your interest and active assistance, our campaign will receive the hearty support and enthusiastic assistance of your state and local officeers, and, as a result, all the lodges in the United States will work in close co-operation with the local War Savings Director.

Would it be possible for you to have a War Savings Committee appointed in each of the Lodges under your jurisdiction, that would get in touch with the local savings director and work out some plan of co-operation?

We have prepared practical concrete material on the general subject of thrift and savings. We want your judgment on how this material may be used most effectively by your Lodges. We have a speaker's bureau in every district so that any Lodge by communicating with the director of the local War Savings Society may secure a speaker.

We should like to have this campaign of saving so brought to the attention of the officers of the local Lodges that they will see that their committee acts in full co-operation with the local Savings Organization.

It is because of the splendid service the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith has given to the government that the treasury department feels that with your support and that of your state officers a long step will be taken in reaching the people of the United States with the lessons of thrift.

Trusting that we may hear from you at your earliest opportunity, I am,

Very truly yours,
WILLIAM A. CULLEDGE,
Section on Co-operation, Savings Division, War Loan Organization.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

Washington, D. C.
Jan. 15, 1919.

Mr. Adolf Kraus,
President Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

Dear Sir: With the signing of the armistice and the consequent approach of peace, the activities of the United States Food Administration as such are nearing a close.

The famine conditions abroad still call upon us for conservation in the use of foodstuffs, and when a program to meet this situation has been developed, further specific appeal will doubtless be made to the American people. We trust that if necessity arises we may be able to call upon you for further assistance at such time.

As we are now closing our war activities, we feel that it is fitting to express to you our deep appreciation of the splendid patriotic service rendered during the period that the United States was a participant in the war.

Mr. Hoover, who is abroad studying the future food needs of the world, desires that we express to you his personal gratitude for what you have done.

Faithfully yours,
UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
By H. Alexander Smith.

OFFICIAL PROTESTS AGAINST THE POGROMS.

The Norwegian Foreign Minister, in the course of the debate on the King's speech, announced that the Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian Governments had agreed to make a joint protest against the pogroms in Poland.

GALA-DAY OF PISGAH LODGE NO. 34, DETROIT

CLASS INITIATION AND BANQUET

The record-breaking initiation ceremonies for the induction of more than 300 new members into Pisgah Lodge, took place Sunday, Jan. 19, at the Hotel Statler. The delightful banquet following the initiation, attended by 600 guests and addressed by noted leaders of the Order, was the splendid culmination of one of the greatest Lodge initiations in the city.

Beginning with a special service at Temple Beth El in the morning, at which members of sister Lodges throughout Michigan and other states were the guests, and ending with the strains of "Home Sweet Home" in the Statler ballroom at midnight, the day of festivities will ever be a memorable one.

The spirit of the B'nai B'rith, the unifying spirit of fellowship, of fraternity, of good-will, emanated from the faces of the happy throng that shook hands, laughed and jostled each other good-naturedly in the rooms at the Statler set aside for the Order.

Age and Youth.

Everyone was there. Everyone was glad to be there. All, from the gray-haired venerable gentleman who had lived a life of service to the beardless youth proudly displaying the insignia "Candidate" on his lapel, from the white-haired matron whose eyes proudly followed the footsteps of her husband, a happy, jovial be-ribboned "Committee" man—to the golden-haired lisping tot who had come to see her daddy initiated —all were united by a common bond.

Gustavus Loevinger, of St. Paul, chairman of the propaganda committee of the District Grand Lodge, sounded the spirit of the Order in a stirring address from the pulpit of Temple Beth-El Sunday morning. He told how in the seventy-five years of its existence, the B'nai B'rith had demonstrated its slogan of benevolence through the language of deeds.

"Wherever the cry of Israel went up, the hand of the B'nai B'rith was the first to be extended to their suffering brethren," said Mr. Loevinger. "Whenever [illegible] attention was called to a great wrong petrated in any land against our thers, the B'nai B'rith promptly ught the force of public opinion upon [illegible] offening government until the wrong l been righted.

Eternal Duties.

The B'nai B'rith helped American vry bear its just burden of winning [illegible] war. Its Americanization Bureau is [illegible] power for good in assimilating the reign population.

"So long as the path which humanity traverses is stony, so long as humanity must wound itself on the journey through life, so long will there be need of an institution like the B'nai B'rith."

Rabbi Leo M. Franklin, in his sermon, spoke with pride of the achievements of the Order in the seventy-five years of its existence; of its unifying force; of its ability to reach men of all classes and call each "my brother."

The Bond of Unity.

"Today Israel is not one. There are social strata, there are religious differences that cannot be easily bridged, there is a difference in spirit. The B'nai B'rith can bridge these differences. It can stand forth as a great unifying spirit."

The Hotel Statler ballroom floor was overflowing with members and friends of the Order, with Detroit hosts and outside visitors, before the afternoon program of initiation began.

While the 300 candidates were being initiated into the Order before a great crowd of enthusiastic brethren, a charming and varied musical entertainment was presented in the smaller banquet room for the ladies who accompanied members and prospective members to the hotel.

Myra Finsterwald, a dainty little sprite, appeared in graceful solo dances to the music of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," and Leonard Gautier's "Le Secret." Joseph Levy, a singer of promise, sang "La donna e mobile" from "Rigoletto," and "Dear Old Pal of Mine." Mr. Levy sang at intervals throughout the evening, at the banquet and in the ballroom. Miss Sadie Jacobson, violinist, played "Gypsy Melodies," by Sarasate and, when recalled for an encore she rendered "Ave Maria."

Miss Esther Nadel, a charming newcomer [illegible] city, delighted her audience, [illegible] c readings. The first "Zing [illegible] a story of a gypsy flower [illegible] e Soul of the Violin" depicts [illegible] s struggle between the gnaw [illegible] of hunger and the passion [illegible] violin.

M [illegible] n Cohen, through an inadvertence unannounced on the program, sang three delightful songs, accompanied by Mrs. Samuel Popkin. All other accompaniments were played by Miss Sarah Weinberg in her own artistic manner.

The entertainment committee, to whose untiring efforts the success of the program is due, is as follows: Louis I. Frank, chairman, I. Leonard Braum, A. Lapin Cohen, Hyman Cohen, Sylvan S. Grosner.

Program Perfect.

Due to the perfect arrangement that characterized the activities throughout the day, this delightful entertainment for the ladies and the more solemn and impressive initiation ceremonies for the men concluded promptly at 6 o'clock.

A pleasing informal reception followed, lasting until the opening of the banquet hall doors at 7:30. Hundreds who had failed to make advance reservations, clamored for tickets. As many additional guests as possible were accommodated, but many were turned away at the doors.

The banquet opened with the stirring music of "America," the 600 guests standing and singing the noble hymn. Dr. Samuel S. Mayerberg, associate Rabbi of Temple Beth El, offered the invocation.

Dinner was then served. Finzel's orchestra played at intervals throughout the banquet.

Mr. Freund Greeted.

Morris Garvett, the young and effective president of the Detroit Lodge, heartily welcomed the guests and members.

President Garvett then introduced Adolph Freund, past president of the District Grand Lodge, as toastmaster. The audience rose to its feet as a standing tribute to Mr. Freund for his splendid work in that high office and for his golden jubilee record of fifty years of service in the I. O. B. B. Spontaneously the entire banquet audience burst forth in singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Dr. Hershman Speaks.

Rabbi A. M. Hershman, the first speaker, powerfully emphasized the importance of united action.

"The B'nai B'rith," said Rabbi Hershman, "has done a great deal to bring the Jew nearer to his fellow-Jew. It has created a common platform upon which all Jews can stand.

"The great problem will never be solved unless all Jews and all Jewries are going to work together. The B'nai B'rith has taught us to drop our provincialism."

Secretary Seelenfreund.

A. B. Seelenfreund, of Chicago, first out of the outside guests to be called upon, secretary of the Grand Lodge, paid impressive tribute to the absent president of the Order, Adolf Kraus, who has been identified with the Order for thirty-five years and has served as president for fifteen years.

"Brother Kraus," said Mr. Seelenfreund, "has become a blessing and will continue to be a blessing to Jews. He has solved the intricate questions which have confronted the Order and has brought the B'nai B'rith to the attention of the world."

World of Schools.

"The Order maintains institutions of learning all over the world," he said. "It has in Palestine an institution for the blind. It has schools for nurses, schools in Denver for victims of tuberculosis. We maintain night schools and manual training schools. Service is the keyword of the B'nai B'rith."

A Reverend Brother.

Judge Philip Stein, of Chicago, a man grown white in service, a member of the B'nai B'rith since 1868, after a rousing greeting, told of the philanthropic activities of the Order. He described its Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, which houses and educates 500 children.

He cited dazzling instances where hundreds of "charity orphans," graduates of the asylum, have been trained so as to achieve positions of honor and trust. Similar noble institutions are maintained at New Orleans, Yonkers, Philadelphia and in other parts of this country.

The Anti-Defamation League, of which Judge Stein is chairman, is a new undertaking. The League meets every week to act upon cases of anti-Jewish agitation or of misrepresentation cases sent to them from all over the country.

"The B'nai B'rith has been raised to a height of usefulness that it never attained before," said the judge in closing.

Prayer and Action.

Rabbi David Alexander, of Collingwood Temple, Toledo, discussed "The Order and the Synagogue."

"The B'nai B'rith," said Dr. Alexander, "stands for the application of Jewish principles of life. It is practical Judaism.

"The Synagogue is the House of Prayer, fundamentally the House of Worship, a place for the children of Israel to commune with God.

"The B'nai B'rith is the place of action, the translation of Jewish teaching into a life of service, of love, of philanthropy."

Myer S. Fink, past president Pisgah Lodge, was introduced as "The Man Called on When Some Work Has to Be Done."

"Noble deeds and actions require no eulogy," said Mr. Fink. "The B'nai B'rith has never made a promise to the best of my knowledge.

"But they have built the noblest and grandest institution ever reared by man." Mr. Fink spoke with a deep feeling, which greatly moved his hearers.

"I never hear the sound of children's voices without remembering the young voices of the children at the Cleveland Orphan Asylum chant their evening prayer.

The Noblest Work.

"Trace the history of man to the beginning of time and you cannot find another society organized for a more noble purpose than the Order of the B'nai B'rith.

"It is my wish and prayer that the time may come, and that very shortly, when every Jew, worthy of the name, shall consider it an honor and a privilege to be a member of the B'nai B'rith."

The toastmaster then introduced Milton M. Alexander, chairman of the Anti-Defamation League for Detroit, paying a high tribute to him and to the work that has been accomplished by his committee.

Mr. Alexander was scheduled to speak upon the subject "The B'nai B'rith and Our Young Men," but announced that he would offer instead a toast to the "Grand Old Men"—"the stalwart warriors in Israel, who have fought the fight, and established international foundations of justice and freedom, reflecting undying glory upon our people and our Order.

"We owe it to these sturdy pioneers," said Mr. Alexander, "to carry on the work that they have so gloriously begun. We owe it to them to bring their work to a successful fruition. Let us have done with carping criticism."

The speaker then followed with a fervid attack on forces which have sought to discount the achievements of the Order. "The man who does not believe in the principles of B'nai B'rith," he said, "does not believe in humanity and mercy; he does not believe in fathering the orphan, healing the sick, or providing a habitation for the homeless and aged. He does not believe in the spirit of democracy which finds a constant expression in the activities of the B'nai B'rith."

Mr. Alexander's speech was frequently interrupted by applause, and was followed by a prolonged expression of approval.

Happy Predictions.

Mr. Jacob Miller, past president of Pisgah Lodge No. 34, prophesied that it would not be long before Pisgah Lodge had 1,000 members.

"To be a successful president of a Lodge does not mean merely to use the gavel and to see that the work is carried out in the letter of the law," said Mr. Miller.

"A successful president is one who takes a personal interest in all the members of his society."

Dr. Franklin's Message.

Rabbi Leo M. Franklin, speaking on "The B'nai B'rith and the Ladies," said:

"I cannot conceive that a man can be all that he should in the world, in his business relations, in his social contact, in the whole outlook of his life unless when his day's work is done he comes back to a home that is pure and clear and wholesome," said Dr. Franklin.

"Woman is indeed the best, the noblest, the sweetest treasure a man possesses—and the Jewish woman is the very crown and climax of all womanhood."

Then Mr. Freund called upon the chief speaker of the evening, Hiram D. Frankel, of St. Paul, District Grand Lodge president. Mr. Frankel, his kindly face glowing with pleasure at the royal greeting of the crowded banquet hall, rose in his place. He gave an eloquent exposition of the dreams and aspirations of Jewish people.

"The future of the Jew and the future of the Order are so co-mingled that they are almost inseparable," said Mr. Frankel.

"I dream of a Jew who shall encompass the entire world by his example of right living, of right doing, in whose heart there shall be the consciousness that he has lived so as to command the respect of his fellows. He shall be a Jew who loves his neighbor as himself. He lives in humbleness of spirit. He loves mercy and he walks humbly before his God.

"This is the dream of the B'nai B'rith. And this in the larger sense was the dream of the prophets."

A final burst of applause followed the conclusion of Mr. Frankel's impressive message. The audience then rose and joined in singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

The final festivities of B'nai B'rith day came in the dancing, which followed the banquet and lasted until midnight with unabated enthusiasm. The regretful farewells of local members and guests were mingled with the warmest congratulations on the complete success of the day's program.

The committee on arrangements, which had charge of the entire program, is as follows: Louis James Rosenberg, chairman, David E. Heineman, Simon D. Rosenzweig, Morris Friedberg, Jerome A. Selling, Adolph Finsterwald, Anton Kaufman, Myer S. Fink.

WINNIPEG LODGE NO. 650, WINNIPEG, CAN.

By R. R.

Since the new term, starting Sept. 1, 1918, this Lodge has been very active both in social and communal work. We were interrupted for a while by the ban placed on public meetings on account of the Spanish influenza. Since then we have met twice, at which meetings great interest was shown by all the members present in the program of work mapped out by the executive for the coming term. The Lodge decided to interest itself mostly in Social Service Work, a work that was not done by any other organization in this city. They have under contemplation at present the buying of a well-known building in the city to be turned into a Y. M. H. A. and social center building for the use of the community and owned and controlled by the Lodge. At our last meeting it was also decided to appoint an efficient Social Service Secretary at a proper salary, and the executives were instructed to get in touch with a suitable man immediately. with a view of bringing him here. There is also under discussion at the present time the formation of a Social Club, to be under the auspices of the Lodge and to be open to Lodge members only. We have not yet decided on a definite date to hold our annual B'nai B'rith day, but the Secretary is at present in communication with the Secretary of the Grand Lodge, with a view of bringing some officer of the Grand Lodge to be our guest on that occasion. Last meeting we had the pleasure of welcoming back Brother Frankenstein, who had been overseas with the Canadian army ever since the beginning of the war. Our last meeting was held at The Royal Alexandra Hotel and a record attendance was made, some members being there who very seldom come to meeting, and the Executive Committee are thinking of holding all our metings there in the future.

PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN IN PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Philadelphia Lodges will celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the B'nai B'rith Order by inducting into the Order 1,000 additional men. Arrangements are being made for a campaign such as has never been known in the history of the Order.

A meeting was held on Thursday, Jan. 30, at B'nai B'rith headquarters, where a large representation of all Lodges was present. The meeting was addressed by the president of the district, Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger; Mr. Benjamin Sugarman, chairman of the Diamond Jubilee Committee; Mr. Jacob Singer, Mr. Louis Gerstley and Rabbi Max D. Klein.

Mr. David Bortin presided and Mr. Joseph Herbach, the secretary of the district, acted as secretary of the campaign committee.

Mr. Gerstley spoke upon the advisability of increasing the membership in Philadelphia. He mentioned the fact that he himself would soon celebrate the golden anniversary of his membership in the B'nai B'rith; that he had joined the Order at the age of twenty-two.

Mr. Singer gave a review of the work of the Order, and Rabbi Klein spoke at length on the responsibilities that rest upon the Jew in promoting the ideal of the world's greatest fraternity.

The campaign is to begin on Feb. 10 and will last until March 2. During this time every Philadelphia B'nai B'rith will be asked to contribute his share towards the quota.

Luncheons will be held weekly. Mr. Louis Gerstley issued an invitation to the committee for one of the luncheons.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CHICAGO.

Ramah Lodge.

A meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33, held on Monday evening, Feb. 10, 1919, was well attended. A class of candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge, a number of new applicants for membership were presented. Special feature of the meeting was an address by Brother Leon Zolotkoff on the subject "Cultural Development in Palestine". The address was well received and a vote of thanks was extended to the speaker. The Lodge has made arrangements whereby at each meeting some prominent local person or out of town guest will address the Lodge on a subject believed to be of interest to the members of the Order.

Oriental-Hillel Lodge.

Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 held a well-attended meeting on Monday evening, Feb. 3, 1919. Several candidates were initiated, and a number of new applications for membership were presented. Short addresses on the good and welfare of the Order were made by the president of the Lodge, Brother Julius H. Meyer, and a number of officers of the Grand Lodge.

Covenant Club.

The Social Entertainment Committee of the Club has arranged for Saturday noon lectures by prominent speakers. On Saturday, Feb. 1, 1919, Clarence S. Darrow, lecturer and prominent member of the Chicago Bar, addressed the members of the Club and their friends on the subject "Crime, Its Cause and Cure".

On Saturday, Feb. 8, 1919, Miss Jane Addams, internationally known authoress, lecturer and social worker, addressed an audience of over 200 on the subject "A League of Nations".

On Saturday, Feb. 15, 1919, Dr. John Dill Robertson, Commissioner of Public Health for the City of Chicago, delivered a lecture on the subject "How Chicago's Health is Guarded".

On Wednesday evening, Feb. 12, 1919, a dancing and cotillion party was given at the Club in honor of Lincoln's birthday anniversary. The affair was well attended and proved a great success.

NEW CASTLE LODGE OBSERVES DIAMOND JUBILEE OF THE ORDER.

The Diamond Jubilee celebration of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith was fittingly observed by New Castle Lodge No. 609 Feb. 13 at the Odd Fellow's Hall. Butler, Ellwood City, Sharon, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Youngstown, Chicago, Newark and Wheeling were represented at the meeting in addition to the hundreds who attended from that city. The opening of the diamond jubilee was marked by a meeting open only to members of the order, initiatory work being the feature. Marcus Feuchtwanger was master of ceremonies during the meeting.

Dr. H. A. Frank acted as chairman of the open meeting which followed the exemplification of the ritualistic work. B. S. Pollock of Newark, N. J., a past president of the District and Benjamin J. Sugarman of the same city, chairman of the National Diamond Jubilee Committee, were the principal speakers. Both addresses were exceptionally fine and were received with enthusiasm. Marcus Feuchtwanger also spoke. Miss Florence Weinberg rendered a beautiful vocal solo; Miss Anna Kent performed at the piano, and Abe Levine gave a fine violin rendition, being called upon between the addresses. The music was especially appreciated, the artists being encored generously.

Following the program a luncheon was served by the Jewish Ladies' Aid Society. A dance of eighteen numbers closed the celebration.

The celebration was in charge of a local committee composed of Jacob Cosel, chairman; Simon Cohen, Joseph M. Ehrlich, Dr. B. M. Berger and Abe Levine.

BARNETT LODGE, FORREST CITY, ARK.

At the annual meeting of Barnett Lodge, No. 754, of Forrest City, Ark., officers for the ensuing term were elected. Delegates to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge were also chosen. The meeting a most enthusiastic one was attended by a number of members of adjoining towns and by the former president of the lodge, Captain H. K. Becker, of the U. S. Army, now stationed at Baltimore, Md. Captain Becker spoke in glowing terms of the good work done by the Order in aiding the government in all its war activities.

At the meeting of the lodge, held on Sunday, January 12, 1919, the officers were duly installed.

DISTRICT PRESIDENT PAYS OFFICIAL VISIT TO ATLANTIC CITY LODGE.

The visitors included the president of the district, Mr. Marcus Fuechtwanger of New Castle, Pa., Mr. David Bortin, first vice-president of the District Grand Lodge, Philadelphia; Mr. Jacob Singer of Philadelphia, member of the executive committee of the Order; Messrs. Joseph Salus and Abe Weil of Philadelphia, past presidents of the District Grand Lodge; Mr. Benj. Sugerman of Newark, and Mr. Joseph L. Kun, chairman of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Henry Halpern, president of the Lodge, welcomed the guests.

The feature of the meeting was a class initiation conducted by the president of the district, by whom the work was beautifully exemplified, and made an impression on the candidates to such an extent that they all promised to be attentive to their Lodge duties and will make every effort to have their friends join the Order. At the close of the initiatory ceremony the officers for the ensuing year were installed in a very impressive and forceful manner by Joseph W. Salus, past president of District No. 3, after which several inspiring addresses were delivered by the visitors, and the newly-elected president of Atlantic City Lodge, Dr. Jos. Roschovsky, and Mr. Isaac Baker of Erie, Pa., one of the directors of the B'nai B'rith orphanage at Erie.

Banquet in Honor of Visiting Guests.

Covers were laid for 150 members and their ladies and the visiting Grand Lodge officers at Grossman's Hotel. Before the guests were seated Mr. Harry Cassman, toastmaster of the evening, called on Rabbi Henry Fisher to offer a blessing. During the evening the following responded to toasts, as follows:

Mr. Marcus Fuechtwanger, "The District".

Mr. Jacob Singer, "The Order".

Mr. Joseph L. Kun, "The Commuter".

Mr. Joseph W. Salus, "Atlantic City".

Rabbi S. H. Goldenson, Pittsburgh, Pa., delivered the benediction, after which the guests retired to the ball room, when the young folks danced to their hearts' content until 1 o'clock. The affair was voted as one of the most enjoyable events of this season.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Horeb Lodge Has Fine War Record.

Assuring Horeb Lodge that its resources discovered during the world war when it gave 104 men to military service and gave its energies and all its civilians in solid support of the government war agencies and activities would now in times of peace be used to still greater advantage in aiding all movements for the good of humanity, Attorney Joseph Koletsky, in his inaugural address as president of Horeb Lodge, reviewed the brilliant and patriotic record of Horeb Lodge and further pledged its powerful support of all worthy endeavors.

"One out of every seven of membership went forth in uniform and if this great conflict had continued and if we are to judge its enormous destruction of human life from the seemingly never-ending daily casualty lists coming so long after the armistice, then there is no question but that within the next call, Horeb Lodge would have given one out of every two of its membership, for 350 out of 700 members would have gone forth," said Mr. Koletsky. "The abrupt conclusion of the war found many of us on the threshold of departure", he added.

"Horeb Lodge has found little difficulty in re-construction work and re-adjustment problems, for even before peace is signed, one of the most influential members, Col. Isaac M. Ullman, is already in the midst of the visiting nurse association drive as its chairman, and as was wont to be, he is again heartily supported among other captains and team members, by Horeb Lodge assistants. The war drives which have interested so many of us", continued Mr. Koletsky, "have fully demonstrated the fact that although a worker may have been demoted from a lieutenancy to a private and then suddenly elevated to the dizzy heights of a captain or admiral, only to be relegated to a private again, still the 'man' in the men was there, no matter what the insigna.

"War drives are no respectors of titles, but a great respector of givers and workers", he said.

FRATERNITY LODGE, NEW LONDON, CONN.

Fraternity Lodge No. 743, of New London, Conn., gave a delightful dinner dance on Thursday evening, January 2, 1919. It was the fifth annual event of the lodge and was a great social success.

About 135 members and their ladies attended. The tables were arranged around the dining room in cabaret style. At each cover was a miniature silk American flag, a Miss Liberty hat for the ladies and an Uncle Sam hat for the men. American flags were artistically draped around the hall.

Attorney Morris Lubchansky, president of Fraternity Lodge, was toastmaster and he filled the position with grace and ease, introducing the speakers in a felicitous manner. The speakers were Mayor E. Frank Morgan, Maurice P. Davison of New York, President of District No. 1.

Mayor Morgan congratulated Fraternity Lodge upon its activity and prosperity and he extended his thanks to the Jewish people for the support they had accorded him.

President Davison spoke along the lines of the organization and told of its objects and aims.

Mr. Bodenwein, editor of the local daily, said that he had the honor and privilege of attending the first banquet of Fraternity Lodge and that when he received an invitation to its fifth, he gladly accepted. He congratulated the lodge upon its growth and prosperity which has given evidence by its good work of having filled the ideals of its principles. He prophesied that the membership of the lodge would increase and multiply a hundredfold. The speaker declared that in the future, as in the past, the members of the Order, as loyal American citizens, would continue to be an asset and credit to their city and the nation.

Great American Fraternity.

Mr. Ullman gave a pleasing address in which he stated that he was present at the birth of Fraternity Lodge and it started off with such a bang that he was afraid it would have setbacks. The lodge had progressed to such an extent, however, that now he was willing to predict a great field of usefulness in the future. When it came to inculcating Americanism, The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith was purely American. In every lodge of the order all over the country, the American flag has a place of honor and every member admitted to the Order took an obligation to subscribe to American principles.

A feature of the occasion was the chorus singing to the accompaniment of Wight's Orchestra Following the banquet and address, the remainder of the evening was given over to dancing, which lasted until 1:30.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Following the installation of officers of Harmony Lodge, No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., on January 19, 1919, by Joseph H. Ullman, of New Haven, past president of the District Grand Lodge, Rev. Samuel J. Abrams dedicated the honor roll of the lodge. He also gave an interesting address on the part that the Jews have played in the great allied victory.

Others who made speeches were Mr. Ullman, President Abraham Schnee and Vice-President Joseph Soloman. Also Past President Joseph Shapiro in presenting a large silver loving cup to Past President Lawrence S. Finkelstone from the members of the lodge, in appreciation of the work he has done the past year. Finkelstone made a suitable response.

The Roll of Honor.

The honor roll of the lodge, consisting of 20 members who have enlisted for war service follows: Maurice Askins, Maurice Bufferd, Leo B. Dorsky, Harry DeVorken, William DeVorken, David Saltman, Ensign Louis Cantor, Lieutenant B. B. Finkelstone, Herbert Loewith, Henry J. Orlove, Arthur Levy, Lieutenant Max Rosenthal, Max Blumberg, David Sachs, Michael Shulansky, Lieutenant Louis Shapiro, Joseph Schwartzkofp, Maurice Rome, Samuel Rusakof and Dr. Maurice Moskowitz.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

Amos Lodge, No. 121, of Boston, Mass., entered the fifty-first year of its activities with a smoker and public installation on Monday evening, January 13, 1919. The officers were duly installed by Judge A. K. Cohen, assisted by J. S. Kuhns, representing the Grand Lodge of the District.

After the installation exercises, appropriate remarks were made by Judge Cohen and others, after which the lodge adjourned to a very enjoyable collation.

FLINT LODGE, FLINT, [illegible]

Public Installation of [illegible]

On Sunday, Jan. 26, 1919 [illegible] meeting of Flint Lodge [illegible]naw Lodge No. 636 and Bay City Lodge No. 178 the officers of the above three lodges were installed at the rooms of the Progress Club in the presence of nearly two hundred members and visitors.

The installation was conducted by Brothers Milton P. Firestone of St. Paul, J. Miller of Detroit, E. Lichtig of Bay City and L. Edw. Lashman of Chicago, acting for the District Grand Lodge.

A special car brought to Flint the members of Saginaw and Bay City Lodges, and while the lodges were in session the visiting ladies were entertained by the ladies of Flint.

Much credit for the success of the affair must be given to Brothers B. F. Weiner and Henry G. Diamant, whose untiring efforts not only made the event possible, but have enabled Flint Lodge to re-establish itself upon a sound financial basis and to make the Lodge the center of all Jewish activities in the city. As a result of the activities of these men Flint Lodge has made its home, the Progress Club, the Home of the Jewish Aid Society, the Zionist Organization, the Workman's Circle, the Hebrew Sunday School and other Jewish organizations.

LOUIS D. BRANDEIS LODGE, REGINA, CANADA.

A social meeting preceded by a class initiation was held under the auspices of Louis D. Brandeis Lodge No. 833, Regina, Canada, on Wednesday evening, December 25, 1918. Ten candidates were initiated by the Degree Team of the lodge. At the close of the initiation ceremonies, the business meeting was brought to an end and the meeting was open to the public and a large number of the members, ladies and friends gathered to participate in the splendid entertainment arranged. Bro. Harry Katz, chairman of -Intellectual Advancement, presided and much credit is due him for the splendid success of the affair. At the close of the program refreshments were served by the ladies of the lodge and a social hour was indulged in

EDAR LODGE, SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

By E. J. Wulfe.

Edar Lodge No. 211 celebrated the Diamond Jubilee of the Order and its B'nai B'rith Day by giving a flag service exercise and an entertainment and dance complimentary to the different members of Edar Lodge now serving in the United States Army and complimentary to the Jewish soldiers at the various camps at San Antonio, Texas. A splendid program was rendered. General Geo. Estes, of Camp Travis, San Antonio, Texas, was the speaker of the evening. The service flag was presented by Mrs. I. Lang, mother of Brother Major Sylvan Lang, and accepted by Brother L. N. Lee. The roll of honor and the banner were unfurled by Miss Meta Wolff. In addition thereto there was a musical program followed by a dance. The entertainment was in the hands of the Intellectual and Culture Committee, of which Brother S. C. Eldridge was chairman.

At the last meeting of Edar Lodge, held on February 10, 1919, several brothers were initiated into the Order, and under the election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge for the convention to be held in New Orleans, Louisiana, April 27, 1919, the following brothers were duly elected: S. C. Eldridge, L. N. Lee, Wm. B. Weininger and John Kemp. Brother S. C. Eldridge was duly nominated as Edar Lodge's candidate for the Constitution Grand Lodge Convention to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, some time during the year 1920.

One of the pleasant instances of the Lodge's meeting was the presentation of a beautiful traveling bag by Brother L. N. Lee for Edar Lodge to Brother S. C. Eldridge in recognition of Brother Eldridge's untiring work and efforts in behalf of the Order, and as an expression of the high esteem in which Brother Eldridge is held by the members of the Lodge and the community generally.

Edar Lodge is in good condition—a live active Lodge, holding its meetings regularly and increasing its membership from time to time.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION BY HOPE LODGE, STOCKTON, CALIF.

The Golden Jubilee of Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Calif., was fittingly observed on Thursday evening, Feb. 6, 1919. The affair was attended by an unusually large audience.

A great jubilee that surpassed anything that Stockton Lodge ever attempted was the program that the committee on arrangements prepared.

Richard E. Gutstadt, grand president of District No. 4, was chief speaker of the evening. He recited a history of the Lodge's work and emphasized the war activities of the different Lodges of the B'nai B'rith in that state. He related some of his experiences in other parts of the country.

There were also present many members from the B'nai B'rith organizations in Oakland, Sacramento, Fresno and Lodi and several of the officers came up from San Francisco with Mr. Gutstadt.

Grand Secretary Aschheim read the minutes of the first Stockton Lodge meeting, held fifty years ago. Past President Harry K. Wolf made an address, in which he praised the work of the B'nai B'rith and hoped for further accomplishments. First Grand Vice President Milton Meyer gave a short talk on the organization's activities.

A symposium of Hope Lodge's history was presided over by A. J. Shragge. Charter Member Joseph Morris related the early efforts of the B'nai B'rith in the 1870's. The intermediate period was described by A. J. Shragge, and as son of one of the first officers, M. Conway took up the present period.

The initiatory team of the Lodge was highly praised. A class of thirty members was initiated.

Last but not least was the banquet. A. J. Shragge acted as toastmaster and several speeches were made around the banquet table.

The committee on arrangements and entertainment, which was to a large extent responsible for the complete success of the occasion, consisted of Nate Cohn, Mike Conway and A. J. Shragge.

Among the numerous telegrams of congratulations received on the occasion of the Golden Jubilee from absent members the one from Past Grand President Martin P. Stein, a member of the Lodge, was read with much enthusiasm.

Hope Lodge is now about 150 members strong, and it is hoped to make it 200 strong in membership during the current year. There are about 1,000 Jews in Stockton and the slogan of the Lodge is no rest for the workers until at least 200 of them are members of Hope Lodge.

EMES LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

By D. S.

The writer feels quite certain that the readers of the B. B. News will be pleased to hear from the fourth oldest Lodge in District No. 6, which is Emes Lodge No. 67, located at the capital of the state, the great state of Illinois. It gives me great pleasure to say that we have much better attendance at our meetings now. The reason for that is the Sisterhood meetings are held the same evening.

I am also pleased to mention that we have added several new members to our roster recently, and we expect to make a good showing in the future. Our new President, Bro. Barney Cohen, formerly from Chicago, is surely very enthusiastic, and as a presiding officer is hard to beat.

At our last meeting on Feb. 5 we had with us Bro. Sidney Lyon, of Ramah Lodge, who assisted in the initiation of two candidates, and to say that his work was impressive is expressing it very mildly. It was a great lesson to all present and was very much enjoyed. Come again, Brother Lyons, we all need that kind of inspiration. Our Lodge will have a full representation at the Grand Lodge meeting at St. Paul.

SAMUEL LODGE, VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 1, 1919, Samuel Lodge No. 668 installed its officers for the ensuing year. An impressive ceremony marked the installation, which was followed by a banquet and a ball. The officers, members, the wives, sweethearts, sisters and friends witnessed the ceremony and enjoyed the New Year's celebration.

The affair was the most successful ever witnessed in Vancouver. Arthur Fleishman acted as installing officer and Messrs. David, Marks and Lesser as masters of ceremony. The newly elected President, J. B. Jaffe, made a fitting address of acceptance and prayed for strength to follow the work in the same able manner as his predecessors, more especially so his immediate one, Max M. Grossman, who was installed as monitor. The District Deputy, Arthur Fleishman, proceeded to thank the past officers for their grand work for the past year. "There is in a lodge a profit and loss each year when the reckoning comes, and in the past year there has been a great profit and on each page of the yearly ledger there showed a profit, and that profit in each case was Max Grossman. His name appeared prominent on all pages of the Lodge's books. There is no one in the Lodge nor in Vancouver," said Brother Fleishman, "who has done so much and showed such results as Brother Grossman, and as a token of esteem and appreciation the members and officers befittingly present to him a gold watch and a B. B. charm, studded with diamonds."

The impression these things made on the recipient was very apparent. He thanked everyone and said it was the happiest moment of his life, not because he had received these mementoes, but because he had the satisfaction of knowing that he was doing things. He also announced that he was soon to undertake a strenuous campaign to raise $20,000 for the purpose of building a synagogue of which Vancouver could well feel proud, and judging from his conviction, he was going to do it.

At the banquet table Mr. Rosenstein of Portland made an impressive address. Brother Rosenstein is president of the Neighborhood School and the Synagogue in Portland.

Israel Luxenberg was also presented with a golden charm.

The affair wound up with dancing and a jolly good time was had by the 350 folks who were present.

RAINIER LODGE, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

On Wednesday, Jan. 15, Rainier Lodge No. 627, held their installation of officers in the Educational Center.

After the installation of officers by District Deputy Hurwitz, President Samuel Schwabacher delivered an address on "Theodore Roosevelt, the true American."

Rabbi Samuel Koch delivered a splendid address, which, as usual, was most instructive, after which Mr. Sol Herzog spoke on welfare work.

In a few short remarks Mr. Harry Sigmond reminded his hearers that B'nai B'rith must hold its own and must continue to support all other Jewish organizations. Mr Meyer Cohen followed by giving a comprehensive outline of the work for the coming year, educational, and otherwise.

ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LODGE, PITTSBURGH

One of the most interesting and educational meetings in B'nai B'rith circles of that city took place on Feb. 2, 1919, at Mannsman's Hall. The large crowd that attended the public installation of the officers of the Lodge was more than repaid by the entertainment given. A. L. Solomon, past president of District Grand Lodge No. 3, installed the officers. Simon Davis, the newly elected president of Abraham Lippman Lodge, thanked the membership for again placing him at the head of such an active Lodge and assured his audience that Lippman Lodge will again become one of the leading factors in Jewish circles of this icty.

The surprise of the afternoon was the appearance of Charles H. Joseph, one of the prominent members of the Lodge, who inspired the audience with an eloquent address on the present duty of the B'nai B'rith in Jewish affairs.

The principal address of the afternoon was delivered by Oscar H. Rosenbaum, past president of District Grand Lodge No. 3, and one of the leaders in the Order. The speaker ably expounded the principles of the Sons of the Covenant and laid great stress upon the future constructive work to be done at once by every Ben B'rith by reason of the reconstruction period through which we are passing.

Joseph H. Ruben, of McKeesport, and Adolph Edlis, members of the General Committee, spoke of the splendid advancement being made under the guidance of Marcus Feuchtwanger, president of the District.

J. Lewis Palley, president of Saar Sholem Lodge, and also at the head of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, gave an excellent review of the various institutions that are supported by the B'nai B'rith and concluded with an earnest plea for every Jew to join the Order.

The last speaker was Mark Alexander, who had charge of the arrangements for this meeting. He thanked the president for the kindly interest in the welfare of this Lodge and urged his hearers not to be satisfied with past achievements, but for all Lodges of this city to co-operate, carrying out the important duties placed upon them by reason of the recent international conflict, which requires all fraternal organizations to perform great work along the lines of reconstruction and rehabilitation.

The Seiger sisters pleased the audience with vocal and instrumental music.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

A "Past-Presidents' Night" was held by Cleveland Lodge No. 16 on Thursday evening, Feb. 13, at the B'nai B'rith Building. The affair took the form of a smoker, and at its close refreshments were served.

The principal speaker of the evening was Col. J. W. McQuigg, who spoke on the subject "My Experience in France."

In compliance with the suggestion of Mr. S. G. Kusworm of Dayton, Ohio, First Vice-President of the District, the meeting was devoted to a general discussion by all of the members, led by the former Presidents, as to what new matters for the general welfare should be undertaken by the Lodge.

Such subjects as "The Jews' Interest in the Peace Conference," "Their Part in the War," "Their Welfare Needs in Cleveland" and "The Necessity for Extension of Lodge Activities" were considered.

On Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919, a concert and entertainment was given by the Lodge at the B'nai B'rith Building. Mr. J. Walter Logan was the conductor.

Cleveland Lodge is now publishing a monthly bulletin under the name of the "B'nai B'rith Chronicle." Its purpose is to inform the members of the Lodge of such matters in which the Lodge and its members are concerned. The first issue contains an article by the President of the Lodge, Bro. P. J. Haber, which is herewith reproduced.

BE PROUD OF THE LODGE.

By the President.

There is every reason to feel proud of the accomplishments of the B'nai B'rith Lodge in this city. Many members are unappreciative of the many things which are being accomplished through the community building only because they have not availed themselves of the opportunity to see the various activities.

Thirty-five clubs, boys', young men's, girls', young women's—these are the real agencies for social service in a large community. Pleasant, straightforward, wholesome associations combat effectively wayward tendencies.

A library, bowling alleys, debates, chaperoned dances, are a few of the activities the building affords. A hundred others could be named.

For years the Lodge in Cleveland found its activity largely centered in affording assistance to such institutions as the Jewish Orphan Asylum and the Consumptives' Home in Denver. In addition to these, it now undertakes and accomplishes community social service and enlarges in that way its sphere of usefulness as the representative Jewish institution of Cleveland and without thought of selfish gain seeks to extend its activities as far as the new resources of a growing membership will permit.

At the meeting of the officers of the B'nai B'rith building held recently, the act of the committee of the Lodge whereby the Jewish Welfare Board will take up its headquarters in Cleveland in the B'nai B'rith building, was approved.

The Lodge was represented by the president, Mr. Eugene E. Wolf and Mr. A. Lewenthal. The Welfare Board was represented by Rabbi Wolsey, Mr. J. L. Einstein and Mr. Albert L. Steuer.

Mr. Benjamin Karr, editor of the Leader-News, addressed the B'nai B'rith Forum on Sunday evening, Jan. 19, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith building on "The Delusive Punch in Socialism." A discussion followed.

Headquarters of the Cleveland Branch of the Jewish Welfare Board will be established at the B'nai B'rith building, if details of negotiations now under way are concluded along the lines of a plan agreed upon by Cleveland representatives of the board and B'nai B'rith officials.

It is proposed that the Jewish Welfare Board continue its activities in Cleveland throughout the period of demobilization. The importance of the work is pointed to by those who have been in touch with the various phases of J. W. B. activity. The plan of opening commodious headquarters in the B'nai B'rith building was discussed at a recent meeting in Cleveland and it is believed that negotiations will soon be concluded. Rabbi Louis Wolsey is chairman of the Cleveland Branch of the Jewish Welfare Board.

John J. Sullivan, a well-known attorney, spoke before the B'nai B'rith Forum on Sunday evening, Feb. 2, 1919. The meeting was open to the public and was presided over by Brother Eugene E. Wolf, president of Cleveland Lodge.

OAKLAND LODGE, OAKLAND, CAL.

Oakland Lodge No. 253, of Oakland, Cal., celebrated its annual banquet and installation of officers on Tuesday, January 7, 1919. Twenty brothers from Stockton were present, having come down in automobiles for the occasion. After the banquet a fine musical program of varied numbers was given, among them being a violin solo by Miss Florence Reed, and a number of modern and Jewish songs by Cantor Rappaport, which were greatly enjoyed by all present. The speaker of the evening was Linet Chaplin Lilbert, whose fine address was enjoyed by all. Grand President Gutstadt of San Francisco, installed the officers for the ensuing year. Delegates were also elected to the Grand Lodge.

The lodge presented the outgoing president, I. A. Buchman, with a fine parlor lamp as a token of esteem for his valuable services rendered the lodge in 1918.

Brother Grodin, the newly elected president, made a few remarks in which he expressed the hope of having a banner year for Oakland Lodge.

Under the able leadership of Brother Grodin, the lodge hopes to have a very successful year.

Brother Schneider and the committee were highly commended for their fine work in arranging the banquet. The members from Stockton expressed themselves as having enjoyed the banquet very much and expressed the desire of having the members of Oakland Lodge visit Stockton at an affair to be given in the near future.

The final number of the evening was the singing of the Star Spangled Banner.

JULIUS HOUSEMAN LODGE, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

After the adjournment of a business meeting of Julius Houseman Lodge at which two members were initiated and five applications for membership were presented, a social evening, which included the attendance of the members' ladies and friends, was held. Dancing was in order after the address by Brother S. C. Weil, who spoke on the subject, "What the Lodge Means to the Home and to the Women."

The meeting was unusually well attended and the social evening was a great success, due, in a large measure, to the activities of the vice-president of the lodge, Brother George Laven.

GALA NIGHT AT REHOBOTH LODGE NO. 38, INDEPENDENT ORDER B'NAI B'RITH.

Celebrating the event of the assumption of duties by Brother William Klapp of the presidency, the Lodge held one of its most interesting and noteworthy meetings at Eblings Casino, One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Street and St. Anns Avenue, on Monday evening, Jan. 13, 1919.

The fame and good reputation that Brother William Klapp has earned for himself as the Law Clerk of the Second District Municipal Court, Borough of the Bronx, had even reached the ears of the President of the District, who paid fitting tribute to the ability and integrity of Brother William Klapp as a man, scholar and lawyer.

The meeting was also the event of a visit by the District Grand Lodge Degree Team headed by Brother Clarence G. Brachrach, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the District Grand Lodge for work on a class of thirteen initiates. Brother President William Klapp was responsible for the proposition of a majority of the candidates initiated.

At the meeting it was voted that the sixtieth anniversary of the Lodge be celebrated in the month of March of this year by the holding of a banquet and ball in some hall in the Bronx at the expense of the Lodge, Brother William Klapp as President to be the toastmaster.

After the meeting the members adjourned to the grill room at Eblings, where a collation was served.

The meeting was largely attended and over sixty members stayed for the participation in the good fellowship that prevailed around the festive board to the wee hours of the morning.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The first meeting of the year of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., was held on Jan. 12, 1919. Installation of officers was one of the main features of the meeting. A class of candidates was initiated by the prize degree team of the lodge. At the close of the meeting a smoker was held. During the period of the war the lodge contributed almost $5,000 towards war funds and war activities. It gave generously of its members on the battlefield and it gave liberally of its civilian members to all activities supporting the war. All expenditures were made from the lodge treasury and from voluntary contributions without raising the dues of the members. In view, however, of the tremendous inroads upon the treasury of the lodge, the members patriotically and unanimously voted that the contribution to the United War Work Campaign should be raised by taxing each member $1.

The degree team of Horeb Lodge created a sensation on Dec. 29, 1918, when accompanied by Bro. Joseph H. Ullman, past president of the District Grand Lodge, it took Fraternity Lodge of New London, by storm by its brilliant exemplification of the ritual.

A meeting of Horeb Lodge, full of pep, was held on Sunday, Feb. 9, 1919. Reports of delegates from the convention were received and the prize degree team of the district exemplified the ritualistic work on a large number of candidates. Special feature of the evening was an address by Prof. M. S. Mandell of Yale University on the subject "The Crimes of the Bolsheviki".

Bro. Barney Goldstein, one of Horeb's 103 heroes, has been recommended for the Congressional medal for signal bravery.

EBN EZRA LODGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

An unusually well attended meeting of Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47 of St. Louis, Mo., was held on the evening of Thursday, February 13, 1919. Edwin Levis, one of the heroes of Chateau-Thierry, who was a member of a small band of U. S. Marines which so gallantly defeated a much superior German force in the battle of Belleau Woods, addressed the Lodge, telling of his thrilling experiences in that conflict.

Brother Samuel Bowman, one of the oldest members of the Lodge, one of its past presidents, and also past president of District Grand Lodge No. 2, delivered an address on "Our Order—Its Past, Present and Future."

Preceding the social program of the meeting a class of candidates was initiated and in the degree team, leading members of the Lodge took part. At the close of the meeting refreshments and cigars were served and a social hour was spent.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Consolidation of Lodges.

Much to the interest of members of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith, not only in San Francisco, but throughout the western jurisdiction, is the decision of Occidental Lodge No. 345 to consolidate with Ophir Lodge.

The general committee has given its sanction to the merger and the formal ceremonies of consolidation have been set for Monday evening, February 24, which will be soon after the conclusion of the coming Grand Lodge session.

The consolidation of the two Lodges will be significant in many respects, marking a decisive victory for those of the local B'nai B'rith Lodge members who have been advocating consolidation of the Lodges in this city.

The first step toward consolidation came about a year ago, when Columbia and Ophir Lodges merged, the name of the latter Lodge being preserved.

The coming consolidation of Occidental and Ophir Lodges will reduce the number of B'nai B'rith Lodges in this city from its original total of ten to eight.

The Friday evening inaugural service of District Grand Lodge No. 4, which convened in 56th annual session on Sunday morning, February 16, was held in the Bush Street Temple on the evening of February 14, 1919. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee of Chicago delivered an address and Cantor Carr chanted the Sabbath evening service with full choir.

An orchestra has been organized in the B'nai B'rith, Junior, under the direction of Harry Clarfield. All members musically inclined are cordially invited to join. Mr. Clarfield has a great deal of experience in this work and hopes to receive a hearty support of the club. The enterprise is well worthy of consideration.

The officers of Ophir Lodge No. 21, the "Mother Lodge of District No. 4," were installed at the January meeting of the lodge by President Richard Gutstadt of the District Grand Lodge. The affairs of this Lodge are in a most satisfactory and flourishing condition.

Anticipating the elevation of their valued and esteemed brother, Milton Meyer, to the grand presidency, Ophir, No. 21, will enthusiastically endeavor to make its record for the coming year a source of pride to him and a credit to his administration.

At the January meeting of Modin Lodge, No. 42, the officers for the ensuing term were duly installed by the secretary of the District Grand Lodge, Brother I. J. Aschheim. After the installation, the Lodge adjourned to a downtown restaurant, where a banquet was tendered to the newly elected officers. Past-President M. A. Rapkin acted as toastmaster and short talks were delivered by Brothers I. J. Aschheim, Ben Schloss, Arthur W. Jonas and others. During the course of the evening, Mr. Ben Schloss, past-president of District Grand Lodge No. 4, in behalf of the Lodge, presented Past-President M. A. Rapkin with a set of Jewish encyclopedias in recognition of services rendered by him during the term of office as president. Secretary Sam Flyshaker was also presented with a token for services rendered as secretary for the past thirty-six years.

About one hundred members and their ladies attended the banquet and all present voted the affair a great success.

AKRON LODGE, AKRON, OHIO.

Akron Lodge No. 719 met at Temple Israel Wednesday evening, Feb. 5. Reports of the Membership Committee indicated a recent increase of membership totaling 75. The initiation of these and other new members is to be made a notable occasion in the near future. There is to be a supper, an out-of-town speaker, installation of officers and initiation of new members on one gala evening. Dr. Morris Tuholske, Mr. Maurice Krohngold and Rabbi Abraham Cronbach were appointed the committee in charge of the affair, it being left to the committee to choose between the two dates, Wednesday evening, Feb. 19, or Sunday evening, Feb. 23. A large attendance and a strong revival of interest is anticipated.

The meeting also considered a suggestion of an annual memorial service for departed members, and the suggestion of a "Past Presidents' Evening," on which every one of the previous Presidents of the Lodge is to take the floor and offer suggestions arising from his experience in the work.

Other business transacted related to the election of delegates to the Grand Lodge and to questions of attention to members in sickness or trouble.

JOHN HAY LODGE NO. 634, FARGO, N. D.

On Sunday, Jan. 12, 1919, John Hay Lodge, No. 634, of Fargo, N. D., had a public installation of officers. President Hiram D. Frankel, of District Grand Lodge No. 6, assisted by Brother Dave Naftalin, duly installed the officers.

Brother Harry Lashkowitz in accepting the office of president briefly dwelt upon the ideals of the B'nai B'rith. Amongst many things he stated, "No sweeter sentiments and no higher ideals have ever been conceived by humanity than that of benevolence, brotherly love and harmony. With the execution of such ideals, the truest kind of democracy can prevail. Harmony with your fellow men means peace. It means the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Brother Lashkowitz then introduced Brother Hiram D. Frankel, who delivered the address of the evening, choosing for his subject, "Shall the B'nai B'rith endorse Zionism?" Brother Frankel, in his introductory remarks, read the poem, "O, God, Teach Me Thy Ways." The speaker traced the historical developments of the Zionist's ideal. He pointed out the everlasting longing and yearning of oppressed Jewry to the land of the prophets and patriarchs. He said: 'Israel's mission is to establish an aristocracy of mind, of mental influence, of noble and elevated ideals throughout the civilized world." "Zionism," he said, "was only one of the ideals of the Jew, and consequently there cannot be a complete concentration and an unlimited and unqualified endorsement of it by the B'nai B'rith." "Speaking of the Versailles conference," he said, "The Jew is not asking any favors or privileges. What he wants is what every human being is entitled to and that is the recognition of his civil rights everywhere, not as a Jew, but as a human being. The Jew has responded wonderfully to the call of Democracy, it being his mission to propagate and advocate the ideals of Democracy."

Brother Frankel's address was received with a tremendous amount of enthusiasm and ardor, there being over one hundred and fifty people present, the largest turn-out of Fargo Jewry. A dance followed the address.

PRESIDENT SHEMANSKI LAUNCHES PROPAGANDA.

Portland Lodge, I. O. B. B., is to be the banner Lodge in the district and the largest Jewish organization west of Chicago, according to the plans and the propaganda launched by President Shemanski at the first meeting of the consolidated Lodges held on Jan. 22, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building. The proposed plans when carried out will give Portland a centralized point of Jewish activity which will fill a long-felt want.

A get-together luncheon was held on the same day at the Chamber of Commerce dining rooms, where these luncheons will be held every Tuesday for the purpose of exchanging views in furthering the interests of the Lodge.

This live membership committee under the chairmanship of Milton Markewitz, with Ben Rubin and Sig Lipman as assistants, will mean a successful campaign. This committee will be in turn assisted by twelve captains, with eight men under each captain. With this drive for membership every Jew in Portland will be brought into the ranks of the B'nai B'rith, which will mean an additional membership of 1,000.

All the committees appointed by President Shemanski are men of standing and ability, which will insure success and an organization that Portland, Jew or Gentile, will be proud of.

B'NAI B'RITH OF BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Bro. Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, Conn., newly elected president of District Grand Lodge No. 1, accompanied by Bro. Myron Sulzberger of New York, second vice-president of the Grand Lodge, paid their first official visit to Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., on Tuesday evening, Feb. 11, 1919. The committee of the lodge prepared a suitable entertainment to celebrate the success of the convention and also the membership campaign. The visiting Grand Lodge officers addressed the lodge on the accomplishment of the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge and outlined the scope of activities for the lodges of the district during the present year.

The sixth annual ball given under the auspices of Harmony Lodge as a fitting finale to the convention, was attended by more than 1,500 members and their ladies at the Stratfield Hotel on Monday evening, Feb. 3, 1919. The affair was the most brilliant social affair ever arranged in that city. A number of uniforms worn by returned soldiers and sailors were reminders of the war.

FRESNO, CALIF.

At a public installation of the Daughters of the Covenant and the [illegible] Auxiliary of Fresno, Mrs. L. M. Mendelsohn was duly installed as president.

The feature of the evening was the presentation of the past-president jewel by President M. A. Penny of Fresno Lodge to Mrs. Mendelsohn. The presentation was accompanied with a stirring talk on the wonderful work accomplished for the cause of Judaism by Mrs. Mendelsohn and the debt of gratitude owing her by the parents of the children who had been taught by her a knowledge and love of things Jewish. About 100 sisters and brothers attended the installation, which was followed by entertainment, dancing and good things to eat. A recitation by Miss Birdie Mittenthal, songs by Miss Rippel Mittenthal and Mrs. B. Phelps, piano recital by Mrs. Harry Coffee and a piano duet by Miss L. M. Mendelsohn and Mrs. Harry Coffee added enthusiasm to an altogether enjoyable evevning. The affair was a great success, the enthusiasm beyond expression and the hitherto apathetic Jewish community of Fresno lost itself so completely in an absolutely friendly atmosphere that urgent requests were made everywhere for more such socials that the Jewish folk of Fresno may benefit by them.

LITTLE ROCK LODGE, LITTLE ROCK. ARKANSAS.

Under the auspices of the Intellectual Culture Committee of Little Rock Lodge No. 158 of Little Rock, Ark., B'nai B'rith day was fittingly observed at a well-attended gathering on Sunday evening, Feb. 2, 1919.

A splendid program was arranged by Mr. Leo Pfeifer, chairman of The Intellectual Culture Committee. The Lodge was fortunate in having three interesting speakers. The first, Lieut. R. H. Wright, morale officer at Camp Pike, spoke on "Morale" and handled his subject ably and concisely. Lieut. Lawrence Marcus spoke on "The Measure of Intelligence" and gave a clever insight into army life, from its beginning. The last speaker was Lieut. Herbert Goldman, one of the welfare workers stationed in that city. He told of the good that had been accomplished by the J. W. B. and the co-operation so graciously extended at all times by the Little Rock people and urged to continue the worthy work. Lieut. Goldman opened the program with a violin solo which was so well rendered, he was compelled to respond to an encore. Miss Spiegell showed fine talent in her two recitations, and Miss Franklyn Brooks, one of our most clever entertainers, sang two songs. At the close of the program refreshments were served by Mrs. E. Navra, assisted by her co-workers. Dancing followed until midnight.

GILEAD LODGE NO. 41, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

By A. P. Greenthal

During the year 1918, a service flag was dedicated and at the close of the war there were twenty-four of our members in the active service of the United States, either in the naval or military branch thereof.

On the 14th day of March, we moved into larger quarters, due to the great interest taken by the members of the Order since the consolidation of the two Milwaukee lodges.

A degree team was organized which has done splendid work and has done much to carry out the ceremonial service of initiation.

During the year Judge John C. Karel, judge of the Juvenile Court, spoke to us on "Juvenile Delinquency." Mrs. Meta Baum, our social service worker, addressed the lodge on "Big and Little Brothers and Sisters." Brother I. Rubenstein, superintendent of the Federated Charities, spoke to us on two occasions on some phase of charitable work. The lodge was addressed by its members on the Liberty Loans, United War Workers Fund and the Red Cross. The lodge donated to the Red Cross and the War Workers Fund and also subscribed liberally for Liberty Bonds.

Due to the holidays and the epidemic, the lodge has been unable to hold its regular meetings and as a result, there are many applications for membership not voted on. It will mean an increase in membership in the coming year.

MISSOURI LODGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Installation of officers for 1919 took place at the meeting of the Lodge, held on Thursday evening, January 23. Mr. A. Rosenthal delivered an address on "Anti-Jewish Prejudice, Its Causes and Cures," and Mr. Oscar Leonard on "Why Zionism Should be Represented at the Peace Conference." A large crowd was present to greet the new officers. A light luncheon concluded a most interesting evening.

McKEESPORT LODGE, McKEESPORT, PA.

McKeesport Lodge, No. 573, I. O. B. B., held a most interesting meeting on January 19, 1919. In the point of attendance and general interest the meeting was one of the most successful in the history of the local Lodge. The attendance was swelled by a large delegation from Braddock Lodge, headed by Louis Sulzbacker. In addition Duquesne had a representation consisting of fifteen B'nai B'rith boosters.

An important feature of the meeting was the initiation of several new candidates. The work of the degree team in this instance was truly a most impressive exposition of the B'nai B'rith ritual. The volume of the class and the size of their audience inspired the degree team to an expression of their most earnest efforts. In addition to the formal initiation a large number of former Duquense Lodge members were received into the fold of the local Lodge.

An interesting part of the program of the meeting was occupied by Mr. Henry Friedman. Mr. Friedman had been elected to represent the entire McKeesport district at the Congress of Jews, held recently in Philadelphia. It was in his capacity as congressman from this district that Mr. Friedman presented a lengthy report to the lodge on the work of the congress.

MISSOURI LODGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

On Thursday evening, Jan. 23, 1919, Missouri Lodge, No. 22, I. O. B. B., held its installation of officers. A very large number of its members were in attendance. The officers were installed in a very impressive manner by Bro. Harry Simon, past-president of D. G. L. No. 2. The new president, Henry E. Oppenheimer, and the retiring president, Herman Cronheim, responded with splendid talks when called upon. Bro. Abe Rosenthal, editor of the Modern View, delivered a talk upon anti-Jewish prejudices, its causes and its cures. Bro. Oscar Leonard delivered a talk on the question as to whether the Zionists should be represented at the Peace Conference, which was followed by a general discussion.

After the meeting the members enjoyed refreshments and cigars, and left with the satisfaction of having spent a very pleasant and instructive evening.

CINCINNATI LODGE, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

[illegible] f the series of open meetings [illegible]ments was given by Cincinnati Lodge, No. 4, of Cincinnati, Ohio, on Monday evening, February 10, 1919.

Honorable James A. Wilson, chairman of the Labor Missions of France, England and Italy, addressed the Lodge on his experiences abroad. Mr. Wilson had many interesting experiences to relate.

Cincinnati Lodge has adopted the policy of inviting prominent members to address the Lodge and the result of the first open meeting was most satisfactory.

GILEAD LODGE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

At the last meeting in January, Brother I. Kadis, a member of Toledo Lodge No. 183 addressed the Lodge on Jewish Social Work—Our Job. He particularly laid stress on Juvenile Court work and the Big Brother movement. He has taken up his duties as superintendent of the charities in Milwaukee and will render services for the Council in this Big Brother work.

At the first meeting in February, seven candidates were initiated. Considering the inclemency of the weather, there was a very large attendance, the largest attendance of the year and the degree team did splendid work.

DISTRICT No. 1.

Akiba Lodge No. 173 of New York City held a short business meeting on Tuesday evening, Feb. 11, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith headquarters. A class of candidates was initiated and after the close of routine business the lodge adjourned and a large number of friends and their ladies who were waiting in the parlors of the B'nai B'rith Club, then took possession of the hall and carried out a most successful social evening, consisting of music, songs and dancing, which lasted until the early hours of the morning. The Lodge was honored by the presence of Bro. Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee of the Order. Bro. A. B. Seelenfreund, secretary of the Order, who happened to be in New York on B'nai B'rith matters, was also present.

Mount Sinai No. 2, as well as the entire district, is very much elated over the appointment of Brother Samuel Fleischman of Mount Sinai Lodge as chief justice of Court of Appeals of the I. O. B. B. Brother Fleischman is a prominent attorney in New York and has been active in B'nai B'rith circles for many years. He succeeded Bro. Simon Roeder as counsel to the district. Brother Fleischman represents the classic type of the Jew. He is a man of high character and dignity, a public spirited citizen and is much devoted to the welfare of Israel generally. He has been sur-named "The Sage of the District".

New York Isaiah No. 1 entertained members of the Home for the Aged last Sunday and contributed much to the happiness and comfort of the old folks at the Home, who are glad to be remembered by the brothers of the various lodges.

Manhattan-Washington No. 19 continues to have large and interesting meetings. Manhattan-Washington Lodge is numerically the biggest lodge in the state of New York, Horeb No. 25 being the biggest in the district.

Brother William Clapp of Rehoboth No. 38 with the assistance of Bros. Julius Lewin and Simon Platt is making a special effort to attract young men to the lodge. They expect to have about fifty young men join the lodge within the next four months. Rehoboth Lodge is making preparations to celebrate its sixtieth anniversary.

Henry Jones-Lebanon No. 79 will celebrate its golden anniversary by a special banquet, Saturday, March 22, at Carlton Hall. The lodge expects a number of distinguished brothers of the Order to be guests of honor.

The ladies of the Edward Everett Lodge and daughters of B'nai B'rith are having a series of dances at the B'nai B'rith headquarters for the special entertainment of the soldiers and sailors who have returned home.

Chananiah No. 165 had a very interesting installation. Past President Brother Joshua Kantrowitz acted as installing officer.

Patchogue No. 759 mourns the loss of Bro. Leo Beck, who though but a very young man was very active in the community.

Bro. Dr. Elias Caplan, who served in the Medical Corp as captain, returned home to Portland, Me., and was heartily welcomed by Israel Lodge and the Jewish community generally. Dr. Caplan is well known all through the State of Maine as an orator and a communal leader.

Dr. Harry Goldman, assisted by an able degree team, initiated a number of candidates in Maimonedes Lodge in Liberty, N. Y.

Brockton No. 821 is arranging a series of public lectures by distinguished men under the auspices of the lodge. President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University has accepted an invitation to be one of the speakers.

Bro. Jehial M. Roeder acted as installing officer of Jehudah Halevi Lodge in New Britain, Conn., also in several of the local lodges. Bro. Simon Platt installed the officers of the President's Lodge, Brooklyn Lodge No. 753.

Henry Jones-Lebanon Lodge No. 79 of New York City will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its institution and Peace Jubilee on Saturday evening, March 22. 1919, at the Carlton Hotel, New York City.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Kansas City Lodge No. 184 of Kansas City, Mo., celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Order on Sunday, Jan. 26. 1919, with a banquet at the Coates House. Preceding the banquet a class initiation of fifty candidates was held by the Degree Team of the Lodge. The principal address was delivered by Bro. Samuel Rosenfield of St. Louis.

At a regular meeting of Steubenville Lodge No. 787 of Steubenville, Ohio, held on Jan. 10, 1919, the officers of the Lodge were installed by Bro. Sidney G. Kusworm of Dayton, Ohio, First Vice-President of the District. He also deilvered a most inspiring address.

At the regular meeting of Sholem Lodge No. 78, of Leavenworth, Kansas, held on Sunday evening, January 19, 1919, the officers of the Lodge were installed. After the installation a social time was enjoyed in the vestry rooms of the Temple, where a program and refreshments contributed toward the entertainment of all who attended.

Brother Sol. E. Kiser, of Indianapolis, Ind., was elected vice president of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, Ohio, at the quarterly meeting of the board of trustees held in the month of January, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Jacob Furth. Mr. Emil Mayer, of St. Louis, was elected to fill the vacancy on the board of trustees which reslted from Mr. Furth's death.

One of the most successful affairs ever held in Kansas City was the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Order by Kansas City Lodge No. 184 on Sunday evening, Jan. 26, 1919. Nearly 400 persons attended the dinner and listened to an address by Judge Samuel Rosenfield of St. Louis, after which a general reception followed and was concluded with a dance. A large class of candidates was initiated before the dinner.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

District Grand Lodge No. 4 will meet in fifty-sixth annual session in the city of San Francisco, at the Covenant Hall, 149 Eddy St., on Sunday, Feb. 16, 1919.

Occidental Lodge No. 345 and Ophir Lodge No. 21, both of San Francisco, consolidated on Feb. 10, 1919, under the authorization of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, under the name and title of Ophir Lodge No. 21.

The consolidated Portland Lodge No. 65 of Portland, Ore., is actively engaged in a membership campaign to make the Lodge not only the largest in the Northwest, but also the largest in the District. Under the able guidance of the Chairman of the Membership Committee, Mr. Milton Markowitz, the Jewish community has been thoroughly canvassed, and it is hoped that all available men will be secured as members of the Lodge.

Abraham Geiger Lodge, No. 423, and Ida Bluhn Strauss Auxiliary held a well attended joint meeting on January 16. The special feature was the joint installation of the officers of the two organizations, conducted by District Deputy Samuel Edelstein. Short talks were made by the officers elect and by Mr. Harry L. Cohn. After the installation, cards were played and refreshments were served.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Winnipeg Lodge of Winnipeg, Canada, will celebrate B'nai B'rith day on the first Sunday of March. Brother Gus. Loevinger of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, has been delegated to represent the District Grand Lodge on that occasion and to deliver an address.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Isidor Straus Lodge, No. 519, of Fort Worth, Texas, will give its annual ball on Thursday evening, February 20, 1919, at the Hebrew Institute.

Dallas Lodge, No. 197, of Dallas, Texas, held an open intellectual culture meeting on January 22, 1919, at the Temple annex. Rabbi Jacob Bosniak, who attended the American Jewish Congress in Philadelphia, gave a detailed account of the deliberations, actions and personnel of the congress. He also spoke on its "Relations to the World Peace Conference." A free discussion by a number of those present followed the address.

There was also given a rich musical program of various talents. At the close of the meeting, refreshments were served.

JEWS CLAIM NATIONAL RIGHTS.

The Jews of Bukowina organized many important demonstrations and meetings in favor of national rights for themselves. The movement is growing and the Jews are all the more anxious to make their voices heard since they learned that the claims for Jews for national rights in western Galicia are being suppressed and that Jewish meetings in connection with the movement are prohibited and rendered impossible as a result of the pogroms.

A Jewish National Council has been formed at Posen to guard the national and individual rights of Jews in the province of Posen. The Council has issued an appeal to the Jews to refer to it all questions relating to them, and has promised to defend their interests. The Council also announced that it decided to co-operate in the formation of a local citizens' militia.

The Polish delegation in Paris is working hard to prevent the formation of an international tribunal to settle the Jewish question. They are anxious to have the matter left in their own hands, so that they may decide the limits to which they might go in granting rights to the Jews.

LEMBERG COMMUNITY DECLINES POLISH GIFT.

The Warsaw Polish Relief Fund sent a gift of 500,000 crowns for the relief of the Lemberg Jewish pogrom sufferers, but the Jewish Communal Council returned the money. In a statement explaining its action, the Council emphasized the fact that a donation of that kind could not whitewash the authors of the great massacre, and that the money could not compensate the community for the huge losses suffered by it.

COMMUNICATED

New York, February 16, 1919.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

No sooner had I gotten my copy of the B'nai B'rith News when my troubles began. I could not decide what to read first, whether it should be your admirable editorials or Dr. Gotthard Deutsch's instructive and entertaining papers on "The Diaspora" and "Sketches of Modern Jewish History." Whether I should give preference to Dr. Max L. Margolis' grand contributions to Jewish literature, or to Dr. Epstein's interesting letters from London. And I was also anxious to know at once "What Our Lodges Are Doing" and learn of other important events in the Jewish world for which I might have looked in vain in other Jewish papers. I tried to read all these different items at one and the same time, but it would not work, it could not be done. So I hit upon a plan that I consider the only practicable one and which I would recommend to all the brethren to adopt. I commence reading the first line of the first page and do not file away my copy until I have read the last line of the last page. There is no paper, book or magazine that comes to my house that gives me as much genuine pleasure and as much needful information as the B'nai B'rith News, and I always look forward to its coming with great anticipated pleasure.

With sincerest good wishes for continued unbounded success in your great work, I am,

Fraternally yours,
HENRY SCHOENTHAL.

ANTI-SEMITISM IN A GERMAN UNIVERSITY.

At a meeting of representatives of the Medical Faculty of the University of Marburg it was resolved, by a large majority, to exclude Jews from the hospitals which are being established there. Speeches were delivered on the danger of the Jews becoming the ruling race in Germany and the masters of the Red Government. The incident is all the more regrettable in view of the past connection of the late Professor Hermann Cohen with the University.

THE CZECH PREMIER AND THE POGROMS.

The Czecho-Slovak Premier, M. Kramarcz, received a deputation of the Jewish National Council, which drew his attention to the anti-Semitic riot at Holleschau and to the danger of allowing the pogrom movement to spread. The premier strongly condemned the pogroms. He also assured the deputation that measures had already been taken against the agitation, and that the government had decided to use all the means at its disposal to prevent pogroms.

FURIOUS ATTACK AGAINST JEWS.

The Prussian pan-German General von Gebsattel recently printed an article in the pan-German "Deutsche Zeitung," in which a furious attack is made against the Jews, whom, he declares to be guilty for the fall of the German Fatherland. "It is the fault of the Jews that Germany has fallen. German Jewry are guilty of Germany's betrayal. We will not forget what German Jewry has done to us, and the crime it has committed in these sad days." It is feared that pogroms will soon take place against the Jews in Germany. Already the cry is heard in the streets that the Jews must be exterminated and at a pan-German public meeting held recently Erzberger and Scheidemann were termed the "Jew government which has betrayed Germany." In this connection a remark made by Prof. Geiger in his "Allgemeine Zeitung des Judentums" is interesting. In the issue of October 25th he writes: "The Jews of all lands are receiving liberation; only we German Jews are suffering."

AN ANTI-JEWISH MEETING AT VIENNA.

The newly formed Austrian People's Party, which consists of disguised supporters of the old regime, convened a meeting at Vienna to protest against the formation of a "Jewish Republic" in Austria, and to point out to the public the danger of allowing the Jews to rule. In connection with the meeting leaflets were distributed inviting the people to organize anti-Jewish pogroms. A Socialist leader appeared at the meeting and described how the old regime, and not the Jews, had brought misery upon the country. He strongly condemned the anti-Semitic propaganda of the organizers of the meeting. In view of the refusal of the reactionaries to abandon their tactics, soldiers from among the audience stormed the platform and dispersed the agitators.

B'NAI B'RITH OF AUSTRIA TAKE CARE OF 12,000 WAR ORPHANS AND OF THOUSANDS OTHERS WHOSE PARENTS WERE VICTIMS OF POLISH POGROMS

Esteemed President:

After four years we wish to communicate with you the events that have occurred in the meantime. The sums which you were kind enough to send us in the year 1914 have reached us in due season and have been employed to feed the hungry, to wipe tears, and to clothe the naked. Even the sums which you send for the benefit of brethren have been used to assist outsiders whose distress was appalling.

The terrible war has come to an end, and our brethren in Austria begin only now to realize what want means, what misfortune really is—how the uncertainty of the political situation affects everyone of us. Only now we realize the consequences of unemployment—the suspension of every industry, etc. Yet we do not wish to speak of this fact because we hope that after three, or at the utmost six months of a grave crisis, a stable political situation will be established and with this our private affairs will be regulated. We wish to inform you now of the past which we are able to view and describe objectively.

The most terrible enemy swooped upon us in 1914 from the East, infesting the country like a swarm of locusts. Tramping everything under their feet, the Russians were soon at the foothills of the Carpathian Mountains in the vicinity of Cracow. We, in Vienna, were looking with grave apprehension at the wall of human bodies which checked the enemy but which might break at any moment, allowing the Russians to sweep over Hungary and Moravia to our gates. This would have been a terrible misfortune, as we are able to calculate on the ground of the calamity which befell Galicia and Bukowina.

The Jewish population of Galicia stood by Austria while the Poles, the Ukrainians, just as the Czechs in Bohemia and Moravia, were hostile to it.

All these nations aided the Russians and joined hands with them in attacking the Jews. Their houses were burned, their property was carried away or sold for a trifle—the fiends would amuse themselves by compelling the oldest people to dance—beating them afterwards in order to give the mob some fun. If one dared to refuse orders or if there was the slightest suspicion that he was a spy and sympathized with Austria, he was executed. Mothers were raped in the presence of their children, girls in the presence of their parents, to be butchered afterwards. Children of tender age had to witness these terrible scenes and the fright they had experienced was engraven on their faces for years afterwards.

The moment the news of the invasion arrived the Jews who had learned of the conduct of the hostile army started on a flight. Happy to find a place on the roof of a railroad car, even on a buffer or in a cattle car, they could carry nothing along except the clothes on their body. In this way tens of thousands fled to the West, mostly to Vienna, where the lodges started on their relief work, organizing a system for the assistance of those who should follow. The same was done in all other cities which have a lodge of the I. O. B. B. Wherever the Jewish refugees came, they were unwelcome. The disgraceful barracks, a sad chapter of this story of exile, killed thousands of them. Thousands were butchered in Galicia and Bukowina—thousands of others became victims of plagues, spotted fever, typhus and cholera. Thousands succumbed to exhaustion on their flight. It cannot be denied that in many places they were well cared for—even schools were established in which the children received instruction similar to that given to them in their old homes. In general, however, they suffered terribly and their habits, which contrasted strongly with the Occidental civilization in their new homes and vividly presented their backwardness, created ill-feeling and aroused anti-semitism among their new neighbors. While the large majority, compelled to leave everything behind, lost everything that they possessed, there are a few who successfully engaged in business in their places of exile, made a great deal of money, and in this way aroused the jealousy and the hatred of the non-Jewish population which extended to the whole Jewish community.

The state paid for the refugees, two crowns (40c) per capita per diem. The Jewish population of Western Austria came to their assistance, collecting the sums necessary to make life half-way possible for these refugees. Meantime, in their eastern homes, their houses, even entire towns, were literally leveled to the ground. Not a stone is left to remind the visitor that there was once a city on this place. In other towns only ruins were left. While thousands still are barely eking out an existence in the West, persecuted by the inhabitants of the newly created National states, the majority returned to their homes, where they are existing in a manner not worthy of human beings—seeking shelter in caves, in abandoned trenches, in ruins, living more like wild beasts than like human beings. While trying to accommodate themselves to such an existence, a great many of them had again to flee to the West in order to escape from the lot of their co-religionists who were butchered, tortured or burned alive by Polish mobs under the leadership of Polish officers. The high-toned Polish society enjoyed these sights, and instead of preventing the cruelties its members came along with grips and trunks to carry away from Jewish stores jewelry and anything which they considered desirable. One thousand dead were counted in Lemberg alone. How many families were ruined and how many who just began to get on their feet were thrown into misery again is impossible to tell. The 12,000 Jewish war orphans received thousands of new additions from the camps of refugees, and now again thousands of others orphaned by pogroms. Our society set itself the task to care for the war orphans in Galicia, who count about 12,000, and obtained from the government a grant of crowns, $1.50, increased afterward to two crowns, per capita per diem, while the society established by the District Grand Lodge for saving Jewish children raised the balance and furnished the orphan homes. The means necessary for this purpose were obtained through collections among the Jews of Western Austria and resulted in a fund of two millions, which no one, knowing the local conditions, would have considered possible. Now twelve hundred children are placed in orphan homes and six thousand with families. The Austrian government has ceased to exist, and it is very uncertain whether the Polish and the Ukranian governments will pay the stipulated amounts. The children, however, must under no condition be sent back to their caves or cast out into the streets. For this purpose we need a great amount of money, for the means of the society will have been spent in no distant future. We cannot imagine that any government. succeeding that of Austria-Hungary, will refuse to pay the former subsidy—whether it be a Polish or a Ukranian or a combination of both, but until that time the orphans have to live and our means are not sufficient to sustain them. Anyone who saw the children when we took charge of them, when they had barely a shirt to cover their body, were infested with vermin, sore-footed, anaemic, with a forlorn look in which one could read the horrible recollection of all the misery which these five year old tots had to see and who looks at them now, seeing their healthy color, smiling and doing their lessons, will do anything to prevent that lack of means should cast these infants into the street and to misery. We therefore implore you to collect money in every possible way and to send it through the District Grand Lodge, I. O. B. B., to the Society for the Salvation of Abandoned Jewish Children of Galicia and Bukowina, or to send it directly to this society founded by the D. G. L., I. O. B. B., whose president is Dr. Edmund Kohn, vice-president D. G. L., and whose vice-president is Professor Ehrmann, grand president D. G. L. Do all you can as quickly as you can in order to save the Jewish generation of the future and to bring relief to the terrible misery of Galicia. Raise funds. Help.

(Signed) PROF. D. EHRMANN,
DR. EDMUND KOHN.

Activities to Meet New Conditions Confronting the Returning Soldiers and Sailors

In co-operation with the War and Navy Departments' Commission on Training Camp Activities, the Jewish Welfare Board has for many months been ministering to men in the service, both here and abroad. In accordance with its customary policy, it is now planning to extend its program of activities to meet the new conditions confronting the returning soldiers and sailors.

On Feb. 25, 26 and 27, National Representatives of the Jewish Welfare Board, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and Council of Y. M. H. and K. A., met in New York City to consider the problems involved in these new conditions. It was agreed at this conference that in the post-war work, harmony and unity of effort were quite as essential for effective results as in the conduct of welfare work during the war.

The two problems considered, as of paramount importance, were those of employment and education of returning Jewish men. The general principle was recognized that both these problems constituted a Jewish community obligation to be discharged by Jewish communities through such institutions, lodges and other agencies as may be ready and able, by reason of their physical resources and personnel, successfully to engage in such effort. As a result of the meetings, the following plan of agreement was adopted:

1. That the J. W. B., I. O. B. B. and Y. M. H. and K. A. proceed with all possible dispatch with the organization of special employment and educational work in the Jewish communities throughout the United States.

2. That for this purpose, special committees on employment and education be created by the J. W. B. conjointly with the I. O. B. B. and Y. M. H. and K. A. in all cities in which the three organizations have local bodies. Such committees to be formed by the local bodies conjointly together with such other local Jewish agencies as desire to participate, and the work to be conducted in accordance with the national policies of the Jewish Welfare Board and financed on the basis of budget rendered monthly in advance for the review of the National Office of the Jewish Welfare Board.

3. That in such cities in which but two of the three organizations above mentioned are represented by local bodies, the two organizations thus represented together with such other local Jewish agencies as may desire and are able to participate, create a special committee on employment and education, such committees likewise to function under the policies of the National office of the J. W. B. on a monthly budgetory basis, as in Section No. 2.

4. That in such cities in which but one of the three organizations above mentioned is represented by a local body or chapter, no independent committee shall be formed, but in its stead, the work of employment and education shall be delegated solely to that agency, which shall thereupon be recognized as the official agency of the Jewish Welfare Board for this purpose. In all such cases, the work shall be conducted under the auspices of the parent body of such agency. Such agency shall likewise prepare monthly estimates of expenses in advance, and such budgets shall be rendered to the parent organization of which the local agency is a member. The money necessary to carry on the work of such agency shall be appropriated by the Jewish Welfare Board, only after the initial review and approval of the budget by the parent organization and final review by the National Office of the J. W. B. The money thus appropriated shall be transmitted by the J. W. B. to the parent organization and by the parent organization in turn to the local agency.

A statement of detailed procedure and methods is now under preparation and will be mailed within a few days, and supplementary statements will be issued from time to time from the National Headquarters of the Jewish Welfare Board, and from the Headquarters of the I. O. B. B. and the Y. M. H. and K. A.

The New York conference developed a complete sense of the supreme importance of unified effort so far as the national officers of the co-operating Jewish organizations are concerned, a spirit which it is hoped will pervade the work of each local community in its efforts to solve the supreme problem.

RUMANIA REFUSES ADMISSION TO RETURNING REFUGEES.

A large number of Jews who had fled from Bukowina during military operations there and had taken refuge in Bohemia and Moravia, are now returning home. A part of Bukowina, however, has been occupied by Rumanian troops, as Rumania claims that province. Jewish refugees returning to these parts of Bukowina are being refused admission by the Rumanian military authorities. These Jews are therefore in an extremely uncomfortable position and are suffering from the lack of shelter, food and clothing.

POGROMS IN GALICIA RECUR.

An anti-Jewish pogrom, accompanied by the characteristic brutalities, took place recently in the town of Kovetchin, Galicia. Not only were Jewish homes and businesses attacked and pillaged, but synagogues and schools were not spared. As in other pogroms, the police authorities held themselves aloof and did not stir to afford protection to the defenseless Jewish population. The Scrolls of the Law were forcibly removed from the synagogues and desecrated. The Jewish cemetery was also overrun, the graves opened and the gravestones and other monuments destroyed.

THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT AND EASTERN JEWS.

Contrary to all expectations and despite Jewish protests, the new government has not abolished the restrictions imposed by the old regime on the commission of Eastern Jews into Germany. The Jewish organizations continue to demand the annulment of the order.

The Spiritual Adjustment of the Jewish Immigrant

By Rabbi Joseph Hevesh, of Cong. Anshe Emes, Chicago

Of the many responsibilities that rest upon the Jewish community, one of the greatest is its duty towards our weak and helpless brothers—the immigrants. Upon the proper fulfillment of this obligation depends not only the welfare of the "newcomers," but also the status of the "old settlers." Whether the inflowing mass of human raw material shall turn out to be an asset or a liability to the community is determined chiefly by the guidance accorded to the incoming tide.

There are two distinct aspects to this question, for we are concerned in the fate or our people, both as loyal Jews and also as patriotic Americans. To the credit of our philanthropists be it acknowledged that they early recognized their responsibilities in that direction and have bravely grappled with the problems growing out of them. Educational institutions like the Jewish Educational Alliance, Hebrew Institute, Jewish Educational Society and other kindred organizations were established in all the larger communities with a view to benefit the immigrant and his children. All these institutions pursue a more or less uniform ideal. They foster the new spirit of Democracy, fan the fires of patriotism and endeavor to create an atmosphere in which the crude aliens are being reshaped, baked and finished as new Americans.

Against these early attempts and past experiments there is one serious criticism to be made, that all the efforts of benevolence are only one-sided. The process of Americanization is being over-emphasized at the expense of the religious aspect. On account of this negative attitude towards Judaism, the old people look upon these institutes with suspicion. Their misgivings are strengthened and partly justified by the fact that their young children come home to them with superior airs assumed and strange manners acquired. The enstrangement from the parents, again, reacts unfavorably upon the young people themselves, for it is loosening their spiritual anchorage. Consequently they grow up without that spirituar nurture which is indispensable in the building up of character.

This may be one of the reasons why the new generation of our people has acquired the unsavory reputation of being "hardened materialists." Our standing in the eyes of our non-Jewish fellow-citizens seems to be lowered, and they openly accuse us of having traded our birthright for a "mess of pottage." It is the stinging irony of fate that the modern descendants of the ancient "people of the Book" should be branded with the $ sign, the trade-mark of Mamon. The truth of the matter is that the Jew possesses a most adaptable nature, and he strongly reflects the influence of his environment. Being an apt pupil, he will out-Harum David Harum. He easily acquires the art of making money, however, when occasion demands he proves to be a princely giver. Jacob H. Schiff and Julius Rosenwald have raised a veritable school of philanthropists. Many are the disciples who nobly vie with each other to emulate their noble exemplars.

Philanthropy, however, cannot supplant religion. It will be well, therefore, to revise our policy regarding the training of the immigrant, and profiting by the experience of the past, we should try to evolve a more helpful attitude.

In order to obtain a correct perspective of the problem as it confronts us today, it will be well to cast a retrospective glance upon the near past. It may be stated without exaggeration that at no time and at no place, ever since the wanderings of our people began, did Israel find a haven of rest equal to our beautiful commonwealth of these United States. But so many had been the disappointments of the past, and so deceiving the promises of former prospects, that the suffering Jew has lost the hope of realizing true liberty in any other place outside of the "homeland" of his ancestors.

The last century was hailed as the era of general emancipation. After the revolutions of 1848 many of the enlightened countries in Europe promised the privilege of citizenship to the Jews living in their midst. But these rights and privileges existed mostly on documents only, which were often regarded as mere "scraps of paper." Hatred and prejudice were so deep-rooted that they could not be removed by acts of parliament or by royal decrees. In fact, the promised privileges brought about new difficulties and caused more suffering. The emancipation of the body caused the enslavement of the soul. The dark forces of reaction in the unenlightened countries of Eastern Europe waged an open war of extermination against the hated race. And even more civilized lands, like Germany, France and Austria, yielded to the outburst of race persecution, known by the modern term, anti-Semitism. The Hilsner affair in Austria and the Dryfus conspiracy in France are speaking witnesses in the indictment of sham liberalism. The governments of England, Holland and Italy were more tolerant to their Jewish subjects, but comparatively the Jews comprised a very small percentage of the population.

In the lands of darkness Jewish life remained medieval in every respect. If rare exceptions occurred here and there, these proved the rule only the stronger. Individual Jews rose to prominence, but they were compelled to disavow their religious affiliation by apostasy. But also in the semi-liberal countries the lot of the newly raised citizens was not enviable. They had to face a keen struggle of competition in which their ancient religion proved to be a serious handicap. In the unequal struggle many a young climber yielded to the temptation held out by the church, and conversions to the dominant faith became numerous. Jewish aspirants for offices to which they were perfectly qaulified were advised to enclose a "Taufschein" to their petitions, and when they complied by sending in their birth certificates it was made clear to them that there was a difference between the two documents. When the pious Jew saw that the entrance upon a professional career led to a strang path, which usually terminated at the baptismal font in the church, he instinctively kept his children out from the public schools. Thus the Ghetto remained. Its walls from the outside were demolished, but a voluntary barrier was raised by the Jew himself which was to protect his heritage from destructive foreign influences.

It is here, in the new world, that a real opportunity is offered and a fair deal is meted out to the Jew. This favorable situation, however, must be wisely utilized so that it may produce the best results. Overzeal and misapplied benevolence may create more harm than good. A too rapid course of assimilation may so upset the equilibrium of the ambitious immigrant that he may lose more than he gained. Because extremes meet, the "world-idealist" is prone to plunge in an anxious moment into the extreme of crass materialism.

It may not be safe to follow nature slavishly, but there are some valuable lessons that can be learned to good advantage. Thus it is worth while to notice that some animals are so constituted that they must change parts of their bodies from time to time. Nature taught these animals to take refuge in seclusion during the seasons of molting. This may serve as a direct hint of caution to us that we, too, provide for the safeguarding of those who must undergo the process of spiritual transformation. Before securing allegiance to our new ideals provision should be made for teaching the full significance and value of the new standards. Indeed, there were many beautiful phrases used as catchwords that remained empty slogans which had been exploded before our own eyes. The disciplined Jew may rightfully ask: "Why leave the fountain of living waters and seek the broken cisterns that hold no water?" It is the privilege of our present generation, of all who lived through the greatest of world conflicts, to witness the breaking down of some useless theories.

The greatest of all shams of the pre-war times was the false ideal of "universal brotherhood" which captivated the so-called rationalists. It was a theory built without foundation, a typical air castle, a creation of day dreams. In an incredibly brief space of time all the erstwhile professions of brotherhood were forgotten. Learned scholars used their subtle minds to justify murder and destruction in the cause of—world domination. They apparently subscribed to the vision of the ancient seer who told about "the lion lying down with the lamb together," only, as the late Professor Schechter once remarked: "They would consent to the lamb resting inside of the lion." After the storm wind and the quake and the fire have passed there must come the "still small voice." Instead of a world empire dominating all the races and molding them through the iron cast of uniformity, we hope to see emerging a League of Nations that will allow each group of peoples to contribute its original gift to humanity. It will be like the rivulet carrying its waters to the big river.

Under such liberal and truly democratic conditions the Jew is destined to recuperate from the unjust sufferings of past ages and to evolve a fine sense of spiritual power. And while he borrows from his environment, while he accumulates obligations, he would also be able to develop resources to repay his debts liberally. But there is a saying somewhere in the Talmud: "Poverty is quite becoming to Israel," meaning thereby that poverty is by no means the greatest danger to the survival of the Jew. Prosperity is more often the cause of turning his head, as it was declared of old: "When Jeshurun waxed fat he kicked." The softening influences of material prosperity may easily accomplish the disintegration of the Jewish people even though the cruel persecutions tried but failed in doing it. The familiar parable about the traveler whose cloak the storm wind could not get, but who was compelled to discard it under the hot rays of the sun, is an apt illustration to the point.

A too sudden adaptation to environment and a too ready yielding to outside influences must prove harmful. In order to avoid the dangers of rapid assimilation, which would destroy our original individuality, the synagogue must become interested in the immigrant. It must be energetic and tactful in ministering to the needs of both young and old. The problem can be made even more clear by an illustration. Just as in physics there is a recognized centrifugal force tending to push the molecules away from the center, which is being counteracted by the centripetal action drawing the same molecules inward toward the center, even so must the centrifugal action of assimilation be counter-balanced by enlightened training in Judaism and Jewish culture.

A corrective force in that direction is Zionism. It is not a type of religion or a substitute for religion, but a spiritual ideal, giving a healthy outlet to the emotional craving of the Jew. As an influence to check the tendency of assimilation it is of great importance and value. Even though we have no intention to remove our habitation from beneath these happy skies we can conscientiously support the efforts for a restored Palestine. The ancient land of Israel restored promises a concrete expression of the Jewish genius. By helping to up-build the ruins of our ancient homeland we shall make possible the realization of the hope of ages which sustained us throughout the centuries of oppression and danger.

The practical question to be considered is, in what form shall religion be presented to the immigrant? For although we may reasonably claim that there is only one Judiasm in substance, in its interpretation we are strongly divided. Orthodoxy, in its rigid, unyielding form, cannot become acclimated to this country and its new conditions. It is, after all, the direct product of medieval ghetto life. An exotic plant, as it is, it is doomed to shrivel and vegetate. The old generation holds on to it, though often only nominally, but the coming generation boldly deserts it. To cling to it in the face of positive failure implies, the least to say, imprudence.

But neither is the interpretation of Reform sound enough to hold together permanently the large bulk of free Jewry. The weakness of its philosophy is that it is not practical. The theory is too abstract to be translated into real practice. Like most of the nineteenth century ideals, it shows blossoms but cannot produce fruits. To save itself it will have to retrench. Before anything else, it will have to find and re-establish its connections with the Jewish historical past. Without roots the "tree of life" cannot flourish. It will also have to modify its world outlook regarding the Jewish future. Without the means of direct connection with the past, and without the hope for a future as visualized by the prophets of Israel, the present does not offer any realities.

The path of peaceful progress leads towards the pleasant ways of the middle road known as Conservative or Historic Judaism. There existed parties in Israel in all ages, but it was always through the moderates, the middle-termers, that Judaism survived. The Pharisees stood between the Saducees and the Chassidim, the Rabbinites saved the day against the Karaites and other factions during the Gaonic period and later, and the Conservatives are to stand in the breach for the present. The root ideas or principles, like the Sabbath, the dietary laws, the Hebrew prayer book and the integrity of the Bible constitute the general program of the Conservative platform. Our rich Rabbinic literature must not be disowned because our enemies frown it down, and the hypotheses of higher criticism possess no canonical validity to those who respect tradition. They still cherish the romantic halo about the Patriarchs, and they continue to idealize the Jewish heroes, prophets, sages and martyrs.

For the time being the "golden mean" may be unpopular. The followers of the middle road, like all progressives, are exposed to the shafts hurled from right and left. However, the spirit of progress thrives under such conditions. By the steady exercise of a militant defensive the power of resistance will increase. The general discussions upon the fertile theme of reconstruction seem to ignore the significance that Judaism bears upon the subject. But sooner or later the omission will be noticeable and due reparation will have to be made. The sooner the better. The gap existing between the parents and children should not be allowed to be widened. The earlier the breach is filled in, the better are the chances for a complete spiritual adjustment. The position held by the historical conservative interpretation of Judaism offers a common meeting ground for an effective reconciliation of the conflicting elements that make up American Jewry.

Moreover, the conservative spirit is identical with the essence of democracy, and thus it stands in perfect harmony with American ideals. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States resemble not only in language, but also in spirit, to our Bible. By cultivating the conservative spirit of Judaism we are serving the best interests of the land we love. This strong, unified allegiance is the keynote to the harmony we wish to develop in our brothers and sisters who come to these shores in quest of a haven of refuge and a hospitable home. Once I overheard an argument as to which of the two terms was the more correct: Jewish American or American Jew? It appears to me that American Jew is the correct designation. It clearly indicates that our stock and origin is Judaic; the root reaches back to ancient soil and derives its nourishment from the living waters of the Torah. The branches, on the other hand, indicate the new growth, with blossoms and fruits ripened under the new climate.

The impressive words of Jethro to Moses may furnish an appropriate conclusion: "If thou shalt do this thing, and God command thee so, then thou shalt be able to endure, and all this people shall get to their place in peace."

THE NATIONAL FARM SCHOOL.

Opportunity for Worthy Young Men.

The Board of The National Farm School announces that a new class will be opened on March 15, 1919. All desirous of entering the class should make application immediately to Mr. M. A. Kaufmann, Chairman of the Application Committee, 407 Mutual Life Buildin Philadelphia, Pa.

The National Farm School is located in Bucks County, Pennsylvania (near Philadelphia), and trains lads, irrespective of creed, in practical and scientific agriculture, for agricultural callings, free of all charge to them for tuition, books, board, lodging, laundry and other necessities. The school comprises nearly 500 acres of land and is equipped with pure-bred and grade dairy herds, horses, barns, piggery, poultry, farm machinery, greenhouses, library and laboratories.

The course of studies covers a period of three years, and includes arithmetic, English, American literature, history, botany, soils, dairying, forestry, fertilization, horticulture, agriculture, agricultural bacteriology, veterinary science, bee culture, chemistry, agriculturtal geology, physics, agricultural literature, animal husbandry, poultry culture, prognostication, leveling and drainage, surveying, rural economics and law. The studies are in charge of an able corps of instructors and the household is in charge of a matron.

Those desirous of taking this course must be sixteen years of age, and not over twenty-one; must have completed their grammar school education or have an education equivalent thereto; must be morally, physically and mentally fit, and must be desirous of following agriculture as their life's work.

CONLEY SENTENCED.

Leo Frank's Accuser Must Serve Term of Twenty Years.

A sentence of twenty years in the state penitentiary has been imposed in the case of Jim Conley, who was the state's chief witness in the Leo Frank case several years ago. Conley was found guilty of burglarizing an Atlanta drug store. While breaking into the store he was shot. Conley's testimony was the chief feature of the case against Frank. Conley swore that Frank killed Mary Phagan.

A JEWISH CONGRESS AT WARSAW.

An All-Polish Congress of Jews has been held at Warsaw. Five hundred delegates came from all parts of Poland. The Zionist leader, M. Greenbaum, was elected president. The Congress was convened to discuss the situation created by the pogroms, the question of national and civil rights for Jews in Poland, and the Zionist aims.

Sketches of Modern Jewish History

By Gotthard Deutsch

XV.

(From the July Revolution to the February Revolution (1830-1848.)

During this period of political fermentation Germany occupies the center of the stage in the political history of the Jews, and in this loosely connected aggregation of states the smaller members of the Federation furnish the most typical, though caleidoscopic, sights of the fight between medievalism and modernism. The revolution in France could not help but exercise a powerful influence on the state of mind in Germany, which had fought two decades previously against foreign oppression, and now found itself oppressed by a few dozen little would-be Napoleons at home. In this endeavor to obtain democratic institutions the Jewish question could not possibly be overlooked, for it meant not merely the future of a considerable and economically as well as spiritually important part of the population, it meant also religious freedom. I cannot forego quoting one small instance which reflects Jewish life under the reaction, and at the same time mirrors the incredible spiritual servitude under which the people of Germany were groaning. It comes from Austria, the presiding power of the German Federation.

Solomon Loew Rapoport, the celebrated critic (1790-1867), afterwards chief rabbi of Prague, then still clerking in a Lemberg wholesale house, writes in 1831 to his friend, Isaac Samuel Reggio (1784-1855) of Goerz, on the latter's offer to publish Leon Modena's book against Cabbala, discouraging the attempt. Rapoport declares that the censor of Hebrew books, an apostate Jew, would never give his consent to such a publication, because he dislikes mysticism and fears anything which smacks of criticism and free thought. It is necessary to know exactly what the whole trouble was about. A rabbi in Venice who lived in the 17th century had written a book in which he condemned Cabbala as un-Jewish and unscientific. Two hundred years after his death a scholar wishes to edit the book, but the censor would not give his consent. The government does not want the Jews to engage in mysticism, they ought to be "aufgeklaert," and least of all in spite of "Aufklaerung" should they be trained in criticism. Such mental habit might result in revolutionary aspirations.

The year 1831 nevertheless brought the program of democracy, and with it that of the emancipation of the Jews, up for serious discussion. It is quite interesting and a lesson to those who in more ancient history draw their mechanical diagrams to divide reactionaries and liberals as consistent on all questions, that such is not the case. Among the bitter opponents of the emancipation of the Jews was H. E. G. Paulus (1761-1851), the representative of the most progressive school of Protestant theology. To him Jesus was a mere man of rather questionable ancestry; miracles were either inventions or exaggerations of natural incidents; resurrection, the cardinal dogma of Christianity, was a fraud. Jesus, who, after being taken down from the cross for dead, had come to in the tomb, appeared among his superstitious disciples, who believed that he had risen from the dead, and he, feeling that he could not live much longer, dragged himself to a near-by mountain, where he died in a hidden cave, leaving his disciples under the impression that he had ascended into heaven.

D. F. Strauss said of Paulus very cleverly that he had transformed the miracles of Jesus into miracles of exegesis. Yet this man, who on his deathbed in his ninetieth year refused to answer in the affirmative the question propounded to him by the minister who administered the sacrament, whether he believed in the salvation through the death of Jesus Christ, was a bitter antagonist of the emancipation of the Jews. The Jews, so he said in his pamphlet, "Die Juedische Nationalabsonderung," etc., Heidelberg, 1830, are not a religious sect, they are a nation, and as long as they did not give up the Hebrew language, the Sabbath, the circumcision and the dietary laws they are not worthy of being admitted into the fellowship of the German nation. This thesis is the sum and substance of the anti-Jewish—the term "anti-Semitic" had not yet been invented—argumentation in those days. It is voiced among others in an anonymous pamphlet, entitled, "Ist es rathsam den Juden das volle Staatsbuergerrecht zu ertheilen?" Leipsic, 1837. The author of this pamphlet—and this is the reason for quoting it—was Heinrich Stephani (1761-1850), an active reformer in the field of pedagogy. Again it proves an error to believe that a progressive in things spiritual must needs be an advocate of Jewish equality.

Fortunately the Jews were no more restricted to outside help in combating anti-Jewish agitation. They had legally trained minds in their midst. Gabriel Riesser (1806-1863), the grandson of Raphael Cohen, chief rabbi of Altona, the bitterest opponent of the Mendelssohnian movement, and, though his father was one of the staunchest advocates of synagogue reform, also on his father's side the descendant of the old rabbinical family, Katzenelnbogen, was a man educated in a typically modern fashion in gymnasium and university. Unable to obtain admission to the rank of university professors and to the practice of law, he stubbornly refused to pay the price of such admission by baptism, as many others had done at that time, and devoted himself to the championship of the rights of his brethren. His answer to Paulus: "Vertheidgung der Buergerlichen Gleichstellung der Juden gegen die Einwuerfe des Dr. Paulus," Altona, 1831, contains all that can be said on the subject today in the Polish and in the Rumanian question. The Jews, Riesser maintains, are Germans, because they are born in Germany, and are not appearing as humble petitioners, begging for an act of mercy, but are demanding what is their birthright. Their religious problems are exclusively their own affair, and, no matter how much reform these problems require, this can never be an object of barter for rights which are their own. It is rather enjoyable to reflect on the progress of American Jewish life in this connection. When Riesser in 1856 visited the United States the Jews received him indifferently. They gave him dinners and receptions, but, judging by the newspaper accounts, the Jews did not know how prominent a guest they had in their midst.

As always has been the case, neither logic nor clearness of presentation converted the enemies of the Jews to a sense of justice. Among the bitterest enemies of Jewish emancipation was Wolfgang Menzel (1798-1873), the editor of the influential "Literaturblatt." To him liberalism was Jewish, and Jews were pro-French. German literature was undergoing a transformation. It would lead us too far to present this development in detail. Suffice it to say that the ideals of Schiller and Goethe, cosmopolitan and strictly spiritual as they were, did not satisfy the needs of an era striving for democracy and material progress. The feudal fidelity in William Tell, presented in the relation of Baron von Attinghausen to his peasants or in Goethe's Goetz von Berlichingen, nor even the metaphysical problems of Faust, were the ideas uppermost in the "Jung Germany," which appeared in the literary arena and of which Karl Gutzkow (1811-1878) was one of the leading exponents. Menzel never tired of repeating the charge that "Young Germany" was really "Young Palestine," although he could only name Heine and Boerne as proofs for his statement, and these two did not exactly belong to that class. In approved fashion he declared that he had nothing against the Jews as such, he even loved them, provided they would remain Jews. In "Literaturblatt," No. 1, 1832, he publishes this distich:

Klage nicht, dass die Juden so laut sich
 machen in Deutschland,
Waren in Deutschland doch sie lange das
 einzige Volk.

Similar is the view of an editorial writer of the liberal paper, Niederrheinischer Kourier fuer das Konstitutionelle Deutschland, who says in the issue of April 19, 1831:

"The Jews do live in our cities and villages, but this does not make them part and parcel of our fatherland and our nation. It is not illogical to raise a Jew to the rank of nobility, but if one embraces him as German brother, he is either an idiot or a scamp. Nationality is not a doctor title or a decoration."

The charge of the Jewish character of "Young Germany" is sufficiently illustrated by the fact that Gutzkow, perhaps its most pronounced exponent, is a decided anti-Semite. His "Uriel Acosta" might pass as the presentation of spiritual freedom in its struggle against religious fanaticism, but in his last polemical work, "Dionysius Longinus," he presents the Jew in the most detestable form, showing the sentiment of his youth, confessed by himself, that when he heard that his much admired Boerne was a Jew he felt as if one had stabbed him. He is concisely and appropriately characterized by Berthold Auerbach in the vigorous and untranslatable phrase, "Ein intimer Judenfeind."

The movement created by the July Revolution could not well express itself in the loose federal government because the legislation on the emancipation of the Jews was reserved to the individual states. It was not until 1848, when the first German parliament, the "Deutsche Nationalversammlung," was convened in Frankfort, and in the public discussions that preceded it, that the Jewish question was seriously tackled. These public meetings demanded the complete emancipation of the Jews as a plank in their platform. It was, as Max Nordau once brilliantly said, more a fashion than a serious sentiment, just as in a family claiming culture, the piano has to be a part of the furniture, though nobody plays it or cares for it. The opposition was indeed not wanting. Moritz Mohl (1802-1886), a political economist of note and a liberal in politics, moved, Aug. 28, 1848, to restrict the political franchise of the Jews. He met a formidable opponent in Gabriel Riesser, who in one of his most memorable speeches shattered Mohl's arguments. The parliament voted with overwhelming majority the section 13 of the federal constitution (Grundrechte) which gave to the Jews full equality. It is significant for the political constellation that among those who voted with Mohl was the Tyrolean delegation, all of them clerical to the bones and insisting on the unity of faith (Glaubenseinheit) for their province. The best characterization of the actual sentiment even of the liberals who voted for the removal of all Jewish disabilities is given by Paulus Cassel (1821-1892) then still an orthodox Jew, afterwards a missionary in the service of the Anglican church, who says in his pamphlet, "Wider Herrn von Treitschke," Berlin, 1879: "It was a self-delusion when people claimed in 1848 that the emancipation was adopted out of love for the Jews or out of genuine liberalism. It was merely part of the liberal program."

Thirty years in the ministry of the Protestant church had disillusioned the man who originally converting to Christianity in order to secure a position as professor found prejudice barring his way to an academic career, after he had paid "for the ticket of admission," and even after the pietistic cant which he acquired in his new calling had become so natural to him that he may have believed in it himself. The antisemitic pamphlet of Treitschke, the signal shot for opening the antisemitic war, had opened his eyes to the realities of the siatuation.

The downfall of the revolution brought the usual results. As we have seen in Vienna, where Hermann Jellinek was executed in order to brand the whole movement as Jewish, so it sounded all over Germany. Wolfgang Menzel declared the revolution was made by the Jews. In Frankfort the rumor was circulated that the Jews had distributed money among the mob who assassinated Count von-Lichnowski and General von Auerswald. Vossische Zeitung, Jan. 18, 1849, claimed the mob which assembled in Berlin in front of the Schloss and forced King Frederick William IV to grant a constitution was Jewish. The "liberal" Vossiche Zeitung had to be outdistanced by the Kreuzzeitung, founded as organ of the Junker party, which informed its readers that the Jews had plotted to assassinate the king, and in order that the other side should not be left unrepresented, the Triersche Zeitung, a democratic organ, charged the Jews with responsibility for the failure of democracy.

Thus history repeats itself. At present the Jews are responsible for the Bolshevist movement, and when we shall be able to hear from the other side we shall, no doubt, learn that the Jewish capitalists were the supporters of reaction. The story of the Jewish capital plotting to assassinate Frederick William IV was repeated by the Berlin anti-semites forty years ago with the variation that the Alliance Israelite Universelle had collected a million of francs for the assassination of William I.

There is always some humor in history. The Berlin banker, Aaron H. Heymann (1803-1880), a prominent communal leader and devout Jew, tells in his very readable "Lebenserinnerungen," Berlin, 1909, that he was returning from the Purim services March 18, when the mob blocked his way to his home, and it was quite timely to read the words (Esther, 6:1): "The king could not sleep in that night." It was therefore clear that not all Berlin Jews could have been present at the demonstration. An anecdote which is not so well authenticated has it that old Baron Rothschild, walking through the streets of Frankfort, was accosted by a hobo, who said to him: "Brother Rothschild, all Germans are now brethren and must divide their fortunes." "All right," said old Anschel, "how much do you think that I am worth?" "People say, answered the hobo, "that you are worth fully forty million gulden." This was long before the era of the billions. "Well, then," replied the baron, "suppose people are right. There are forty million German brethren. Here is one gulden for your share. I shall settle with the others." Folklore is usually right in its presentation of historic characters. Old Anschel was indeed the calm Philistine, who believed in waiting until the storm would pass by. In 1832 a Jew from Rodenberg, Hesse, named Bernard Behrend, called his attention to the unlimited possibilities in the western territory of the United States. Here Jews could be colonized, and their unbearable distress relieved, and at the same time the philanthropic scheme would prove a good business venture. Anschel shook his head. He had all the business that he could handle, and as far as the condition of the Jews was concerned, his father "selig" used to say "If the Jews will only be good and 'frumm,' God will take care of them."

And God did take care of them. King Frederick William IV refused to accept the crown of Germany from the hands of a committee of the Parliament. He would not compromise his dignity as a monarch by the grace of God and accept a throne from the hands of rebels among whom—to cap the climax—was a Jew, our friend Gabriel Riesser, the grandson of a "Litvack" rabbi. His majesty was convinced that the whole movement was not genuine but largely the work of Jewish Teutomania (Teutschwut). The resuscitated Federal Council declared the constitution a scrap of paper, Aug. 23, 1851, but there are more Jews in Chicago today than Bernard Behrend ever dreamed of colonizing in the whole west. God did take care, though he left some job yet to his faithful children, organized in the Independent Order B'nai B'rith.

COMMUNICATED.

Editor B'nai B'rith News,
Chicago, Ill. March 7, 1919.

Dear Sir:—I am a member of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90, of Newark, N. J., since 1872, but I have lived in Cleveland since 1884 and read with great interest your monthly issues. Being 80 years old and well acquainted with European matters, having received my college education here, and when of military age, served in the Austro-Hungarian army, could explain lots of errors which are now being published in the daily papers of our country here.

You report on first page Polonais Sans Patrie, referring to M. Lauzanne's articles in Libre Parole during the Dreyfus affair. 1892, naming Monsieur de Blowitz. His name is Opper Conn. He lived in a little town in Bohemia named Blowitz, went to school in Pilsen, Bohemia, when he became a newspaper correspondent in France, adopted the name of the town he was born in and his whole life is a continuation of lies and fiction. His parents were very humble Jews, but like all renegades, he had to be more severe with his own people.

Yours truly,
E. LOWITH.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIA AND THE JEWS.

Mr. Nahum Sokolow has received a letter from the Foreign Secretary of the Czecho-Slovaks explaining that the recent decision to expel certain Jews from their country, which has since been rescinded, was not inspired by anti-semitism. It was the result of extreme scarcity of the necessities of life which caused the authorities to withdraw the right of residence from all who had not been residents before the war.

NON-JEW WANTS TO JOIN B'NAI B'RITH.

Editor of The Jewish Exponent.

Sir:—I am not a Hebrew, but should like to join your B'nai B'rith Order as a contributor. Is this possible?

M. S. SMYTHE.
Philadelphia, Feb. 17, 1919.

R. E. GUTSTADT, RETIRING PRESIDENT OF B'NAI B'RITH, IS HONORED.

Past Grand President Richard E. Gutstadt of District Grand Lodge No. 4, B'nai B'rith, was the guest of honor at an "appreciation banquet" given to him by his friends of Cremieux Lodge on March 2, 1919, at the Hotel Bristol.

Scores of lodge brethren of the retiring Grand President gathered to pay tribute to him for his faithful service to the Order.

Max Blackfield was chairman of arrangements. Addresses were made by P. G. P. Gutstadt, officers of the Grand Lodge and others.

Notes Upon the Social Situation in Roumania with Reference to the Jewish Question

By Our Special Correspondent

Upon the Necessity of a Solution of the Question by the International Peace Conference.

The present exposition follows a definite purpose. I wish to show the reason why we can have no confidence in the promises of Roumanian politicans and Roumanian political parties and why in order to secure ourselves a final and definite emancipation we must lay such stress upon the necessity of obtaining from the Roumanian government statements that will give no room for all kinds of evasions which would nullify them. I beg you to give your attention to this expose because, in our opinion, only a knowledge—if even a rough general one—of the complications of the social questions in Roumania can make it clear to the outsider why the Jewish question there is bound up with difficulties which have never occurred anywhere else. At the same time the deeper motives underlying our action will be made intelligible to the reader.

More than once I have had the impression that the best friends of our cause abroad incline to think that we exaggerate somewhat. Some of them express astonishment because we show no pleasure when some Roumanian politician makes a statement favorable to us and our question. Others put themselves at pains to bring us to share their conviction that the Roumanian political parties, taking warning by the vast violent changes caused by the war, will of their own accord recognize their past errors and endeavor to behave more justly towards us. Others again, persuaded that if the solution of our question is left to the Roumanian political parties to effect by themselves without any interference from foreign governments it will be easier for them to give a favorable solution, appear to be unable to comprehend our efforts rightly. I have often had to combat such opinions since I undertook to carry on in the name of the "Union of Roumanian Jews" the mission with which you are acquainted. That is the reason why I decided to write the present observations.

I will express myself as briefly as possible, refraining from a detailed historical exposition of the case. I will confine myself to citing a few facts from the past, passing over Art. 44 of the Treaty of Berlin because the responsibility for its non-observance must be laid to all the powers alike and not merely to Roumania. However, in the years 1879-1880 Roumania undertook certain formal obligations in the Jewish question by means of a series of notes addressed to the Great Powers. She undertook—see the notes of the Roumanian Minister for Foreign Affairs of Aug. 19-31, 1879. and Dec. 21-23, 1879—not only to refrain from treating the Roumanian Jews as aliens, but also to adopt a friendly attitude towards them that would insure their naturalization taking place as quickly as possible. You know what followed. Later on whenever Roumania was driven into a corner, she let her statesmen repeat the same promises in foreign quarters.

To this the following answer might be given:

"All this is true, but it took place in the past. Meanwhile we have all passed through the purgatory of the world-war. Everything is assuming another shape now. Roumania will not remain alone untouched and unchanged."

Unfortunately we cannot share this optimism. Of course, Roumania will not be able to escape the general stream which is whirling the world in other directions now, but we are nevertheless convinced that the changes which will take place in our country will be as in the past, surface ones only. Roumania will only develop to higher humane, liberal and moral ideas and be able to abolish medieval methods in her administrative actions very gradually and as a result of a permanent process from within.

Today, at the end of 1918, Roumania is, as she has been for centuries, a country where the large landowners—supported by a portion of the town inhabitants who are directly interested in the maintenance of the existing social order of things—rule unchecked and without encountering the slightest opposition. There are six million peasants in a population of about eight millions. Of these peasants, 75 per cent of the men are illiterate and 85 per cent of the women. Anybody who has had anything to do with Roumanian affairs knows the wretched economic, hygienic and cultural conditions under which the Roumanian peasants live. Politically they do not possess any rights. They are regarded as working implements, nothing else. Therefore, it is only the population of the towns which forms the so-called "public opinion," but the nearly two million souls of which this population consists are made up partly of Jews who possess no rights and partly—for the greater part—of the Roumanian-Christian bourgeoisie who live from the public budget, some of them as officials and others in various indirect ways. Only very few of them are economically independent.

The situation may be summed up in a few words: On the one side six million peasants and 250,000 Jews in the towns who have no rights whatsoever, on the other side the greater part of the inhabitants of the towns—the majority of them, in fact,—officials, etc., who are completely dependent on the State Budget and, therefore, on the government. At the head of them the ruling class which provides the governments. The Roumanian franchise insures absolute supremacy in the country to the large landowners and the townsmen, who for the material and political gains offered them are their zealous champions. Political independence is practically non-existant. All Roumanian governments, whatever political color they take on, can always be sure that the electoral bodies—owing to the limited number of voters*—will give them a majority of 90 per cent in Parliament.

The social classes that rule Roumania have always been severely and unyieldingly consistent in following up one set purpose, the preservation of their own supremacy. Supported by the officials, the intellectuals and other town elements that gravitate permanently round the institutions of the state and endeavor to utilize the favors of the government, they have in the course of time made the interests of all these classes identical with their own; a single ruling class has grown up which follows the sole aim maintaining the existing systems, at all costs and to the exclusion of all competition. This class has never been willing and will never be willing to make voluntary concessions which might lead to a division of power and a decrease of their political and economic privileges. The attitude of this class towards the Jewish question may be explained by their fear of Jewish competition. They are afraid that the Jews who form an active and capable element of the population might be able to take positions which have always been considered the privileges of a certain social class. They do not wish to share their power and influence with the Jews. Nor with the peasants. The exploitation of the six million Roumanian peasants has taken forms which to the best of our knowledge exist in no other country. The incredibly harsh treatment of this class leads to periodic peasant revolts. These have become a phenomenon in the social life of the country which occurs at regular intervals. The revolts are always suppressed with inexorable severity and everything remains as it was.

The Roumanian ruling classes are naturally very much interested in the maintenance of a system which gives them absolute power and assures them numerous advantages. These classes do no or little work. In no other country is absenteeism so widespread among the large landowners as in Roumania. The landed proprietors prefer farming out their estates and living lives of pleasure abroad to staying at home and taking part in the administration of their property. Only people who have no rights work, the peasants, the Jews and the town artisans. It is certain that nowhere else in the world do the ruling classes lead such an easy idle life as in Roumania.

In our country this state of things is reflected in all manifestations of human efforts, in politics, in moral views of life, in the behavior of the political parties, in everyday life. Superficiality, a complete lack of principles, the absence of any serious ideal endeavors are the direct results of these conditions. No desire for intensive work and great efforts exist. In Roumania there are only very few people possessing a deeper knowledge of the agrarian questions, although the whole life of the country is dependent on it and almost none who know the Jewish question. Why trouble oneself with such things? The laws and constitution only exist on paper; nobody pays any attention to them. The government and administrative authorities are the first to trample them under foot, which they do in such measure that independent Roumania publicists are right in their assertion that 'for Roumania the greatest revolution would be the application of the laws." That has, however, not yet been attained. Roumania is known as the country of arbitrariness and illegality for only by means of arbitrariness and complete disregard and violation of the laws can the great majority of the population be held in political and economic subjection.

These customs are deeply rooted in the souls of the ruling classes of the country. They form an integral component part of the mentality of the town-dwellers, the officials, the political parties, the so-called public opinion. They permeate the whole life of Roumania and have stamped a particular impression on the country. The Roumanian political parties bear different names and issue different programs, but in reality they differ in no way basically from one another. Their members are drawn from the same class; they govern by means of the same officials and the same method of arbitrary and illegal administration. In Roumania there really exists only one large political party, which I have already mentioned—that of the ruling classes.

The Socialist Party does not possess sufficient power to be able to turn the politics of the country into different channels. The industrial proletariat is not very numerously represented in our country. In addition there is the very serious and characteristic fact—which is of immense disadvantage—that there are no bourgeois, radical parties with liberal social-political programs as in other countries. Here we see an unparalleled phenomenon—there is no opposition to this party. Never in our country has any social or political party or even any influential personality come forward to fight permanently for ideas, principles and ideals of justice. The spectacle of merciless oppression and injustice and of the persecutions has never stirred the depths of any soul, has never touched or agitated a single conscience. Nobody in our country has ever raised one sincere passionate protest against this system. In Russia—and in other countries—oppression and injustice have heaped up against themselves immense opposing revolutionary forces. In our country there is nothing of that sort; the great moral problems of justice, freedom, human dignity, etc., have interested nobody, have led to the formation of no permanent party. No question, however important, has ever found one sincere and self-sacrificing champion.

To return to our own particular question, the Roumanian Jews are certainly no better and no worse than the Jews of other countries. Anti-semitism also exists elsewhere, but the difference is that in other countries it can only gather proportionately small and limited numbers of adherents and, therefore, has no, or only very slight, influence on the legislature and the acts of the governments, whereas in Roumania, on the contrary, the antisemitic current is all-powerful; antisemitism has become a state doctrine of the ruling class. In Russia and in other countries the Jews have always found protectors, they have been able to depend upon political parties, upon strong social and intellectual forces which championed them honorably and sincerely and kept the hope for better times alive in them. In Roumania we have nobody for us. We are completely isolated; except for the uninfluential socialist group, no party is well disposed to us. The constant persecutions which form the sole leading motives of Roumanian politics in the Jewish question have been carried on for the last five decades without arousing the slightest opposition from the public opinion of the country. All this time no single Roumanian Christian, no intellectual, author or politician has been found to protest energetically against such a policy of glaring injustice towards a completely innocent portion of the population.

To give a more complete picture of the situation I should be compelled to discourse at some length upon Roumanian nationalism. That would carry me away from my point and I have no wish to overburden this work with too many details. What is required is not a complete study, but a sketch in broad and general outlines. It is nevertheless necessary to say a few words about the nationalist movement in Roumania.

Nationalism manifests itself everywhere in almost similar ways. In every country it is conspicuous for its intolerance, for the narrow horizon of its opinions, for the petty-mindedness of its feelings, for its naive native obtuseness, which takes upon itself the imagined virtues of the whole nation, and for its reactionary tendencies, etc. However, in other countries where the people are in an advanced state of cultural and economic progress the nationalism is neutralized by powerful counteracting currents of ideas and checked by a more developed critical sense and a stronger capacity of judgment. This is not the case in Roumania, where the people are very backward culturally. The nationalist movement is, therefore, supreme there, and becomes very dangerous when thriving in the soil specially prepared for it in the way I have already described. In Roumania national interests mean nationalistic chauvinist interests, 'racial" interests of the narrowest, most limited and most intolerant kind. The "alien" is placed under suspicion. He is debarred from all benefits; they must be reserved for the pure Roumanian race—naturally, of course, only in such measure as suits the ruling class. The nationalist current of ideas has led to more accentuation of the hatred against the Jews in Roumania than anywhere else. From the very first it has taken an antisemitic form and has been applied down to the present time with a passionate persistency. Antisemitic nationalism in our country has produced a whole mass of literature which has even penetrated into the villages and has won the priests and teachers over to anti-semitism. In it the Jews are depicted as noxious aliens, against whom any form of annihilation is lawful. This propaganda is as violent as it is obstinate. Naturally enough no Roumanian has ever fervently and firmly opposed the course of the nationalist current, least of all in its antisemitic tendencies.

The success of this propaganda has been complete. Public opinion is—we repeat it and we are not to blame for it—either definitely hostile to us or completely indifferent. The indifference, however, betrays a certain feeling, a feeling which we recognize as inclining towards hatred.

The Roumanian politicians know this. Most of them—I shall not be exaggerating if I put the proportion at 80 per cent—cherish the same medieval views and feelings of hatred toward us in the Jewish question as do the masses. Some few realize that the question ought to be solved by a concession of complete emancipation in spite of the disadvantages that would ensue to the ruling classes; they do not, however, dare to express themselves openly and resolutely to this effect because they are afraid of compromising themselves with public opinion and offending the bureaucracy upon whom they are dependent.

As public opinion in Roumania is confined to the inhabitants of the towns and the officials, as moreover the peasants and Jews are excluded from all share in public life, the Roumanian politicians cannot draw support from wide social or political classes. They are prisoners to the narrow selfish policy of interests which they have followed from the past right down to to-day. If to-day anyone should desire to introduce a new, more progressive and more generous policy, he could only get it carried through en masse if the ruling classes, the officials and the town elements which form the machinery of oppression in this country were in a position to comprehend the necessity of this new policy and consent to it. Apart from their nationalism, no one has contributed more to the spread of antisemitism than the ruling classes; for many decades they have pursued an exclusively antisemitic policy in our question with intent to demean and persecute us. Today they find themselves confronted with an extremely difficult situation, which they themselves have created.

I will not deny that among Roumanian statesmen there are a few, certainly very few, who are in favor of a favorable solution of our question and whose intentions are really honorable and sincere. They see further than the public opinion of their country, which will not abandon its old mistakes. They realize quite well that after the war Roumania

Monthly Review of Events in the Jewish World

By Gotthard Deutsch

AN OLD BOOK BUT NOT OBSOLETE. Samuel di Uceda is not one of the leading authors of rabbinic literature. He lived in the sixteenth century in Safed, where in those days quite a number of religious enthusiasts had settled, expecting the coming of the Messiah, who in view of the terrible calamities which had befallen the Jewish people could surely not tarry much longer, and doing their best to speed his advent by cabbalistic practices and studies. Judging by his name he was born in Uceda, province of Guadaljara, Spain, or a descendant of a family who emigrated from that place when the Jews were exiled from Spain in 1492. He wrote among others homilies on the "Sayings of the Fathers," entitled Midrash Shemuel, published in Venice, 1579, and often reprinted. It evidently must have become popular. Discussing the parable of R. Akiba (Abot, 3, 15-16) which compares this world to a large department store, where extensive credit is given to all patrons, where everybody is invited to do business, but where nobody is permitted to escape from his obligations, Samuel di Uceda explains the introductory phrase: "everything is given under bond" in the following way: Man, seeing the numerous obligations which the Jewish religion imposes upon its professors, might easily be discouraged because he might feel it is impossible to live up to all these duties. Therefore R. Akiba says: everything is given under bond. If you make one deposit of a good deed and of good faith with the Almighty, your credit is established, and in the end everybody is judged by the majority of his deeds.

The reviewer of events in the present state of agitation needs di Uceda's assurance. It is obviously impossible to record everything which might be of interest to anyone of the more than 40,000 people to whom the B'nai B'rith News brings its monthly message. It is therefore unavoidable that someone might feel that the report of a pogrom in Jambulatow ought to have been particularly underscored and that its omission is due to pro-Bolshevist sympathies. Another one might find that a reference to an antisemitic article in the London "Morning Post" is inspired by anti-British prejudice. May the reviewer therefore not plead with Rabbi Samuel di Uceda that having given evidence of his desire of impartiality by surely at least one fact, damaging or creditable to either side, that he be judged by his fellow Israelites, as they expect to be judged by the Almighty, according to the majority of his deeds.

Ruins of a Jewish Home in War Zone.

ABIMELECH'S PLEA RENEWED. The center of interest in the present status of Jewish history is held by the nascent republic of Poland. The reports that reach us are naturally conflicting and uncertain as to details. The one thing sure is the fact of an unfriendly attitude, due to the national chauvinism concomitant to the realization of the long cherished dream of independence, and terrible pogroms, though the number of victims may have been exaggerated. The grandiloquent talk of Polish leaders about the traditional kindness of the Polish people to the Jews, who, driven from so many countries, found a haven ot refuge in Poland, reminds us of the boast of Abimelech, the king of the Philistines to Isaac, when, after having driven him from one place to another, until Isaac found a place beyond the reach of the Philistine power, the latter offered him a covenant, claiming they have not touched him and doing him nothing but good (Gen. 26, 29), because they had not killed him.

The real facts are these. The Jews, driven from western Europe at frequent intervals since the crusades and especially since the fifteenth century, migrated to Poland, which was a sparsely settled country without a middle class of merchants and mechanics, and there they supplied a need, assisted in their search for a place of abode by the greed of the Polish nobles, who, practically independent of the crown, exploited them directly and through them the peasants indirectly. The Jesuit counter reformation beginning with the second half of the sixteenth century made their lives a hell on earth, but the anarchy of Poland was at any rate a chance, while the legal discriminations in force from Cape Finisterre to the mouth of the Vistula river, did not leave them even such a chance.

All this is ancient history and would have no more interest than the edicts of expulsion from England in 1290 and from France in 1394, were the situation not acute by the present attitude of Polish politicians. The American Polish Society adopted the easiest method of vindication calculated to calm the public of a country which stands for fair play. The gentlemen declare that they have no knowledge of any pogroms, but if such occurred, they could only have been the work of Bolsheviki. The Allies' commission, investigating the situation, has not published an official report as yet, but the Polish commission which, in view of the situation wishes to be first on the spot, claims that from Nov. 1 to Dec. 5 only 131 deaths occurred in Lemberg hospitals, of which fifty were due to wounds. It is suspicious that this report makes no mention of those who died outright, being murdered and not brought to any hospital. The London Times, which during the last years was openly hostile to the Jews, sent Israel Cohen, a well-known author, to investigate conditions. This report, so far only received in excerpts in the Yiddish press, tells a horrifying story of murders, assaults, robberies and most fiendish cruelties. As an illustration of the numerous acts of brutality the following facts may be quoted. Soldiers amused themselves by throwing their guns into a river and forcing Jews whom they captured to walk into the icy water to fetch these guns. Among the victims of this sport was an old woman of 72. Others imprisoned a young girl who was stripped of all her clothing, beat her into insensibility and raped her. Jan Paderewski is quite indignant at the publication of these reports, which he declares to be falsehoods. Naturally so, but the Times, not at all prejudiced in favor of the Jews, would not print such a report without carefully weighing the reliability of the man who furnished it. A cable message was sent to President Wilson, asking him to put an end to these atrocities, and it is claimed that a message to this effect was sent to the Polish provisional government on Dec. 4, so that we may expect to hear the truth shortly. Other reports give much larger figures. A refugee from Lemberg who arrived in Paris told the representative of the New York "Tog" that 1,200 Jews were burned in the Lemberg synagog and not less than 3,000 perished during the November pogroms. Even Paderewski should credit us with sincere adherence to Uceda's ethical principles.

Reports from other places continue to reach us, Wloclawek, Lodz, Kielce, Wieliczka, Lublin, etc., are mentioned as theaters of murder, pillage and brutal assaults. Manchester Guardian and Secolo of Milan publish reports of such incidents independently and demand that the Allies take action to protect the Jewish minorites. The countercoup of the Poles is to arrest prominent Jews as hostages in order to frighten the Jews from giving to foreign correspondents and commissions true information. Another trick was to disarm the members of the Polish legion who were placed under the command of the Polish commanding officer of the city in order to prevent their interference with the mob If they refuse to lay down their arms they are treated as mutineers. The organization of the Jewish self-defense troops is with the exception of the large cities a manoeuvre to make the world believe that the party in power is eager to maintain order and to protect national minorities. In places where the population is mixed of Poles, Ruthenians and Lithuanians the Jewish guard was to take care of the protection of the Jews, but the Poles are making constantly aggressions against their neighbors, and the Jews are threatened with reprisals, no matter what they are doing. Students were expelled from schools for taking part in memorial meetings held in honor of the pogrom victims. This act constituted high treason. The conservative element of the Jewish population is still trying to come to an agreement with the Poles. A convention, held in Cracow Feb 6, passed a resolution pledging itself to the full support of the Poles in all political and national questions. The meeting was attended by delegates from the cities which suffered most from the pogroms, like Lemberg, Bochnia, Rzeszow, etc. The representatives of this group were constantly derided in the Zionist press as "Mosaic Poles" and the like. The outsider can not judge on the merits of the charge of cringing, but the reader can form his own opinion when he learns that Abraham Cahan, the editor of the New York "Vorwaerts," who is at present in Paris, reports a conversation which he had with Sokolnicki, the Polish delegate to the Peace Conference, who told him frankly that the only solution which he sees to the Jewish problem in Poland is the emigration of the Jews. The most interesting feature in Sokolnicki's views is that he charges the Jews with the support of the reactionary elements, while on the other side they are supposed to be Bolsheviki. The Polish Zionist, Podliszewski, declares the only hope for the Jews is group autonomy. He admits, however, the determined opposition of the Poles to any scheme of this kind and declares that they are bent upon crushing the Jews. This was proven by the fact that instead of electing 70 delegates to the constituent assembly, as the Jews were entitled to, they returned only nine delegates because the districts were so gerrymandered that the Jews could nominate candidates only in nine districts of which they lost six, owing to the internal fight between the "assimilationists" and the orthodox. Of the nine delegates returned four are Zionists, two democrats (those who go hand in hand with the Poles and are called assimilationists by their opponents), two represent the orthodox party and one who died in the meantime was a Poale Zion. This report is not quite certain for other statements differ as to the number of Jewish delegates, one who gives the names of the successful candidates enumerates ten, given to the Poale Zion one more representative. This small number proved, if the reports are correct, the decisive factor in the election of the temporary president Tompeszinski, being elected by a majority of six votes over Paderewski, who resigned afterwards as premier, but this resignation was not accepted.

"The bishop of Poland," as a cable informs us, published a statement in which he insisted on a clause in the constitution which should declare Roman Catholicism as the state's religion, while all other religions should be granted full freedom. It is not stated who this bishop of Poland is, though it is quite possible that the archbishop of Gnesen in the former Prussian Poland now claims the historic rights of his see as the primate of Poland. The political leaders are less cautious. The minister Vincenti in a stump tour under the auspices of the Democratic party declared frankly his party would make it so hot for the Jews that they would be glad to emigrate of their own accord, and as a specimen of his methods he advocated not to give to the Jews anything of the food supply sent for the relief of the starving population. This may be responsible for the report that the relief ship Westward Ho was ordered not to proceed to its original destination. Another protentous sign is the appointment of Danialopol, a notorious antisemite, as Polish ambassador to Washington. The opponents of the group rights will learn the difficulties of the situation from the fact that in Ukraine the authorities prohibited Polish street signs, substituting for them signs in Ruthenian and Hebrew. In Poland the rumor was spread that the Jews sent eight million roubles to Ukraine to assist the Ruthenians in taking Lemberg from the Poles. As far as officially announced only the Scandinavian states have protested against the outrages of which Jews are made victims. The allied governments evidently have not done so, for Paris "Temps" demands a clear stand on this question from the government of France. In the United States there seems to be a special occasion for a clear statement, owing to the plotting of the Poles in this country. The boycott movement in places with large Polish settlements is evidently spreading. The Catholic priest, Stanislav Kuzikowski, in Jamaica, L. I., organized a boycott against the local Jews, using the pupils of the parochial school as pickets who report every Pole entering the store of a Jew. This sinner is then called before the parish council and threatened with church discipline if he should again be seen in a Jewish store. In addition Polish stores have been opened which are practically, though not nominally, operated by the priest. They have to make weekly reports of all purchases, and if a household did not buy its supposed allotment, the woman is called before the church council and cross-examined as to the management of her affairs. These facts ought to be examined in their relation to the laws of the state of New York.

HAMAN'S BLUE BLOOD. The rabbis of old, while not higher critics, recognized that the Biblical narratives are presented as types. They assigned for the Sabbath preceding Purim the reading of the story of Amalek, because Amalek's fall shall connect with the fall of Haman. Haman is a descendant of Agag, the king of Amalek, and the latter a clan of Esau. Conditions in the old Danube principality seem to be quite critical now, evidently more so than they ever were since the great peasant revolt of 1907. The king is said to have been wounded, the queen and her children are reported as having fled. On such occasions a scapegoat is in urgent demand, and the Jews have a providential talent for such a role. Joan Bratiano, the worthy son of his father of Berlin Treaty fame, and like the latter leader of the "liberal" party, declares Roumania has the right to expel her Jews. Take Jonescu, a member of his cabinet, stated in Paris that Bukowina and Transsylvania, which Rumania claims, will retain their political status as far as the Jews are concerned. Besarabia, including Kishineff, will be under the law passed in December, which is very vague, so that the Jews of Kishineff may also hope that their status of 1903 and 1905 will remain unchanged. M. Bratiano declared in 1019 that the condition of the Jews must remain an internal question. Take Jonescu said in an interview published by L'Aurore in 1913, that the new territory acquired by Rumania in the Balkan war would respect the status of the Jews as it existed under Bulgarian rule. M. Mishu, Roumania's minister to London, gave the same assurance on March 15, 1913, and Lord Grey, as minister of foreign affairs, indorsed this promise with the expression of his confidence in the honesty of the Roumanian statesmen, June 9, 1913. Clemenceau a few days later, June 14, 1913, declared in his paper "L'Homme Libre" that Rumania had violated her treaty obligation. With Clemenceau as a heroic figure in the Peace Conference and the British Foreign office committed to the policy announced by its legitimate representative and finally with the United States under same administration which, in August, 1 , instructed its diplomatic representa- s in the Balkans to inform the govern- ts of the Balkan states that they must ist on equal rights for all citizens, it does not appear likely that the Jonescus and Bratianos shall again be allowed to consider treaties as a scrap of paper.

Unfortunately for the present no definite improvement has been visible.. Atrocities are reported which, if possible, outrank those that forty years ago called forth protests in all parliaments of Europe. Prisoners returning from Germany are tortured, forced to sign statements incriminating themselves as spies, shot, thrown into the sea or otherwise disposed of, probably in order to diminish the number of Jewish veterans. In Hermannstadt, Transsylvania, Rumanian soldiers amused themselves by a pogrom, thus giving their prospective fellow-citizens of the Mosaic faith a sample of what is in store for them. The only hope of the Jews is the Peace Conference which Rumania really fears, for the concessions which she would be compelled to make might this time be inforced. A Jewish committee waited on M. Tardieu, formerly French high commissioner to the United States, and presented him their wishes. These delegates declare that all concessions which Rumania announces with so much ado as having been made are camouflage. A very convenient way out of the obligations is an espoinage law which declares everyone who tried to damage the reputation of Rumania as ineligible to naturalization. Any Jew who ever complained of antisemitic prejudice or action on the part of an official is such a traitor. All Jews holding a congregational office are compelled to sign a promise that they will not appeal to the peace congress. In this way Haman, Amalek, Bratiano & Co., will prove that the native Jews are happy and that the whole agitation comes exclusively from outsiders. For the present the Jews of Kishineff are being converted from Bolshevism in an effective manner. A young lady, the daughter of the prominent lawyer, Koenigsatz, seeing how soldiers whipped a Jewish marketwoman, heavy with child, expressed her indignation at such a bru- ity, declaring that such a government s far worse than that of the Bolsheviki. r this act of dragging the government o disrepute she was arrested, conveyed Bender, and there a stone was tied ound her neck, she was then thrown into e river, and lost her life by accidental owning, as the official report has it. The manians are not infidel Turks and the ws are no Armenians, but they also die hen they are butchered.

OWING IN TEARS, EAPING IN? The most important event in the development of Zionism during the last month seems to me to be the preface which Mr. Balfour wrote to Nahum Sokolow's book on Zionism. British diplomats are not in the habit of expressing themselves on political questions as a mere hobby. The book itself has not reached this country as yet, but the fact as such and some statements reported in the cable are highly significant. Mr. Balfour is quoted as saying that he has arrived at the conclusion that only Zionism can solve the Jewish question, and Zionism will improve the unpleasant conditions from which even the Jews in the highest station of life are suffering. At the same time the British foreign secretary criticizes the Jews who see in Zionism a danger to their present status as citizens or an indirect admission of disloyalty. Similar are the views of the London Daily Chronicle, generally supposed to be the mouthpiece of Lloyd George, which clearly indicates England's intention to place Palestine under British protectorate, limiting the French sphere of influence to the territory north of the Lebanon.

Small courtesies, as a visit of General Allenby to the agricultural college of Mikweh Israel, where he expressed the hope to see a free development of the Jewish homeland, and the participation of Colonel Waters in the traditional arbor day festivities on the fifteenth of Shebat, when he delivered a Hebrew address, are not without significance. Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, returning from Paris, addressed an immense audience Feb. 9 on the future of Palestine, in which he declared that Great Britain, as he was told by British statesmen, was ready, though reluctantly, to assume the trusteeship over Palestine and that it was base slander to presume. that imperialist plans are hidden behind such a scheme, in reality actuated by altruistic motives. The members of the Zionist Great Action Committee were received by the Peace Conference Jan. 31. Details have not been made public, and in spite of the solemnly announced condemnation of secret diplomacy even the Zionist Congress, opened in London Feb. 25, was to be held behind closed doors. This plan was afterwards revoked, but at this writing very little is known of the transactions. The congress was attended by delegates from Palestine who were received by Mr. Balfour. In the name of the delegation Mr. David Jelin, a Palestinian by birth, and a well-known educator, who had left his position in the von Laemel School because of his objection to the pro-German tendencies of the Hilfsverein, addressed the premier in Hebrew and English, introducing his remarks with the last verse of the Hebrew Bible: "All the kingdoms of the earth has the Lord given me, and he has charged me to build him a house in Jerusalem." Mr. Balfour declined, for his person, this comparison with Cyrus, modestly claiming to merely represent the views of the British government and expressing the hope that Jewish energy and ability will, with the aid of England, overcome the difficulties in the reconstruction of Zion. The Jewish homeland and the English protectorate were not mentioned. It seems also important that a New York boy who went with the Jewish legion to Palestine informs his parents that the British government has offered to all members positions and training in any calling from farming and railroading to a university education. Of the highest significance it is that Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, formerly an uncompromising opponent to Zionism, should have come out with a warm appeal on behalf of the Restoration Fund. By way of contrast it may be stated in this connection that the International Socialist Congress, held in Berne, passed a resolution in favor of the Jewish homeland in Palestine.

The strange phenomenon of agreement by men of entirely and fundamentally different views on one subject and of disagreement on the same subject by men who are sworn to the same fundamental idea is not absent in this case. Abe Cahan remarks sarcastically, referring to the absence of the American delegates from Paris, that their presence would not make any difference. The interest of England rests with the Suez Canal, and if Poland or Armenia had a Suez Canal the Jewish question in these countries would also find an advocate. Mr. Cahan, as a socialist of the strictest observance, is an internationalist who condemns Zionism on principle and sees in it a direct injury to the Jewish cause in Poland and Rumania. A new complication is appearing on the horizon with the arrival of a deputation of Salonica Zionists in Paris. They wish that Salonica be made a free port under international protection. The Jews in Salonica form 80 per cent of the inhabitants, and the Greeks have, since the occupation of the city on Nov. 8, 1912, made the life of the Jews unpleasant on various occasions. Indeed right after the Greek occupation the report was spread that Jews had poisoned Greek soldiers. It is interesting that when the fall of Salonica was imminent J. L. Galvin proposed, in the London Observer, that Salonica be made an international seaport and Israel Zangwill indorsed it.

Another serious complication seems to arise from the next door neighbors of the homeland, the Arabs. Emir Feisul, who is also hovering around the Peace Conference, claims an independent Arabic empire. He does not directly say that it shall comprise Palestine, but he remarks incidentally that Palestine has seven times more Arabs than Jews. Few people know where the Hedjas kingdom is located. It is the western strip of the Arabian peninsula and connected with the Sinai peninsula and eastern Palestine; its Arabic population is indeed one solid group with that of Palestine. It may be interesting to notice that an accident preserved an appeal sent in the sixteenth century by the Jews of Palestine to the brethren in Hedjas on one of the usual occasions when they were fleeced by a rebellious sheikh. Such appeals are bound to come again. Mr. Lewin-Epstein, for some time representative of the Karmel Wine Company in the United States, reports that the Jews of Jerusalem were reduced during the war from 50,000 to 26,000, and that of these 20,000 are actually starving. It may not be untimely on this occasion to quote a rabbi of the fourteenth century, living in a time when the movement to Palestine, probably stimulated by the crusaders, assumed large proportion. This rabbi, Samson ben Zadok, says: "It is a meritorious deed to live in Palestine in order to lead a saintly and pure life, provided one is able to support himself". (Tashbez, sec. 562, ed. Cremona, 1556, p. 53a.) An unpleasant indication of troubles that may be in store for the future settlement is the breach between the orthodox Mizrahi faction and the main body represented in the Federation. What caused this breach just at this moment is unknown to me. It is reported at the same time that the orthodox of Vienna offered to assist in the upbuilding of an orthodox community in Palestine. It is wonderful indeed that amidst the ominous cracking of the walls in what was the Austro-Hungarian empire such movements can take place. The story of Archimedes drawing his figures in the sand while the city was taken by the enemy and of Hegel giving his maid the order to tell the people on the battlefield of Jena to stop the canonading may not be myths after all. One great event which may mean all to the homeland is a resolution in its favor adopted by the legislature of Massachusetts with enthusiastic applause in which Governor Lowden of Illinois, who was present, participated. Emir Feisul will have to be careful. On the other hand the old againster, Max Nordau, is very much displeased. In a letter addressed to Mr. Litman Rosenthal of Bialystok, now in New York, the merciless critic of conventionalism says, Zionism has degenerated into the fad of the old Chowawe Zion and of Asher Guenzburg. It is a deeply painful subject, declares Nordau.

AN ALLIANCE OF EVILDOERS ENCOMPASSES ME. There was a time when we were told, and gladly believed, as we were told that our troubles came from selfish priests and other representatives of privileged classes who misguided the ignorant masses. As soon as freedom of press and public discussion would enable the masses to understand that they are misused for egotistic purposes, their instinct would tell them that their own interests are identical with those of the Jews of their class. Habit is, however, stronger than reason. The Jew-argument is still the handiest weapon for any party wishing to discredit its opponents. The London Morning Post in two articles Jan. 20-21 tried to show that the Jews alone are to blame for the Bolshevik movement, and as proof cited the supposed fact that a meeting in London, in which Bolshevism was indorsed, was largely attended by Jews. A census was certainly not taken, and therefore this statement can neither be verified nor disproven, but it is an undeniable fact that the speakers included Miss Pankhurst and Mr. McManus, besides other non-Jews. This charge was re-echoed from many sides in this country. John Bess, an American journalist, and member of the Allied commission to investigate conditions in Poland, reports that Jews are the paid agents of the Bolsheviki in Poland. More important was the testimony given before the senate committee investigating lawless agitation in the United States by Rev. Dr. George A. Simons, a Methodist missionary in Russia, who said most of the Bolshevik leaders in Russia are Jews, many of them from the Eastside of New York who went to Russia to help overthrow the Kerenski government. Dr. Simons is known to the readers of this review from an address delivered before the students of Berea, O., College on Nov. 29, 1918, noticed in the January issue of the B. B. News, where his name was erroneously spelled Simonds. He said then that 90 per cent of the Bolsheviki were Jews and he appealed to the students to use their strong arms against Jewish students in Berea—Bolsheviki were not then mentioned particularly—and send them back to Palestine or to the North Pole. A little more cautious was the testimony given a few days later before the same committee by Theodore Krystofovitch, who declared that "most of the smaller stars hovering around Lenine were Jews." Ralph Dennis, professor of the Northwestern University, Chicago, testified before this committee in a similar sense.

In the absence of reliable data on the Bolshevist movement it is somewhat difficult to deal with this question. The Rev. Dr. Simons has, however, disqualified himself in various ways. He modified his statement in Berea from 90 per cent to the vague expression "most" before the senate committee. He spoke of German influence on the Bolsheviki—which may be true or not—appealing to the anti-German sentiment, while he was, until he went to Russia, a member of the East German Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He finally told a story, reported in the New York Times Feb. 14, of a secret document, dating from the time of the Spanish Inquisition which called upon the Jews to get even with Christianity and seize the rule of the whole world. This is exactly the trick of the German antisemites of the type of Herman Goedsche, who, in his sensational novel, "Gaeta Warschau Dueppel," Berlin, 1868, told the story of a midnight reunion held in the Prague cemetery by representatives of Jews from all parts of the world, and presided over by Sir Moses Montefiore, which passed such a resolution. There is at least some imagination in this ghost story. We have some other serious doubts on this whole business of Jewish world dominion through Bolshevism. According to the only census taken in Russia there were in the whole empire a little over 5,000,000 Jews, or a little over 4 per cent of the total population. Most of these Jews live in Poland, Lithuania and Ukraine, so that the present Russia can at best have no more, and has probably less, than one per cent Jews. Is it likely that this small fraction should dominate the 150,000,000 or more of Russians, spread from the Baltic sea to the Pacific Ocean? Finally we have been treated to the story of Jewish responsibility for every evil and everything else which one happens to dislike too often to swallow the bait so readily. We were told in the thirteenth century that they called the Mongols to Europe, in the sixteenth that they subsidized the sultan when he invaded Europe, in the seventeenth that they furnished information to the pirates of the Barbary states on ships leaving European ports. In 1798 they, instead of helping the sultan, called Napoleon to Palestine, a year later nineteen of them were burned alive in Siena for bringing Napoleon to Italy. We still remember that Isidore Loewe of Berlin furnished poor guns to the German army to cause its defeat in a war with France, while two years later Dreyfus had sold military secrets of France to Germany to obtain the opposite end by order of the mysterious Jewish world government. The death of Kitchener was caused by the international gossip of Jewish officials in Downing Street. Houston Stewart Chamberlain, the Germanized Englishman, told us that the whole war was made by a Jew who camouflaged himself behind a British sounding name (Lord Burnham), while Hillaire Belloc told his readers that the kaiser was merely a catspaw in the hands of Ballin and Rathenau. This is, of course, a very limited anthology of similar charges. We can understand the psychology of Rev. Simons, whose missionary business is quite slack now, both among Russian orthodox and Jews, on neither of whom the phraseology of American revival meetings makes much of an impression. Under similar conditions the fiends of the medaeval church, the Torquemadas and Capistranos, used the more effective instrument of the faggot to help their business along. If it is true that Trotzki ordered the arrest of the patriarch, Nikon, as some papers report, the Jews have reason to apprehend reprisals. One point must not be overlooked. The witnesses who testified before the senate committee favorably to the Bolsheviki were John Reed and his wife, Louise Bryant, and Albert Rhys Williams, the latter a former Congregationalist minister, none of them a Jew.

The troubles are not confined to Poland. Stories of pogroms come from Ukraine, from Zitomir and Berdyczew, from Hungary, Bohemia, from Salonica and Berlin. Some stories may rest on a misunderstanding. Such is the case with a report that the Czech government robbed the Jews of Nikolsburg of their autonomy. The case is so typical of the botchy Austrian administration that it is worth while explaining it in detail. Up to 1848 the Jewish congregations were municipal organizations with their own mayor (Judenrichter) and police. Moravia had 52 such congregations. When freedom of residence was proclaimed by the constitution of 1848, the majority of the Jews naturally continued to reside in the old ghettos. The difficulty of arranging the questions of communal property, which, in the ghetto, did not distinguish between municipal and religious objects, as in the case of education and charity, created among the Jews opposition to the amalgamation with the "Christenstadt", and so up to 1900 there were still thirty-one Jewish congregations possessing municipal rights for the old ghetto section of the town. Meantime great changes had taken place. The old Jewish settlements became depleted by migration to cities which formerly were closed to the Jews, and in the old ghetto towns a considerable number of Jews had moved from the ghetto to the other more desirable parts of the city, while the depreciated ghetto homes were occupied by the poorest class of the Christian population. One instance will make it clear. Before the revolution of 1848 Nikolsburg was the largest Jewish community of Moravia. It had in 1847 3,670 Jews in a total population of 8,000. In 1900 the Jewish congregation had dwindled down to 900 souls, of whom 757 lived in the Judenstadt, which comprised 1,290 souls, or about 40 per cent Christians. It is highly probable that at this time the proportion shifted still farther and the Israelitische Stadtgemeinde Nikolsburg probably has a majority of Christians. This anomalous condition has now been rectified, and its comical side is best illustrated by the Jewish township of Wesely, which comprised in 1900 18 souls, of whom 10 were Jews and 8 Christians. Otherwise, judging by the unquestionable and well-proven liberality of Professor Masaryk, the president of the Czecho-Slovak republic, conditions look favorable. Premier Kramarz is quoted as having said that he regretted the pogrom of Holeschau and had taken measures to prevent a repetition of similar occurrences. We can, however, not refrain from a certain anxiety at the effects of a national chauvinism rising to fever heat and bursting out in riots on the slightest occasion.

An incident in France will demonstrate it most vividly. When Premier Clemenceau was shot and the embittered mob on the street pummeled mercilessly the would-be assassin, the Jewish painter, Charles Dreyfus, happened to come along, and not knowing what occurred, and only seeing ten people attacking one man, began to expostulate with the crowd, and tried to extricate the victim of what he thought an unfair fight. At this moment somebody in the crowd who knew him called him by name. The mob, hearing the name Dreyfus, began to yell: "A bas Dreyfus. a bas les juifs," and it was with great difficulty that the police, by arresting him, saved him from the hands of the mob, while his sister, who had accompanied him, had a narrow escape hiding in a house which the mob tried to storm. Dreyfus had served through the whole war and had been honorably discharged.

In the absence of Jewish papers from Germany, Austria and even from neutral countries, it is hard to form a clear notion on party constellations, but the report that the Junker party under the leadership of General von Gebsattel is making an attempt to rehabilitate itself by throwing the blame for the unfortunate ending of the war on the Jews is so highly probable that we might believe it, even if it had not been reported. The name of General van Gebsattel sounds very familiar. He may be identical with the general by that name who, in the Reichstag session of March 17, 1910, during the periodically recurring debates on the exclusion of the Jews from commissions, indirectly defended this violation of the constitution. Equally credible is the report of the foundation of a People's Christian Party in Baden. This name was used as euphemism for the antisemitic party founded by Chaplain Stoecker in 1879. On the other hand, it sounds very improbable that the university of Marburg should have excluded Jewish students from the clinic. There were at least four Jewish professors in the university of Marburg, the best known being Hermann Cohen, the celebrated philosopher, very active in Jewish affairs, and yet professor ordinarius, privy councillor and honored on the occasion of his seventieth birthday by the university in a signal manner. Besides him there were Hermann Jacobsohn, Otto Loewi and Martin Wolff, the last named appointed in 1914 to a regular professorship in Germanic philology. Similarly difficult to understand is the report of rapidly increasing conversions to Christianity in Vienna. This ever increasing defection from Judaism which in late years had reached the annual figure of 600 and more was the outcome of prejudice and discrimination in appointments to public office. One should imagine that the proclamation of a republic of German Austria with separation of state and church should have altered conditions, for even among the defections were a large number of withdrawals from Judaism without conversions to Christianity. It would seem probable that this was done in large numbers by Roman Catholics, who remained in the church merely to avoid conflicts with the authorities and annoyances in social life.

Russian Trenches in Jewish Cemetery.

The anxiety on the future of the Jews in lands of oppression, at least as far as constitutional guarantees are concerned, is absolutely set at rest by the declaration of President Wilson to the delegates of the American Jewish Congress who saw him on March 2. It is of the highest significance that the President, in the pressure of business during his visit of ten days in this country, took the time to make such a statement, which defines the attitude of the United States government both to Zionism and to the rights of the Jews in all countries. It is a welcome confirmation of the strong words used by ex-President Taft in his article contributed to the Philadelphia Ledger, in which he spoke of Rumania's "audacity" in declaring native Jews as aliens, and it will calm the uneasiness created by the silence of the program of the League of Nations on the subject of religious liberty and the right of minorities. Most welcome would be the effect of Mr. Wilson's declaration if it were to harmonize the anti-Zionists, represented in Paris by the Anglo-Jewish Association and the Alliance Israelite Universelle, with the Zionist and American Congress representatives. The Jewish home under British protectorate is, as far as any unaccomplished fact can be, as much as assured.

OF ZION IT IS SAID THIS MAN AND THAT WAS BORN THERE.

It is a matter for serious reflection to take occasionally stock of the large losses that Israel sustains, while helping humanity. Robert Henry Inglis Palgrave, editor of the Economist, died in London at the age of ninety two. His father, Francis Cohen, was a jurist and historian of note and left four sons, including the above named Francis, who made their mark in public life. Francis, the son of Meyer Cohen, camouflaged his name, and Robert, who may have left great grandchildren by the time of his death, could coolly speak of his Jewish descent, while in the case of his descendants this would hardly be a matter of any interest. In the latest German ministry we find Otto Landsberg as minister of national defence and justice. He was previously minister of art and literature. Dr. Landsberg, a physician, born in Rybnik, Silesia, in 1867, is a member of the socialist party of the Reichstag, to which he was elected in 1912, and "konfessionslos." Whether the assassinated premier of Bavaria, Kurt Eisner, was a Jew or not, will have to be established. The latest edition of "Wer Ist's?", available in this country, does not contain his name, and Kuerschner's "Literaturkalender" informs us that he was horn in Berlin in 1867. The report, eagerly taken up by some Jewish papers that Eisner was a Galician Jew whose real name was Solomon Kosnowski, is rather suspicious. The Chicago Daily News reports that the place of Eisner was taken by the Jew, Max Lewin, whom the correspondent calls the Bavarian Napoleon. No information on him is at present available. We know more about Eugene Schiffer, the man on whom, unless conditions change again, the overwhelming task of arranging the finances of the German empire will fall. He was born in Breslau in 1860, entered the judicial career, carefully removing the obstacle to promotion by baptism, and was a member of the "national-liberal" or bourgeois party of the Reichstag. From German Austria comes the report of the appointment of Julius Deutsch, an author on political economy, as undersecretary of war. His name was not prominently mentioned before. Jews have, however, held a like rank under the monarchy, among them Arthur Kuranda, son of the celebrated publicist and communal worker, Ignaz Kuranda, and Rudolf Sieghart, son of a rabbi, originally Singer, who, however, after having reached this rank, became a convert to Catholicism.

The "Anti-Bolshevist" will welcome the news that in the newly founded soviet of Charkov, where the Ukrainians rule, a Jew named Rakovski, is said to have been elected as president. The Zionist leader, Mendel Ussischkin, who arrived in Paris, reports that the most amicable relations exist between the Ukrainians and the Jews who were given full autonomy. In the chronicle of personal events the death of Louis Edward Levy of Philadelphia, Feb. 17, deserves especial notice. Mr. Levy's photo-engraving process had a vast influence on facilitating illustrations in newspapers, and therefore is of high cultural value. One of the stock in trade arguments of the antisemites is that the Jew is not productive, lacking originality, and will only reap where others have sown. We may mention on this occasion besides Emil Berliner of Washington, Siegfried Marcus, the inventor of the first automobile; David Schwarz, who constructed the first dirigible airship, and Abraham Schreiner, a plain Polish Jew, who was the first to discover coal oil in the fields of Boryslav, now the bone of contention between Poles and Ukrainians.

From the harbingers of a new era historic coincidence brings us to the romance of medievalism, which just now seems destined to speedily disappear. From Jerusalem the death of the former Haham Bashi, Elijah Panizel, is reported. The event recalls the last struggle of decaying despotism in Turkey. Rabbi Elijah was the son of the former Haham Bashi of Jerusalem, Raphael Meir Panizel, who held office from 1880 to 1893. He was succeeded by Jacob Saul Elyashar, who died July 20, 1906, in his ninetieth year. After his death a fierce contention between the old and the new began. The more modern party elected Jacob Meir, who was supposed to be the favorite of the Alliance Israelite and therefore antagonized by the orthodox. The charge of disloyalty could not fail to have its effect on Sultan Abdul Hamid, who deposed him in March, 1907. Elijah Panizel was elected in his place March 8, 1907, as a representative of old-fashioned Orientalism, fell with the sultan and was retired Nov. 10, 1908. Since that time the position of chief rabbi of Jerusalem was filled by various temporary appointments, Hayyim Shabbetai of Aleppo, 1908-1911; Moses France of Rhodes, 1911-1914, retired on the ground of advanced age, and since 1914 Nissim Danon of Smyrna. The new era will undoubtedly result in the loss of preponderance by the Sefardic element.

Type of Polish Jew.

THE ENDS OF THE EARTH AND THE REMOTE SEAS.

The growing importance of South American settlements, unpleasantly recalled by the recent attacks on the Jews, is more agreeably brought to mind by a contribution of $265 sent from Pernambuco, partly for war relief and partly for the Jewish National Fund. The assassination of the ameer of Afghanistan shows that modernism penetrates even the darkest countries. Whether Jews are affected by a new order of things in this country is hard to say. The "Israelit" of Mayence gave in 1887 detailed descriptions of the life of the Jews in Balkh, but the same correspondent gave stories from Mesopotamia which proved afterwards a product of vivid imagination. It is interesting, however, to remember that the Afghans are supposed to be the descendants of the Ten Tribes, as T. L. Pennel, in his book, "Among the Wild Tribes of the Indian Frontier", maintained again in 1910.

Democracy is in the air. The venerable Jewish Board of Delegates of British Jews adopted a new constitution with woman's suffrage and a membership fee of one shilling. The privilege of the chief rabbi to veto the admission of a synagog to membership was retained after vehement attacks, in the course of which the institution of the chief rabbi was declared a mimicry of the Episcopal Church. The Liberal Synagog refused to enter on the ground of this high church rule. The Board of Delegates is closely allied to the Anglo-Jewish Association, and the latter has been during the period of the war the main force in ICA, or the Baron de Hirsch administration. The American branch of this organization, the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society, was bitterly criticized in a special indignation meeting called by the Jewish farmers of the Catskills to protest against this organization as worthless, on account of red tape, meddlesome and vindictive, thus rather hindering than helping the development of a Jewish farming population. So far only one side has been heard, but if the farmers make good their threat that they shall get along better without the assistance of the J. A. A. I. A. S. the object of the latter will have been accomplished.

From the breadwinners we turn to the spiritual life of Israel, which, as the rabbis teach, is the real bread. It is reported that Abraham Joseph Stiebel, the Moscow maecenas who last year gave 5,000,000 roubles for the establishment of a Hebrew publication house, is coming to New York, where he wishes to establish a branch of this institution. At the same time it is reported that a Hebrew University was opened in Moscow which is encountering difficulties through interference on the part of the Bolshevik government which opposes it for being nationalistic.

After a long pause the thirteenth volume of Luncz's Yearbook, "Jerusalem," has been received. Like its predecessors [illegible] a valuable repertory of Palest[illegible] cology and a worthy mem[illegible] founder, Abraham Moses Luncz, [illegible] April 12, 1918. A warm app[illegible] the enthusiast who, blind for [illegible] years, worked indefatigably for his [illegible] is written by his daughter. One is reminded of the Talmudic parable which says: Jacob, our father, has not died for, as long as his descendants are continuing his work he is still living. This work, like the others initiated by Luncz (especially his edition of the Palestinian Talmud) deserves the heartiest support.

DIGEST OF REPORT ON WAR RECORD OF AMERICAN JEWS

That the Jews of America have contributed more than their proportionate quota to the armed forces of the United States in the war is shown in the official "War Record of American Jews" which has just been issued by the American Jewish Committee, through its Office of War Records, at 31 Union Square, New York City.

While the report does not pretend to be a complete record of the activities of all Jews who responded to the call of their country, it is sufficiently comprehensive to indicate the important part that they played. The total number of Jews in the military and naval service of the United States is estimated at from 165,000 to 200,000, or from four to five per cent of the total personnel of the American forces at the time the armistice was signed. The Jewish element in the general population of the United States is about 3 per cent. The Jews of America have, therefore, according to these figures, contributed at least one-third more than their proportionate share.

This excess is explained by the presence of about 40,000 Jewish volunteers in the service. Other contributing factors were to be found in the more effective operation of the draft system in the thickly populated urban centers of the North and East, which happen also to be the centers of Jewish population, and in the fact that the majority of exemptions on industrial grounds were chiefly in agriculture, mining and in the metal industries, where Jews are not extensively employed.

The files of the Office of Jewish War Records already contain over 100,000 individual records, of which about 80,000 have been minutely classified and tabulated. The number of Jewish commissioned officers so far recorded include 5,162 in the army, 206 in the navy and 40 in the marine corps. It is probable, however, that these numbers will be more than doubled when the record will finally be completed. The highest rank reached by the Jews is that of Brigadier-General in the army and marine corps, and Rear Admiral in the navy.

The readiness of American Jews to fight for their country is shown by the fact that 72 per cent of those in the army were in the combat branches, while in the army as a whole only about 60 per cent were in these branches. Their casualties amount to about 10,000, of whom probably 2,000 were killed in action. Other evidence of the quality of their courage is found in the long list of citations for valor furnished in the report and in the testimony of commanding officers like General Bell, Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesey and Captain Harrigan, who trained the Jewish recruits in camp or led them in action.

"From information now at hand," concludes the report, which is signed by Julian Leavitt, the director, "it has become apparent that the record of Jewish War Service, when fully developed, will demonstrate conclusively that the same qualities which enabled the Jew to survive through the centuries—his capacity to endure, without breaking, prolonged and intense nerve strain; his initiative, his elasticity of mind, his faculty for organization, and, above all, his idealism—have also enabled him to fit himself successfully into a democratic army fighting for world democracy."

RELIGION AT THE FRONT.

Religion is not moribund in the fields of slaughter, on which a peace-loving world looks aghast. The horrors of the evilest of all wars have rekindled faith among combatants and converted skeptics. Chaplains who share the perils of the soldier have not found him scornful of the inspiration of religion or indifferent to its consolations. The soldier who is no more afraid to pray than to fight has the respect of his comrades, even if they do not join him. There may be more skeptics at the rear, but at the front there are more believers. It is the foulest of wars, but soldiers feel that when it is over there will be a quickening of faith, a religious revival that will aid mightily in the perpetuation of peace.—New York Times.

STAND BY THE PRESIDENT.

The President has come back and gone again. It was a flying trip. His absence from the country could not be prolonged unduly. He was needed at home for the transaction of certain business. So he e himself away from the weighty af- 's in the French capital after the ft of the League of Nations consti- ion was read by him to the plenary nference. He knew that he had hieved only a partial success and that ich remained to be done. He came d he told his compatriots whether in en public address or in secret and more intimate council with our legislators what difficulties still lay in his path. hat path and that program is nothing else than the pacification of the world. any one, President Wilson ought to be the best judge of the dangers and catastrophies that may be precipitated if his efforts miscarry. Europe is in a ferment. Elemental forces aiming at anarchy are at work. We are beginning here to realize that Bolshevism is lurking even at our own door. Witness the Congressional Committee wrestling with that subject. We know that it is an imported virus; that it has no foundation in our own life. But the spectre has made its appearance and the ghost will not be laid. It may be that we are a bit too fearful. It behooves us further to remember that in Prussia the socialists multiplied under legal restriction and repression. But in Europe the thing is in the air. From Russia the infection is spreading. To counteract it wisely is to create a new order which will take into account the just demands of the people. The President has made it sufficiently clear that there cannot be a return to the old kind of diplomacy. Those who are at present at the head of the government in many a European country are clearly out of gear with their own people. They cannot and will not comprehend that the world has changed. And in so far as our President has sized up the situation he possesses the levers by means of which to move hardened old diplomats to do his bidding and they give heed to his sane counsel. He has intimated to them in very plain language that they are on the brink of a precipice and if they do not walk warily they will bring on a catalcysm which will engulf all that is precious in European civilization. And here the matter touches us. Were that unfortunate state of affairs to supervene it would mean that we would have to go to war again, and it would be a war far crueler and far more destructive than this world war has been, if at all its losses in life and treasures can be exceeded. All the reason for the provincial minds among ourselves to widen their horizon, to open their eyes, and if perchance they are blind to allow themselves to be guided by the man of vision whom we hail as our chief magistrate. Partisan politics must be hushed. It is not important that this or the other party shall be installed in our government. Fortunately, voices are heard on the other side of the fence, outside the ranks of the now dominant party, supporting the President. To be sure, momentous questions are raised. Some cherished notions will have to be given up. Aye, we reckon with surrendering a measure f our sovereignty. Naturally we must look to iron-bound guarantees that neither in our case nor in any other shall our trust be abused. And we must put those countries which are immediately exposed in a position to defend themselves or we must assure them of our immediate succor. The League of Nations must become a reality, or else the peoples of Europe will rise in their wrath. To avert such a calamity is clearly the high purpose of our President. Stand by him.

THE RETURN TO THE NORMAL.

The reconstruction upon which we are slowly entering cannot be expected to be a return to pre-war conditions on all sides. The war has affected life far too incisively for that. The peace, when it comes, will mean for Europe and for outlying European colonies or dependencies elsewhere a changed map, with new states, and new borders for the older ones; but it will naturally mean more than that. With us right here the changes will not be geographical; but on all lines we shall stumble across new and unwonted vistas, everywhere there is bound to be an adjustment to modified conditions.

For once the United States has stepped out of the provincial routine and outlook of bygone days; it has concerns beyond itself. The profound significance of such momentous transformation we may not essay at this moment to appraise; it will open itself up most fully in the long sequel. But we shall have to deal at the outset with a return to normal life. War is an abnormal occupation. Under the stress and exigencies of the moment the effort is bent upon a successful issue, to strike hard and well. War begets enthusiasm, courage, readiness to all manner of sacrifices. War has taught us economy, the elimination of waste in food and fuel. We have saved even time. Unquestionably before the war there has been unnecessary lavishness in the use of all of these articles. We need not once more become the spendthrifts of old. Yet it is pertinent to ask, Need we make the abnormal conditions incident to the war perpetual? After all, an excessive economy means an excessive exercise of brains to bring it about. Shall a great nation find nothing more profitable to do than to sift the ashes in the cellar to rescue a few pieces of unburned coal? Last summer we beguiled ourselves into believing that 6 o'clock in the morning was 7. Need we do that the coming summer again?

The fallacy of making the abnormal permanent has shown itself in the prohibition measure. If gentlemen persist adorning themselves with wrist watches because on the battlefield they were a necessity, it is a trivial matter. But the thing has its significance because it indicates the inherent inertia of mankind. Readjustment is difficult. Yet it is the normal life and the normal habits that befit peace times, when concentrated camps are no more and the citizens are once more dispersed.

The most obnoxious feature shows itself in our attitude to free speech. That in war times there should have been put a curb on speakers and writers is but natural and right. The individual, as a matter of patriotism, should have been ready to forego some of his inalienable rights. If he forgot himself he deserved the punishment meted out to him. Authority was concentrated. Shall we go on after this fashion? It would seem, again, as if the abrogation of individual liberty was the abnormal, justified for the time being, but wholly unsuited to peace times, when the Constitution should be permitted to exercise its normal functions.

Shall we have vanquished Prussianism only to be conquered by it right here, in this land of the free? Restore, therefore, and that as speedily as possible, the right to speak out one's opinion freely and fearlessly, to criticize those in authority, to remonstrate with misguided legislators. We have lived under a system of checks. It has become ingrained in the make-up of the nation. We fought to make the world safe for democracy. Let us not stifle it in our very midst. Let us above all become the normal beings that we were before we went to war. The task is done. The work of peace is before us. Its tasks are none too light. Let us address ourselves to them with normal brains.

ISRAEL AND WORLD PEACE.

By Edward Chauncey Baldwin, Ph. D.

The prophetic teaching has been signally vindicated in our time, and its truth widely recognized. By the outcome of the great war men's faith has been renewed in a trend toward righteousness working progressively in human history. Men have come to believe, as Isaiah did, that human history, instead of being a mere succession of fortuitous events, in which the race is always to the swift and the battle to the strong, is the working out of a divine plan for the ultimate good of the race. Men have also come to recognize, as Nahum and Habakkuk did in the seventh century B. C., that moral forces are to be reckoned with in the world's administration, that tyranny is suicide, and that they who do not rule in righteousness shall perish from the earth.

With a widespread recognition of the truths the prophets stood for has come about also a practical identity of aim with theirs. An instance of this is the world's longing for permanent peace, which is undoubtedly the most universal desire of men everywhere at the end of the great war. Such a desire was fundamental in Hebrew religious thought. In contrast to other ancient religions—the Egyptian, the East Indian and the Persian—we find, not a dualistic system, not a system based on a warfare between good and evil divinities, but a religion in which the idea of peace was basic. One of the names for God in Israel was Sholem, Peace, and of Him it was said (Ps. 29:11): "He will bless his people with peace," and, "I make peace and create evil" (Is. 45:7). It is significant that the crowning mercy of the priestly blessing (Num. 6:26) was peace. The future golden age, to which the prophets looked forward so hopefully, was to a time of universal peace (Is. 31:17-18), preceded by general disarmament (Is. 11:4). Even the plan for a league of nations finds a precedent in the work of the prophets. The nineteenth chapter of Isaiah, a passage probably belonging to a time considerably later than that of the son of Amoz, contains the suggestion that "in that day," namely, the future golden age, Egypt and Assyria, ancient enemies, shall be united with Israel in a kind of idealized triple entente or holy alliance.

"In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria; and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria; and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land; whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt, my people, and Assyria, the work of my hands, and Israel, mine inheritance."

The whole passage is, of course, symbolic, Egypt and Assyria representing the heathen world, and Israel the mediator of blessing to the earth in fulfillment of the covenant (Gen. 12:2). The road also is a symbol of friendly intercourse, and the three names shared by the three peoples implies that Israel is no longer alone God's people, or His creation, or His inheritance, but that they are all equally His.

The effect upon the world of Hebrew ideals of peace, diffused as they have been by the Scriptures, is quite incalculable. Both in popularizing them, and in making them effective in the world, the authority of the Christian Church has been immensely influential. An instance is the Treua Dei (God's Truce), an institution which originated at the end of the tenth century. At that time the princes and nobles, at the insistence of the church, bound themselves by a solemn vow not only to abstain at certain stated times and seasons from all unlawful feuds, but also to keep the peace with each other, and to protect from violence all defenseless persons—clerics, monks, nuns, women, merchants, pilgrims and tillers of the soil.

Nor have modern Jews failed to maintain the traditions of their race. Again and again have Jews exerted a potent influence towards the maintenance of peace. The first peace conference at The Hague was called by the Czar in 1899, not, it is said, at his own initiative, but as a result of having read a book against war written by a Jew, Jean de Bloch of Warsaw. One of the most active delegates to that Congress was Tobias Asser, a Dutch Jew, a member of the Dutch Council of States, and an authority on international law.

Today the realization of Israel's ancient hope of a league of nations has become the reasonable expectation of mankind. Though the scheme has not yet been worked out in detail, it is certain that there will be an international court to settle all justifiable disputes, and a council to investigate and make recommendations regarding non-justifiable questions. Provision will be made for applying moral, economic and, if need be, military pressure to prevent any nation from breaking the peace of the world without first submitting its case to the international court. All this implies the abolition of secret treaties, of secret diplomacy and the limitation, preparatory to the ultimate abolition, of armaments. Today we may well rejoice that the world will soon enjoy a measurable realization of the long-deferred hope of Israel that He "will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the earth and will make them to lie down safely."

We call attention to the article on the first page of this issue with reference to the care by the B'nai B'rith of Austria of thousands of war orphans and others made orphans by the Polish pogroms.

In view of the fact that the B'nai B'rith has abstained from making any special collections so as not to interfere with the general collections by the American Jewish Relief Committee for war relief work, the report referred to was sent to Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, who has referred the same to the Joint Distribution Committee and we have no doubt that proper relief measures will be taken by that committee.

The Executive Committee of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith has appointed the following to represent the Order at the Peace Conference in Paris:

Dr. Adolphe Stern, of Bucharest, prominent statesman and diplomat; Herbert Bentwich, Esq., a leading attorney and communal worker of London, and the Hon. Julius Kahn, of San Francisco, member of the United States Congress and Chairman of the War Committee of the House of Representatives.

That Committee will co-operate with other Jewish committees in securing equal rights for Jews where such rights are denied them.

JEWISH CONGRESS IN GERMANY.

A Provisional Committee has been formed at Berlin to take in hand the preliminary arrangements for convening an all-German Jewish Congress. All Jews residing in the German states will be permitted to take part in the election of delegates. The committee proposes that the following questions should form the basis of the deliberations: Palestine as a National Home for the Jews; equality for Jews in all countries; national autonomous rights in certain countries; and the abolition of all laws against the immigration of Jews into Germany.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE.

Longfellow's Hiawatha.

Several complaints were received by the Administrative Committee because of the following two lines appearing in a description of the crucifixion of Christ in the poem Hiawatha:

"How the Jews, the tribe accursed, Mocked him, scourged him, crucified him."

After considerable correspondence with the editorial department of the Houghton-Mifflin Co., the following letter was received:

Houghton-Mifflin Co.,
4 Park St., Boston.
March 7, 1919.

Mr. L. Edward Lashman,
1228 Tribune Bldg.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

We have your letter of Feb. 25 in regard to the question of making a change in certain lines of Longfellow's Hiawatha. You probably do not realize the importance which we have always attached to the printing of the poems of our authors without change from the original text. We have always prided ourselves on the fact that the poems were the complete authorized editions, and this was true whether they were for school use in inexpensive editions or in very expensive editions.

For this reason we should hesitate a long time before making a change or an omission in the text of Hiawatha as Longfellow left it. It seems to us almost fundamental that the schools should be able to count on our edition being what the author wrote.

We do not, however, see any objection to inserting such a footnote as you describe, and in the next edition of Hiawatha we will place these words at the bottom of the page, "As a historical fact, Christ was crucified by order of the Roman Governor of Jerusalem." This, we believe, will meet your objection without injuring our traditions.

As a matter of fact, there is, of course, through all literature allusions which reflect on different groups of people. Protestants might object to many things that are said in Hiawatha, and so might Catholics, but any poet is supposed to have a certain amount of poetic license, and we are inclined to feel that this does no substantial injury to anyone.

Yours very truly,
Houghton-Mifflin Co.

Offensive Letter from University Instructor.

An instructor of mathematics in the University of Montana, who had been appointed as assignee for a greenhouse, wrote a most offensive letter to a Jewish attorney who had presented a claim on behalf of one of his clients. This letter was brought to the atention of the president of the university by the attorney. The letter was ignored on the ground that this was not a matter which concerned the university. The secretary of the Administrative Committee then addressed a letter to the university, and the following reply was received:

University of Montana.
Missoula, Feb. 25, 1919.
The State University,
President's Office.

Mr. L. Edward Lashman, Secretary,
Anti-Defamation League,
1228 Tribune Bldg.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

I have just received your letter of the 21st. I have to confess that I cannot take issue with any of the views contained in it, nor can I blame your organization for its existence and its activities.

I assure you that the matter in question has by no means been laid aside or ignored; on the contrary, it will be taken into account most earnestly in determining the general question of the relation of the man concerned to the institution. This question will arise in the near future in the ordinary course of administrative procedure.

Furthermore, I am expecting to have a conference with the staff member concerned in the very near future and this matter will come up and be dealt with at least in a preliminary way.

If I may add one comment on your letter, I would say that letters such as the one sent to Mr. Cederbaum so far from undoing the work of the League are calculated to produce in all fair-minded persons a strong reaction in favor of those who are so wantonly and recklessly maligned.

Furthermore, as a general thing those who indulge in such reckless vituperation of one set of people are pretty sure to indulge in similar expression toward those with whom they find themselves dissatisfied.

I think I can assure you that there is absolutely no danger of any such sentiments being encouraged in our student body. Very truly yours,

E. O. SISSON,
President.

Offensive Resort Advertising

Certain hotels in Pennsylvania saw fit to advertise in their circulars that "Consumptives and Jews are not desired." The Pennsylvania state law prohibits any such advertising, and so steps are being taken to bring suit against the proprietors of these establishments. Honorable Jacob Singer of Philadelphia is conducting the proceedings against these resorts.

Jews and Bolshevism

So many complaints have been received by the office of the Administrative Committee because of the statements repeated again and again in the press that the leaders among the Bolsheviki are Jews that the secretary deems it advisable to announce that steps are being taken to counteract the statement. Several special meetings have been held to discuss the situation. A letter is being sent to the Associated Press refuting the charges and urging the Associated Press to cease mentioning the religion of Bolsheviks, especially when that religion happens to be Jewish.

A most objectionable periodical called the "Anti-Bolshevist" has appeared in Brooklyn. The purpose of the paper, as stated on the title page, is "The defense of American institutions against Jewish-Bolshevist doctrines of Morris Hilquit and Leon Trotzky." The solicitor of the postoffice department of the United States government is considering the advisability of denying this publication the use of the mails.

Princess Radziwill is conducting a series of lectures upon the topic, "Scenes Behind the Russian Throne." She uses this lecture as a means of slandering Jews, and charges Jews with making millions out of the revolution in Russia. An attempt is being made to canced her engagements throughout the country. Washington officials are also being asked to suppress her remarks.

GALICIAN JEWS SUBJECTED TO PERSECUTIONS.

At Craiding, the Jewish community has suffered severely at the hands of the Polish troops. Practically the whole Jewish population is compelled to work in labor battalions. Young girls are forced to wash linen for the troops. Jews are allowed to come to the market only for one hour during the day. Frequently fines are imposed on the community for alleged disregard of rules and restrictions imposed by the commander. Most of the Jewish shops were plundered by the hooligans. On one occasion antisemites reported that they had discovered a machine gun post at the synagogue. Ten Jews were dragged out from the synagogue, and while wrapped in their Tallesin they were taken to a court of inquiry, at which they were finally released.

A national conference of Eastern Galician Jews held at Santislau confirmed the policy of the Jews to maintain strict neutrality between the rival forces of Poland and Ukraine in Galicia.

JEWS IN RUMANIA STILL KEPT IN SUBJECTION.

The Committee of Rumanian Jews have prepared a statement in which they show by facts that the condition of the Jews in Rumania has become much worse since the Germans evacuated the territory. Jews are forbidden to use the railroads and it is a common sight to see Jews evicted from trains while in motion. Riots against Jews are of daily occurrence and murders of Jews are perpetrated without punishment. It is said that Premier Bratiano openly declared that Jews have no place in Rumania and that the sooner they leave the land the better for them. Among the new rules regarding the naturalization of Jews is found one that any Jew who had ever before complained of the existence of anti-Semitism in Rumania should not be granted the right of citizenship.

JEWS' ACTIVITY IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

The Jewish National Council of Czecho-Slovakia is developing great activity in regard to the question of unemployment among Jews. Among the various schemes on foot is a movement to establish Jewish commercial and agricultural co-operative societies. The Council is also taking definite steps to develop Jewish cultural life and to secure adequate representation of the Jews in the Czecho-Slovak National Assembly. Since the arrival of the President, Masaryk, in the country, Jewish affairs are moving more swiftly, as the President, true to the promise, readily recognizes the claims of the Jews as a national minority and takes up a favorable attitude towards them.

Jewish Apologetics

By Dr. Max L. Margol
Written for the B'nai B'rith

A gratifying sign of an awakening to a real need comes from London, where, following upon a lecture on Jewish Apologetics, by one of the instructors at Jews' College, the suggestion was made that the subject should be taught in a systematic manner at that institution. We might add, in the language of the Talmud: The reader of the letter shall be the messenger. But whoever may be appointed to teach the subject, in London or elsewhere, he will find his task arduous indeed. We have had defenders of the Jews and of Judaism from times immemorial. Our entire literature may, in a manner, be regarded as having a defensive purpose. Every agency for spreading Jewish literature may be said to do the work of defense. Furthermore, we have specific works bearing that distinct character, and a whole genre of literature denominated polemical with the literature of disputations as a branch. The late chief rabbi of Vienna wrote a book on Jewish Apologetics, but unfortunately he conceived an all too narrow plan.

Let the lay reader disabuse his mind as if apologetics meant apologizing. We apologize for an offense or defect. That were tantamount to acknowledging that we are in the wrong. Nor does it mean that we are on the defensive except to the extent that we are constantly attacked. No, the science of apologetics need not be so meek at all. The Jew may and does believe that Judaism is the truth, and that the Jew is entitled to proper treatment. But in so far as either position is combated, the need of asserting ourselves becomes manifest. We cannot ignore the enemy's challenge. Moreover, it is not the opponent we wish to convert. In that we may and may not succeed. What we are mainly concerned with is to confirm the Jew in his faith in himself and his God. We live in a minority in the midst of a majority, professing another faith. And just because that religion is an offshoot of our own it makes claims which the parent faith cannot concede. Christianity in one form or another sets itself up as the higher and fuller truth. We send our children to schools in which the teaching force is naturally largely Christian. Subtly but surely the Christian estimate of Jew and Judaism filters through into the soul of the Jew. Hence the supreme need of a counter agent to eradicate the hostile view and to substantiate the Jewish claim.

The old points of conflict may and may not be over. As a matter of fact, they are pretty much the same at all times; they merely take on new forms or new labels. But this much is certain: the old weapons will not do for modern warfare. The other day a student came to me shocked by the reading of a recent book by a Christian professor on the religion of Israel. He had never read a modern Christian book on the subject. It was his first experience. He wished me to pronounce judgment on the merits of the volume. I told him that I did not have to read it; that purporting to be a text-book for ungraduate students, it reproduced other bulkier works, and that the point of view was well known to me. If we were a rich people, financially speaking, I added, we should have both the bulkier volumes and the shorter text-books, written from a Jewish point of view, ready for him to read and to use for steadying him in his old estimates now so rudely shaken. But have we the scholars to produce them? Yes, if some of them could be made to see that the task was worthy of their ability and gave them quite as much standing as the editing of long-lost fragments. Not that that kind of work is not necessary. But the other is a crying need. It is further true that the latter constitutes the far more difficult task. It requires a mature mind. A man must have read up for years on the subject, and, what is more, he must have behind him years of strenuous thinking and wrestling. The defense of Judaism must take in the defense of theism, the belief in God. Pantheism and atheism must be warded off. There is the belief in creation: how square with it evolution? There is the belief in the one God; how about that modern polytheism and the pluralistic philosophies? There is prayer which the psychologists cast overboard. There is the immortal soul which they deny. There is the belief in the election of Israel: what about the higher criticism that brushes it aside? Indeed, we need a Jewish criticism applied to our sacred book, reverent, positive, truthful. Certain old positions need restatement

It is clear that the modern apologete must address himself to the modern requirements. I am far from saying that we have not the men fully abreast of the times. They will say that they do pretty much the work outlined, only in another guise. But precisely herein lies the point. We need a systematic treatment, a definite hour for teaching the subject, and a definite book. This and that part may be fairly and ably handled. We can point to very eminent productions taking up, for example, anti-Semitic calumnies. But even these treat the subject hardly in that exhaustive manner which alone can make the defense effective. Breadth of view and a vast erudition are the primary requisites. And let me also add that the future author of a Jewish apologetics will not be a man writing from seclusion in a cloistral study. It requires a man in touch with the throbbing life. The rabbi unfortunately is too much engrossed in practical pastoral work. That indeed is his function and glory. Each and every sermon of his is in a measure apologetic, serving to confirm and to hold the Jew. The man most eminently fitted for the task ought to be the professor of homiletics, he who teaches the future rabbis how to preach, who more than any other teacher enters into personal relation with his students, is acquainted with their doubts and misgivings, who therefore must necessarily compass all the various points that go to make up a rounded and all-sided defense of Judaism. From that corner we may hope yet some day to see the book emerge. Let it first be written on the most comprehensive scale. Let it be a bulky work of several volumes. And let the same man issue at the same time the shorter popular work which I am certain many will hail with delight.

THE NEED OF PRAYER.

By Rabbi Leon Harrison, St. Louis.

Dear friends, old friends, companions now for many years together, how much we need to pray. How far we have drifted away from the sweet old fashion of our childhood; how far our children have wandered from the lovely habits of the households in which we spoke our childish prayers at our mother's knee, and our father laid his hand upon our youthful head and taught us how to pray. Are you teaching your little ones as you were taught? Are you leading them into this sweet and tender relationship to God?

There is not one of us that can dispense with prayer. When the day dawns and the sunset fades, and when we lie down to our rest at night, shall we not lift up the voice of prayer to God? Shall we take from His lavish hands all the bounties of this life and not utter the sound of thanksgiving? Shall we not pour out our hearts before Him, and pray to Him for our welfare and the welfare of our little ones, of our beloved?

Ah, my friends, come not here to listen to admonitions however earnest, or to studied speech. Come into the House of God to pray to Him. This is an age that needs to pray, for it has almost forgotten prayer. We are so carried away by frivolity and selfish indulgence that even when we enter the doors of the Sanctuary we are apathetic, we are silent. We forget the greatest of all spiritual forces, the highest joy, the supreme consolation, the worship that joins men together by the yearnings of the human soul and brings them close to God.

ANTI-SEMITIC CAMPAIGN IN AUSTRIA

Commenting on the resolutions of protest recently passed by the Jews of Vienna against the anti-Semitic agitation in the country, the "Frankfurter Zeitung" says: "It would certainly be better if the anti-Jewish activities could be concealed from the world along with other manifestations of war psychology. But the manifesto of Austrian Jewry shows that the evil has assumed too large dimensions for concealment, and that there exists a well organized campaign which can only be combated successfully in the light of publicity. In reality, the root of the trouble is the old device of unscrupulous officials, to divert the public bitterness from themselves to the ever-ready scapegoat, the Jews. In Austria, great bitterness is felt against the officials who are held responsible for the failure of the food supply and for all the misfortunes of the war. One can understand the efforts of those against whom this bitterness is directed to divert it elsewhere. But it is inexcusable that well-known clergymen should preach Jew hatred openly from the pulpit, and that anti-semitic prejudice should everywhere be allowed free play, especially in the army. . . . The war, and the misery arising from it, have shockingly weakened the public morale, and the impotence of the authorities has prevented the degeneracy from being checked in time. But no words can be strong enough to condemn the device to which they are now resorting in order to save their own skins."

JEWISH WELFARE BOARD

Specially Prepared for the B'nai B'rith News

Bringing Home the Victors.

(The story of one month's work of the Jewish Welfare Board for returning soldiers, at home and overseas.)

The plans and efforts of the Jewish Welfare Board, the re-adjustment and comfort of the returning soldier, which, for two months or more, were in a vague state of crystallization, are now assuming definite shape. With expansion of the spheres of service the Jewish Welfare Board is meeting the rapidly changing situations, and is preparing each soldier and sailor for his return to civilian life.

"Continuity of Service"—from the embarkation camp to the transport, across the Atlantic, to the debarkation camp and hospital, to the demobolization camp and then to the community—is the plan which has been developed during the last few weeks.

One hundred Jewish Welfare Board men and women lay workers and chaplains are now in France, carrying out the overseas program of the continuous service plan. Half of these workers sailed within the last month and assisted at the opening of new centers throughout France, to carry a message of good cheer, and to relieve the home-hunger of the boys who had been away for many months. Twelve Jewish Welfare Board centers, eleven of which were recently opened, are in full swing, with canteens, at which hot chocolate, tea, cake and cookies and cigarettes are served free of charge to all men in uniform, with dances, entertainments and educational classes, to fill the leisure of the waiting Americans. The Jewish Welfare Board centers are at Paris, Tours, Le Mans, St. Nazaire, Dijon, Alencon, Coblenz, Bordeaux, Brest, St. Aignon, Accomey and Spur Camp. The National office has shipped to France 15,408 books and magazines for distribution among American troops.

Jewish Welfare Board Hut, Seward Park, N. Y.

Colonel Harry Cutler, chairman of the Jewish Welfare Board, recently sailed overseas to supervise the extension of the welfare program. He will tour Italy, the Rhine regions, Switzerland and England, as well as France, visiting the Army of Occupation, and American embarkation centers, to ascertain how the "spheres of service" may further be extended. Mortimer L. Schiff, chairman of the Jewish Welfare Board's Finance Committee, who has just returned from France, authorized the purchase of 100,000 pounds of matzoths to be distributed among Jewish boys overseas on the coming Passover.

So that no link may be dropped out of the chain of service, a decision has been made to place one Jewish Welfare Board worker abroad each home-bound transport and fifty transport workers were recruited in a campaign recently conducted from National Headquarters. The Jewish Welfare workers on shipboard conduct Friday evening services, arrange entertainment, and perform a variety of personal service for the soldier and members of the crew.

Headquarters of the transport service have been opened at Hoboken, N. J., where a majority of the transports dock. A roomy Jewish Welfare Board building, directly opposite the piers, recently opened its doors for "all men and women in uniform." Each transport, as it docks, is met by a group of Jewish Welfare Board workers, distributing postal cards, with notification of the safe arrival of the soldier, clean, khaki colored handkerchiefs, cigarettes and religious articles. The Jewish Welfare workers look after the personal needs of the men, taking written and telephone messages and providing for their comfort in a variety of ways.

Before the steamer Northland recently docked at Philadelphia the Jewish Welfare Board branch in that city sent a "Welcome Home" wireless to the commander of the ship. Sixteen hundred packages of cigarettes, matches, chewing gum, hard candy and handkerchiefs were distributed among the men and telegrams sent free of charge to their parents.

The Canal Zone Branch of the Jewish Welfare Board has adopted a plan of meeting each transport of American, Australian and New Zealand troops passing through the Panama Canal, extending hospitality to Jewish soldiers aboard them.

When the soldier has reached ports and is sent to one of the big debarkation camps, such as Camp Mills or Camp Merritt he is shown the proof behind the Jewish Welfare Board's "Welcome Home." At Camp Mills an information service has just been inaugurated, which gives detailed information about railroads and hotels. Other facilities are provided him (free of charge whenever necessary) for telephoning, telegraphing, writing home and traveling there on a short furlough. The Jewish Welfare Board man at the debarkation camp goes into the barracks to greet the arriving men and provides them with spiritual comfort, entertainment and material necessities.

The last days before discharge are the most difficult for the soldier and the welfare worker. But the importance of filling the soldier's mind and his time are duly realized by the Jewish Welfare Board. Three entertainment units toured the country during the last month, giving performances in every demobilization camp. At least thirty-five shows, consisting principally of vaudeville numbers, are sent out each week by the entertaining division at national headquarters. Charles Jaffee, international chess champion, toured the camps, giving instructions and exhibitions in the game of chess. Dances, entertainments and boxing bouts or wrestling matches, motion picture shows, etc., are being arranged nightly by the camp representatives.

The matter of education has been more thoroughly developed during the last few weeks than previously. Following the successful agricultural school conducted by the Jewish Welfare Board at Camp Travis, Texas, came a one week's intensive commercial course in business organization, salemanship, finance, trade prospects and reconstruction, for which more than five hundred soldiers registered.

Classes in vocational training are given at Pelham Bay Naval Station, and in addition arrangements are being made with a prominent Eastern College to give evening extension courses at the Naval Base. Camp Mills has a Jewish Welfare Board school for two colored troops stationed there permanently.

In the important problem of re-employment of the returned soldier, many steps have been taken. The Branches of the B'nai B'rith and the Y. M. H. A. throughout the country have agreed to act as agencies of the Jewish Welfare Board and the United States Employment Bureau, and to open employment bureaus throughout the country. All of the Jewish Welfare Board's branches have been active in the matter of re-employment. From the Canal Zone came the report that jobs are being found for men with the Panama Canal and Panama Railway. The Jewish Welfare Board Branch at Mobile, Ala., offered to find jobs at Mobile for men discharged from service. The excellent co-operation of the Jewish Welfare Board's community branches has rendered the work most efficacious. Conferences of community and camp representatives of the Jewish Welfare Board in the Central and Southeastern states were recently held at Chicago and Atlanta, respectively, and problems of reconstruction and demobilization discussed.

Not only supplementing the camp work in the matter of employment, but in that of providing recreation and home hospitality for soldiers and sailors, the community has proved its usefulness. The New York City branch of the Jewish Welfare Board distributed over five thousand free theatre tickets to men in uniform this month. Hospital social service has in a large measure been undertaken by community branches, who supply delicacies and various comforts to convalescent soldiers. Dr. H. H. Slobin, of the University of Minnesota, recently completed a tour of government hospitals for the Jewish Welfare Board to ascertain how the organization could best render service. A new J. W. B. Building has just been opened in connection with the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington, D. C. A large sight-seeing bus takes wounded soldiers on a tour of Washington each Sunday.

Although the last month has been one of marked progress for the Jewish Welfare Board, it is planning for still greater usefulness. Furloughs have been obtained for Jewish soldiers and sailors for Passover, and elaborate preparations are being made for its observance under the Board's auspices. Purim will be a time of festivity in all of the Jewish Welfare Board centers in camp, community and overseas. In addition the Jewish Welfare Board has undertaken a registry of all Jewish men in the service of this country, with record of their achievements and citations to facilitate the work of the American Jewish Committee in securing a permanent war record of American Jewry.

NOTES UPON SOCIAL SITUATION

cannot remain the only country in the world where the Jewish question still awaits a just solution. They go still further and are ready to admit that this question must be settled in a generous fashion without any petty mental reservations. But they also know that the ruling class in Roumania to which they belong and upon which they are completely dependent and which rules and will rule Roumania is opposed to a just and radical solution of the question.

That is the decisive factor both for them and for us.

In my "Memorandum on the modality of solving the Jewish question," which I sent you eight or nine months ago I made the following remarks which I now take occasion to quote:

"For those who know the situation in Roumania there can be no doubt that should the Jewish question come up for discussion after the war the opponents of emancipation will raise an agitation in comparison with which all former ones will appear as child's play. And who will be called upon to forcibly suppress this agitation? The same parties, the same men who were declared opponents of the smallest concession to the Jews before the war. The social composition of the Rouamnian nation makes a revolution like the Russian one an impossibility. The classes which have governed Roumania will govern her again after the war. Moreover, Roumania has no reserve of leaders and politicians to replace the present governing class. The emancipation of the Jews would be entrusted, therefore, to men who before the war were known as passionate and irreconcileable opponents of emancipation—many of them the deadly enemies of the Jews."

What I said eight or nine months ago holds good for today. We do not believe in the possibility of any alteration of the system in Roumania or consequently any change in the mentality of the officials and the ruling classes. Unfortunately, the Roumanian nation, unlike others, has no reserve of political leaders capable of changing the regime. That is one of the most conspicuous features which mark the state of things in Roumania. The former propertied classes will, therefore, rule again after the war and will try to continue their old narrow-minded policy of racial nationalism and racial persecution as far as our question is concerned.

The Naturalization Act passed by Mr. Marghiloman's former government gave us lately during the last few months a characteristic example of their incorrigibility. A few weeks ago I sent you documents which clearly prove the whole hostile attitude of the Roumanian officials towards the law. It is shown that in spite of the war the Roumanians have learnt nothing and forgotten nothing. The old order of things remains, the same ideas, customs and administrative obstinacy remain. The officials, judges and officers, etc., who are legally called upon to take part in the administration of the Act have immediately adopted a hostile anti-Jewish attitude. The same malevolence still predominates and the same spirit of obstruction which leads to all kinds of subterfuges and distortions of the law. Every magistrate interprets the law as he pleases, and naturally not in favor of the Jews. Let it be observed that these happenings took place last October. In consequence of the latest events this law will certainly have been annulled—which would not be regrettable—but the short space of time when it was in force gave new food for conviction—although we Roumanian Jews need no proof to acquire such convictions—that the Roumanian officials have not changed their attitude. As regards public opinion in Roumania, the reports of the threats of pogroms which I sent you will give you an idea of its state. I could give many other proofs, not merely concerning the Jewish question, to show you, that nothing has changed in Roumania. However, the example of the Naturalization Act is convincing enough and it would be superfluous to quote other documents.

This state of things is well known to Mr. Take Jonescu and other politicians who have declared themselves in favor of our complete emancipation. They know very well that they are powerless to force a solution which would call forth a violent antisemitic agitation or which, should a law be passed, would bring in its train the whole obstructive force of the machinery of administration. They are, therefore, afraid for their own political position. That explains why Mr. Take Jonescu declared to a deputation of the Alliance Israelite in Paris on Nov. 13 last that he was in favor of a solution by the international peace conference. Besides, Mr. Take Jonescu is not the only Roumanian politician who prefers foreign intervention in order to achieve a solution of the Jewish question. There are indeed some who have recommended us to go abroad to work for such intervention because they are of opinion that only strong pressure from abroad will secure a just and satisfactory solution. Not even the fact that "foreign interference in the internal affairs of the country" would be regarded as a national humiliation or other similar scruples were able to restrain Mr. Take Jonescu—as indeed similar reasons have never restrained other Roumanian politicians either—from wishing for a solution of the Jewish question to be forced upon Roumania from abroad. Therefore I have never ceased repeating that even the most favorable statements of Roumanian statesmen—however valuable they may be—can certainly not be accepted as substitutes for genuine guarantees.

The consequence to be drawn from this is that the only possible solution of our question would be one effected by the peace conference in its treaties. It would have to be guaranteed at the same time. There is no doubt that Roumania will accept entirely and en bloc all treaties which concern her and ratify them by means of the Constitutional Chambers (Constituents) which will meet immediately after the final conclusion of peace. In that way our question will be settled finally and forever.

It must be understood that the articles relating to our question which are to be incorporated in the peace treaty must be drawn up with the greatest care and attention so as to avoid any possibility of wrong and arbitrary interpretation by the Roumanian authorities. As I have already remarked to you, the formula proposed by Mr. Take Jonescu to the deputation of the Alliance is not only completely unsatisfactory, but it defines and guarantees nothing.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, Feb. 18, 1919.

One effect of the war has been to put people's nerves on edge. This is hardly surprising when it is remembered how much suffering has had to be endured by all sections of the population, how many hardships have had to be borne, and what a strain has been put on tempers. The result may be seen in the general querulousness all over Europe, in the tendency to magnify little things, in the industrial unrest and the political dissatisfaction. We are in a transition period, and it will take some time before the world settles down to the new conditions.

What holds good of the greater world is true also of the smaller world of Anglo-Jewry. We are restless and quarrelsome and critical. For one thing, the community is divided into two camps—the Zionists and their opponents. There is much squabbling over little things. The opponents, organized in the League of British Jews, cry out incessently that the Jews are only a religious community. Some of their prophets are characterized by narrowness of outlook, giving the impression that they must be living in the mid-Victorian age. The criticism of the League naturally calls forth replies from the Zionists, and these, in turn, spur on the League. From many points of view it is a tragedy to see Anglo-Jewry disrupted. More than ever is union called for now. Yet nowhere is there a voice calling for a united front. The political differences are not without effect on the religious differences. Religious differences were always to be found among English Jews, but it was their pride that at any rate in other directions they formed a united community. This is no longer true. The political agreements in the past held in check the religious differences. We tried to tolerate each other's views. Today champions of orthodoxy slash out at the teachers of reform, and the protagonists of reform in defending their standpoint smite hard at Orthodoxy.

Meanwhile the community is drifting. There seems to be no aim, no policy, no program. What is termed in London "the West End" is striving to better the conditions of the East End. But the West End itself needs healing. Both "Ends" require to be educated in Jewish history and Jewish ideals. The children cry for spiritual bread, yet the communal bodies spend time in wrangling about trifles. Here is the Board of Deputies solemnly discussing whether or not to allow money-lenders to become members, and deciding in the end that they were Kosher enough. There are the "Elders" of the Spanish and Portuguese Congregation wrangling as to how Dr. Gaster, their spiritual chief until December 31 last, should be called up to the Sepher. The Great Council in their wisdom has decreed that Dr. Gaster should be summoned to stand forth by the title of "Harab Ribi" in place of the title he enjoyed before, viz.: "Haham Hashalem." Peoples are in travail; kingdoms are being born; the fate of the world is being settled. Yet there was "Harab Ribi" being weighed in the balance with "Haham Hashalem."

It is refreshing to turn from this pettiness—temporary, let us hope—to the last meting of the lodge. A number of earnest people set forth before an audience that seemed to care greatly their reasoned views on what is usually termed "Communal Reconstruction," or as the Chief Rabbi preferred to call it, "Communal Construction." Religion, social work and charity, and education all received attention, and plans for amendment were propounded with zeal, earnestness and even passion. It was one of the best meetings the lodge has organized for quite a long time, and if the audience left the gathering with their thoughts astir, that was something. But it may even lead to action. It is in this way that the lodge serves as a clearing house for ideas.

Sir Stuart Samuel was one of those who participated in the discussion at the lodge meeting, and he was distinctly optimistic as to the future. Sir Stuart was right. Out of all the conflicts and restlessness, out of all the uncertainty and drifting will one day emerge a sound communal system worthy of a great community with great traditions. One of these is its charity. The stream has not subsided. The Jewish Orphans' Institution at Northwood is appealing for funds; the Jewish Historical Society desires to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation by raising £1,000. They will none of them fail. The Hospital Sunday returns tell a similar tale. This year's total collection in places of worship for the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund amounted to some £43,000. The largest was contributed by the Church of England, viz.: £33,000; the second by the Jews, viz.: £1,965. The Jews, be it remembered, are among the smallest communities in London, and the distinction is exceedingly pleasing to record.

The latest movement in the English Zionist Camp is the tendency to fusion on the part of the Mazrachi party. It is of good omen that all shades of Zionist opinion should be united, and strictly orthodox leaders have shown true statesmanship in their policy. It is a remarkable fact that both extremes in Anglo-Jewry—the Orthodox wing on the one side and the Reform body on the other—should be most active and alert. They are ever ready to support new movements; they show signs of life. It is the middle group, which includes the great mass of Anglo-Jewry, that seems to be in a semi-moribund condition. The very fact that the "Mizrachi" Zionists should have decided to join forces with the main body is evidence of their vitality. So far as the main body is concerned, there is not quite as much optimism as there was some time back. More and more the difficulties in Palestine became apparent. There is the great question of the government of the country. Under whose jurisdiction will it be placed? What will be the constitution? What the position of the Arabs? And even when these questions have been satisfactorily decided, what of the immigration into Palestine? Will it be necessary to limit the stream? Will the great mass of the immigrants be Yiddish-speaking, and will there be a tendency, therefore, for the dominant culture to be Yiddish in character? Inherently there would not be any serious objection to this result, but after all the idea is to make Hebrew the culture of Palestine. These questions indicate sufficiently how much the whole problem bristles with difficulties. They show, too, what paramount need there is for wise statesmanship. But success will in the long run crown the efforts of those who are working to make Palestine once more Erez Yisrael. Only the way will be long and difficult; and here as in all cases the reality differs so considerably from the idealized expectation.

Meanwhile the Zionist and other Jewish leaders are busy in Paris, and it is to be hoped that the great assembly in the French capital which is so sympathetic to national aspirations will look with favor on the demands of the Jews, demands which may surely rank equally with those of the Ruthenians, the Czecho-Slovaks or the Poles. At least the Jewish demands are not sullied by blood as are, let us say, those of the Poles. It is a thousand pities that the regeneration of New Poland should be associated in history, as it inevitably will be, with cruelty and murder. Whatever the rights or wrongs of the Poles may be, their pogroms were inexcusable.

Mr. Israel Cohen, who reached Poland in safety, has already reported on what he has seen and heard, and his story, even if discounted to a great extent, still leaves much which is damnable. But, really, there is no need to discount any part of his evidence, which is so circumstantial that it convinces by its very directness. The world had good reason to hope and expect that with the cessation of hostilities bloodshed would cease. But no; the process continued, and the Jews (one cannot help adding, as usual) were the victims. It is an extraordinary fact, not always easy to explain, that when a wave of reaction sweeps over a people the Jews suffer. Is Bolshevism rampant? The Jews are to blame. True, there are Jews who are active Bolshevists. But then other races also have their Bolshevists, and besides there are Jews who are extreme conservatives. If Marx was a Jew, so was Lord Beaconsfield. If Trotsky is a Jew, so was Jesus of Nazareth. Why then should the race be blamed for its individuals? Perhaps the League of Nations will mend matters in this respect. Or possibly the proposed League of Religions.

The idea of a League of Religions emanated from the Jewish Peace Society in London. "We look to the League of Nations to guarantee the peace of the world. What is to guarantee the League of Nations?" So the Jewish Peace Society wrote, and answered the question in these terms. "A League of Nations needs, as its spiritual counterpart, a League of Religions."

The League of Religions, the League of Nations and the Jews have all alike suffered a loss by the death of Sir Mark Sykes. An intrepid traveler, a mature diplomatist and a man of an exceeding fine imagination, Sykes was one of the best friends of the proposal for the setting up of Erez Yisrael in Palestine. He was a great attraction at any Jewish meeting; indeed, it is said that his best speeches were delivered on Zionist platforms. He was most enthusiastic on the question of re-establishing in the East a center of high civilization. That was his reason for supporting the proposal of the Jerusalem University, from which he hoped great things.

Two wealthy Jews came into prominence recently in this country. Lord Michelham was one; he died, and his ample fortune was the subject of comment in the press. Curiously enough, though married to a non-Jewess, he was buried with Jews; and though his younger son was brought up in the Christian faith, the elder was nominally a member of the Synagogue. Indeed, this same son, who has succeeded to the title, is married to a non-Jewish lady, yet he intends to retain his membership of the Synagogue to which his father belonged.

The other Jew of prominence who has lately come into the public eye is Sir Ernest Cassel, another of those marginal-racial Jews, curious types of our modern civilization. Sir Ernest is one of the wealthiest financiers in London. But he has no children left, and he has decided to set apart a considerable sum of money in trust for the purpose of furthering the education of the working classes. To further education at all is a fine ideal. To make the working classes the beneficiaries of the scheme was even finer. The Workers' Educational Association is one of those pioneer bodies in England which is spreading the light of knowledge among adults. It is non-sectarian and non-party; it loves and imparts knowledge for the sake of knowledge. Hitherto it has been hampered for lack of funds; Sir Ernest Cassel's Trust specially mentions the Workers' Educational Association. Incidentally be it noted that the association has supporters and helpers among Jews.

Last month a Jewish "Hut" was opened in the Strand. Jewish and non-Jewish soldiers and sailors will be welcomed in it, and it is a fine sight to see over the building the Mogen David and the "Red Triangle" of the Y. M. C. A. Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Monash presided, and spoke in a most impressive fashion of the work which it was intended the hut should do. Two other speeches deserve notice. Colonel Henriques said that General Monash was regarded as being a man who helped to uplift the name of Jew throughout the world; and Mr. L. P. Jacobs, to whose generosity the hut was due, declared that proud as he was to be a fellow-citizen of the general's (both come from Australia), he was still prouder of being a fellow-Jew. If General Monash remains in London the community is likely to take steps to honor this distinguished co-religionist.

At its last meeting the lodge elected its officers for the ensuing year. Dr. Samuel Daiches was chosen vice-president, and he is too well known to the Brethren to need any introduction, especially as he has already been Honorary Foreign Secretary. Bro. S. de Haas will be the new treasurer, and the best that can be said of Brother de Haas is that he loves his fellow-man. His energetic activities for the welfare of the Jewish Friendly societies in England deserve all praise, and we are glad that he has come forward to help to guide the destination of the London lodge during the current year. As General Honorary Secretary the lodge has chosen Bro. S. Newman, and this appointment is specially pleasing because Brother Newman is one of the younger and newer members. We are confident that he will adorn the office he holds; his training and ability mark him out as a man above the average. A word of thanks, too, is also due to the past president, Brother Spiers, who accepted the offer of the lodge to be its guide, counsellor and friend at a time when the world was out of joint, and the future seemed uncertain. At least Brother Spiers will have the satisfaction of knowing that he was the First Peace President, even though only two months of peace were part of his span of office.

The fifty-sixth annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 4, attended by more than 125 delegates from [illegible] Western states, opened its three-day session in San Francisco on Sunday morning, Feb. 16, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building, devoting itself to the consideration of a diversity of matters of vital importance to Western Jewry.

President Richard E. Gutstadt called the convention to order. After calling of roll, initiation of the new members of the Grand Lodge and appointment of various committees, President Gutstadt read his annual message wherein he reviewed the work of the year and the progress of the District. He made a number of recommendations, chief among which were the following:

1. That a special standing committee of the Grand Lodge be appointed to assist in finding employment for members of the Order obtaining their discharge from the military service.
2. That an extensive program of Americanization work be carried on throughout the district for the benefit of Jewish immigrants.
3. That a circular letter be sent four times a year to every subordinate lodge in the district to keep all members conversant with the work of the General Committee.
4. That patriotic affairs be held at every opportunity and that patriotism be featured as largely as possible in all lodge work.

After the reading of the message special committees were named to consider the recommendations.

The Sunday afternoon session was devoted to memorial services. Rabbi Martin A. Meyer, recently returned from Red Cross service overseas, delivered a glowing eulogy for the late Otto Irving Wise, Past Grand President, and Cantor Reuben R. Rinder, of Temple Emanu-El, conducted the service.

At the Monday session resolutions were passed to prepare unified laws for the Ladies' Auxiliaries. Resolution was passed endorsing the effort made by the American Jewry to establish equal civil and religious rights for Jews throughout the world.

Resolution was also adopted to appoint a committee to find employment for returned soldiers and sailors.

The program of Americanization as recommended by President Gutstadt was referred to the newly elected President with suggestion that the same be fully carried out.

It was further resolved that the President of the District Grand Lodge, or one of the Vice-Presidents, should visit every Lodge of the District at least once a year.

Nomination and election of officers took place on Tuesday, with the following result: President, Milton Meyer, of San Francisco; First Vice-President, Louis M. Mendelsohn, of Fresno; Second Vice-President, Milton Schwartz, of Oakland; Secretary, I. J. Aschheim, of San Francisco; Treasurer, Joseph Goldsmith, of San Francisco; Members of the General Committee: Abraham Jonas, Edmund Tauszkey, Isadore Golden, Harry Wolff, A. J. Schragge, Joseph Goldsmith.

President Meyer appointed as Grand Orator, Edgar C. Levy, of San Francisco, and A. C. Miller was appointed District Deputy and A. Bernstein Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee for the Portland District.

The ladies of the visiting delegates were entertained at Hotel St. Francis on Tuesday, under the auspices of the local Ladies' Auxiliaries. On Monday evening a whist party was given at B'nai B'rith Hall for the delegates and their wives, members of the Ladies' Auxiliaries acting as hostesses.

HOPE LODGE, STOCKTON, CALIF.

Richard E. Gutstadt, Grand President of District Grand Lodge; Milton Meyer, First Grand Vice-President; Harry K. Wolff, Past Grand President, and I. J. Aschheim, Grand Secretary, paid an official visit to Hope Lodge No. 126, of Stockton, Calif., at a meeting of the Lodge held on Feb. 19, 1919. They were joined there by Louis Mendelsohn, of Fresno, Second Grand Vice-President, who came especially for the meeting. A class of twenty-two candidates was initiated and addresses were made by the isiting Grand Lodge officers.

NINE J. W. B. CENTERS IN FRANCE

The Jewish Welfare Board has announced the opening of nine centers for American soldiers in France. In addition to a clubhouse in Paris, the Jewish Welfare Board centers are located at Le Mans, St. Nazaire, Dijen, Alencen, Bordeaux, Tours, Brest and Coblenz. Other club houses are being opened.

The Jew as a Dramatic Problem

By John Corbin, in the New York Times

"The worst thing that can happen to any woman," said a caustic observer, "is to capitalize herself and pose as a problem." The saying was recalled at "The Little Brother" and again at "The Gentile Wife," though the application was somewhat different. Of course, Woman is a problem; and so also, no doubt, is the Jew. But in both cases, it would seem, the result of posing the problem is exaggeration and futility. Is is possible that the wrongs of an entire sex, or of an entire race, can be capitalized in a single life, or in a single play?

Something of the sort was attempted by no less a dramatist than Lessing in "Nathan the Wise." The religions of Christ, of Mahomet, and of Jehovah are represented in a Templar, a Sultan and a rich merchant; and the three are brought into a conflict that is, at least potentially, dramatic.

Lessing does not untie the Gordian knot, or even cut it. His solution is the famous parable of the three rings, the meaning of which is that a man may serve God nobly in any religion. Instead of a particular revelation he gives us philosophy. But it is obvious, or it should be so, that if a man can serve God adequately in any religion he can have full faith in none. The philosophy of tolerance is in harmony with the strongest and most progressive modern thought, but this is possible only because in modern thought the pristine spirit of the great historic religions is dead.

The dilemma is a harsh one, and we do not often permit ourselves to face it squarely. But to our forefathers of only a few centuries ago it was as present and vivid as the great war has been to us. We have seen one nation set out to conquer its neighbors and to impose upon them its so-called kultur. To a man we resisted, suffering and dying by millions and tens of millions. I say that we resisted to a man, for the creature who proposed neutrality or compromise was no man, but a traitor and a pacifist.

Yet in the religious wars of old the thing at stake was far greater than any question of autocracy and free institutions. For those who accepted the "true" faith, life on earth was a beatitude, eternity a bliss; while to those who denied the true faith, or who, for any reason, failed to embrace it, life was a sin, and death an eternity of the most hideous torture. If you believed this, dear brother, as your fathers believed it, would you not slay those who sought to impose a different religion upon you—slay them with as good a heart as our young men of late killed Germans? And would you not regard the philosopher of tolerance as a viler thing than the man who, while the life and honor of his country were at stake, preached pacifism?

In "The Little Brother" we have two of Lessing's trio—a Rabbi and a Bishop of the Russian Church. There is even a touch of Lessing's symbolism, for it transpires that the two are brothers. And the "little" brother, impersonated by Tyrone Power, towers several feet above the Rabbi of Walker Whiteside—a symbolic touch which may or may not have been intended. The Bishop at least is strong in his ancient faith, for in the old country he instigated a pogrom against the Rabbi's people, and, when charged with the act now, justifies it. If the Rabbi is less militant in his belief, he is apparently no less convinced of its unalterable truth. His daughter falls in love with the ward of the Bishop and secretly marries him. We are even introduced to the offspring of their union. And what is the upshot? The symbolism of the title seems to indicate a philosophy of tolerance, and the Rabbi has a speech at the close which resembles, at least superficially, Nathan's speech of the rings. Yet he does not abate the fervor of his faith, and the Bishop is rigidly austere to the end. In the drama as drama there is no reconciliation. The play, in short has led us gayly up a blind alley, with the result that we break our kneecaps against a dead wall. To the man of real faith in either religion Jew is Jew and Gentile is Gentile; and never these twain shall meet.

That they do meet in actual life—marry, in fact, and beget children—is obvious even in "The Little Brother." But it is equally obvious that when this happens there is, at least for the parties to the marriage, no longer any real question of opposing religions.

In "The Gentile Wife" Rita Wellman has had the good sense to ignore the question of religion and make the struggle one of race merely. To grasp the terms of this problem we do not have to hark back to Russia and to the Middle Ages; they exist all about us today. And there is no blind alley here. The way may be narrow and rough, or it may be broad and smooth, but multitudes of people will travel it as long as our nation endures.

Yet the problem of race is probably as hard to deal with—perhaps harder—than the problem of religion. A man who has achieved tolerance for another faith has already stepped outside of his own. He may be a professing Christian or a performing Jew, but he no longer believes, with the fathers of his religion, that people of the opposing faith are condemned to eternal agony. Race feeling is less easily escaped—certainly less often! It lies as deep as any creed and is far subtler, more unconscious, more compelling. Many men who are spaciously tolerant in religion still cherish race prejudice as something in the nature of a virtue.

A playwright is limited, moreover, by the fact that of necessity he knows and feels more of one side of the problem than of the other. A humorist has suggested that if bear hunters were really sportsmen they would relate their adventures from the point of view of the bear. In the drama of race conflict there are hunter and hunted—and only one of them is author of the play.

"The Gentile Wife" is a bear story told by the bear. The hero, David, is a paragon of modesty, intelligence, and family affection. But the heroine is a creature of insufferable superiority, bland truculence, and ingrowing egotism.

The contemporary drama knows only one woman as monstrous, the heroine of "The Unchastened Woman"—also the portrait of a Gentile by a Jew. How David could ever have loved and married this monster passes comprehension. The fact that he took her to live with his people in their country house belies every claim which the author makes for him as a man of sense. The villain of the drama, also a Gentile, is painted in equally lurid colors—an insolent egotist and unpalliated sensualist. He seduces the wife of his host, who is also his professional colleague, without even pretending that he loves her. Perhaps the best index of the character of both Gentiles is the fact that when they find themselves in the wrong in their treatment of David their first instinct is to turn upon him and spit out "You Jew"!

In only one way have these portraits any possible significance as to the question of race; they indicate the extent to which it may warp and embitter the numerically inferior people. There is, to be sure, a third Gentile who is represented as normally decent; but the character is drawn with only an attempt at fairness, being utterly shadowy and ineffectual. The tendency of the play, in so far as it has any tendency, is identical with Punch's advice to people of any sort who are about to marry—Don't!

To justify any such message, obviously, the forces of character in conflict would have to be much more equitably balanced—both Jew and Gentile being granted the defects of their qualities, the qualities of their defects. Yet even so it may be doubted whether the final verdict would be different. This is not because the Gentile is worse than the Jew, or better. It is because there is no such thing as "the Gentile" or "the Jew." Where religious and social liberties exist race ceases to be a problem of peoples and becomes a personal problem, a problem of individual character.

Many inter-racial marriages will doubtless prove as disastrous as that in "The Gentile Wife". That some few are happy and successful is obvious to any one who knows contemporary life; and it is scarcely less certain that their number must increase with the passing of the generations. Meanwhile, to capitalize the situation and pose it as a problem capable of any generalized conclusion is as false morally as it is dramatically futile.

It is a curious fact, and perhaps significant, that both plays ring truest in their minor and incidental characters. The shadchen of "The Little Brother" verges upon caricature, but to me at least it was the freshest and most illuminating feature of the play. The Jewish mother-in-law of "The Gentile Wife" is a character creation of the very first order, unmistakably real in every trait, warmly human in every fibre. As played by that very rare artist, Vera Gordon, it is an unalloyed delight.

Why should not all the characters in such plays be presented with equal detachment and impartiality? Why should not the playwright abandon his armament against big game and say to us: "I have nothing to tell you about religion, society, nor yet about comparative races. I am no bear hunter, but an observer of mankind. Here are a lot of Jews and Gentiles; life throws them into such and such relations and conflicts, and the result is so and so. All I want is to interest you in their story, make you know them as I do. At most let us hope there is truth in what the French say, that to understand is to pardon".

A playwright of this temper would probably not venture to represent marriages of Jew and Gentile. Futile as they are in dramatic situations, they still arouse the old race antagonism as nothing else does and thus dispel on both sides the receptive mood, the spirit of hospitable intelligence and genial toleration which is essential to mutual understanding.

Something of this kind, I take it, is the attitude of Montague Glass in his Potash and Perlmutter stories. Personally I cannot profess any great delight in them. My Yiddish vocabulary has not yet progressed beyond kosher and schnorrer and nochhein. Even as to this last treasure of speech I know little except that it will be obsolete after the first of next July.

And at best the milieu of Potash and Perlmutter is narrowly limited. But the fact is unmistakable that they have given the Gentile world a new insight into Yiddish character, a wholly fresh appreciation of Yiddish amenities and virtues. Yet in the character of the Jew there are whole regions as yet unexplored—regions of suicidal meanness in trade and of truly great creative industry; regions of unsocial selfishness and of far-seeing, patriotic statesmanship; regions of petty parsimony and of benefactions as liberal as they are humane.

Some day our playwrights will cease posing "the Jew" as protagonist in a recial problem and give us many Jews who are human beings. Then, and not until then, the bitter problem of racial antagonism will be on the way toward a solution.

WHO WAS HAYM SALOMON?

By Marco R. Newmark

In a late issue of "The New Age," is an article concerning the financing of the American Revolution.

In that activity, at times difficult to the point of despair, the names of Robert Morris and Gouverneur Morris loom large in every account of the war; but there is another name which a tardy justice should place on the roll, where it belongs, but which has, for some reason, never obtained the fame to which the accomplishments of its possesor entitled it.

It will not be found in general encyclopoedias; it is missing in all the American histories that have ever come under our ken; but the Congressional Record, the correspondence of James Madison and the Diary of Robert Morris will, no doubt, be accepted as sufficient justification for the publication of the following brief account of the life and activities of Haym Salomon.

He was born in Lissa, Poland, in 1740. In 1772, he left his native country and settled in New York. At the outbreak of the Revolution, he entered the service. After the occupation of New York, by the British, in 1776, he was imprisoned as a spy. For a while he was kept in close confinement, but, soon becoming notable for his linguistic ability, he was turned over to the Hessian General, Heister, for use in the commissariat department. In this position, he was given great liberty, of which he made good use by helping French and American prisoners to escape, as well as by influencing Hessian officers to resign their commands. This led him into difficulties, but on August 11, 1778, he escaped and made his way to Philadelphia.

During his imprisonment, he had become intimate with a fellow-prisoner, Samuel Demezes. He now petitioned for exchange with his still incarcerated friend; and anyone acquainted with conditions in war prisons at that time will appreciate the heroism of the act.

He was refused. Then he asked for some government employment and was again refused. Next, he entered the brokerage business and quickly became prominent among the citizens of Philadelphia. He also began to deal in bills of exchange on foreign cities.

At about this time Robert Morris became superintendent of finance, and his diary attests to how great an extent he relied on Salomon in his financial transactions. His name is mentioned in the diary no less than seventy-five times. He was especially important in the negotiation of bills of exchange, by which means the credit of the Government was so largely maintained during this period.

His connection with the Government was only part of his work. He was also broker to the French consul, treasurer of the French Army in the United States and fiscal agent of the French minister. In these capacities, enormous sums of money passed through his hands.

It has been disputed whether Salomon ever really gave money to the Government for carrying on the war or not. It is not disputed, however, that he advanced to Robert Morris at least $200,000 which has never been repaid either to him, or to his heirs.

Salomon's generosity was not confined directly to the Government. He also advanced large sums for the individual use of several patriots whose services, without this aid, it would have been impossible for them to continue. James Madison was among them. In a letter of August 27, 1782, he wrote: "I have for some time past been a pensioner on the favor of Haym Salomon." And again on September 30, of the same year: "The kindness of our little friend on Front Street near the coffee house, is a fund which will prevent me from extremities, but I never resort to it without great mortification, as he obstinately rejects all recompense."

One more gleaning from the writings of Madison: "Were it not for Haym Salomon, it is difficult to understand how the American Revolution can be brought to a successful conclusion."

On June 6, 1785, Salomon died, leaving a widow and two children, to whom he bequeathed $350,000, included, as assets, the debt owing him from the Government, which, however, has never been repaid.

Between 1848 and 1864, a number of attempts were made in Congress to reimburse his descendants, but although in every instance, as the Congressional Records testify, the report of the committee appointed to investigate was favorable, the appropriation was never made. Finally, in 1893, it was suggested in Congress that a gold medal be struck by the Government in recognition of his services, his heirs having agreed to relinquish their claims, were this done. This attempt also proved abortive.

Such was Haym Salomon! Such were his services to his country!

The United States has never repaid to his heirs what is their due; neither has his memory ever been officially honored.

Let us hope that some day this error will be rectified and that the time will come when the well-informed at least, whether Jew or Gentile, will know who Haym Salomon was and what he did to entitle his name to a place on the recording page.

THE COVENANT.

By Dr. Louis Smirnow.

"A nation of priests and a holy people,"
This was the mark themselves and God have set;
As some great Architect designs a steeple,
Or an hundred-tiered, sky-reaching minaret,
To be admired and gazed at from below,
And deemed unreachable as ages go.
Were Mammon to supply its feet of clay,
And Moloch lend his hands begrimed of shame,
Or Greed and Hatred blaze thereto the way,
Then were indeed the goal set all in vain,
And nations could in unison proclaim
The priestly nation as a thing profane.
But no! to reach the all-outreaching height
Reared by the One who said: "Let there be light,"
The people made a covenant to be
A blessing unto all humanity!
To raise the fallen and uplift the weak;
To give sight unto the blind—undying hope
To hopeless ones; to diligently seek
The widow and the orphan who may grope
In dire adversity, and succor them;
When Persecution rears its serpent head
That strikes innumerable people dead,
To then, like heaven's hosts, jump in and stem
The fearful tide, that it may not be said
That none defended Israel when he bled.
Sons of the Covenant, you it behooves
To be the seekers after truth, to build
On bulwarks of real charity fulfilled,
On buttresses of faith and love that moves
All doubt away and breaks the night in two;
Such is the role, O sons, assigned to you,
That in the end Peace reign upon the earth,
And you prove to the world your sterling worth.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

The smoker held under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 on Feb. 13 was a distinct success and thoroughly enjoyed by everybody present. Addresses were made by Past Presidents Bros. Benesch, Goodman, Bloch and the secretary, Bro. Maurice Kahn.

The guest was Col. J. R. McQuigg of the 112th engineers. The gallant colonel, but lately returned from the battlefields of France and Flanders, spoke of his experiences there, and the battles in which the Cleveland boys of the 37th division took part.

Following Bro. Secretary Kahn's address on the purposes and aims of the B'nai B'rith, replies, pledging their loyalty to the Order, were made by representatives of several young men's clubs.

By a unanimous vote of Cleveland Lodge, at a meeting held on the 13th of Feb., the proposal inviting the Jewish Welfare Board to take up in Cleveland its activities in the B'nai B'rith building was approved.

Mr. Aaron Horwitz of Pittsburgh and Mr. Jacob Wattenmaker of Pittsburgh and New York, both representing the J. W. B., have been in Cleveland looking over the ground.

It is expected to have the B'nai B'rith building used by returning soldiers and sailors under the direction of a uniformed worker of the Welfare Board. Here the entire problem of the transition from military to civilian life of each returning soldier who applies will be cared for. In addition, entertainment and lectures will be given from time to time for these men in service.

A large audience was on hand to greet the Industrial Association Band on Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919, at a concert given under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge No. 16. Every number rendered was enthusiastically applauded.

The Industrial Association is organized for the purpose of bringing in closer touch the employer and employe, both being members of the association. All entertainments given by the association are furnished by members.

Mr. Oscar Friedman, who was the instigater of the never-to-be-forgotten "Mysterious Night," held last year by the Lodge, was instrumental in arranging this concert.

Soloists rendered vocal and musical solos.

On Thursday evening, Feb. 27, 1919, a meeting of Cleveland Lodge was held at the B'nai B'rith Building. Matters of interest were discussed and a social hour followed the business meeting at which cigars and refreshments were served.

The Congress of Clubs of the B'nai B'rith is an organization which has been formed to further and stimulate Jewish club activities in the city of Cleveland. Cleveland Lodge B'nai B'rith recognizing the necessity of club life to the Jewish welfare of the city, has dedicated its building to this work. Here Jewish young men and women have an opportunity to meet and discuss things that will tend toward their intellectual, moral and social development. There are literary, musical, dramatic, financial, social and welfare clubs, and the Secretary of the B'nai B'rith Lodge is also Secretary to the Congress of Clubs. The Congress of Clubs is composed of one delegate from each organization in the building. It has operated several successful dances and is now considering a competitive debating contest between the clubs in the building.

Jewish soldiers and sailors returning to Cleveland during the demobilization period will be provided with club and dormitory facilities at the B'nai B'rith Building. A joint committee has been organized to represent the Welfare Board and the B'nai B'rith in the management of the Welfare Board club rooms for soldiers and sailors at the B'nai B'rith Building.

The first Junior B'nai B'rith dance of the season will be given on Saturday evening, March 22, 1919.

On Thursday evening, March 13, Cleveland Lodge held a meeting at which fifty candidates were initiated.

Under the arrangements of the Secretary of the Lodge, an interesting moving picture exhibit was held at the close of the evening and a social hour was enjoyably spent by all those present.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 had a remarkable program for its meeting held on Feb. 23, 1919. The lodge hall was crowded to the doors, all eager to listen to Prof. William Lyon Phelps, head of the English Department, and Prof. Albert G. Keller, head of the Social Science Department, both of Yale University, who delivered splendid and brilliant addresses on vital topics of the moment. At the close of the meeting, refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

ADULLAM LODGE, PITTSFIELD, MASS.

By J. M. Rosenthal.

Sunday, Feb. 16, a class of thirteen men were initiated into Adullam Lodge. The initiation was in charge of the prize degree team from Horeb Lodge, under the leadership of Dr. Gans. After the degree work was completed there were short talks by President Morris Ziskind, Brother Kaletsky of the Horeb degree team, Max G. Rosenthal, one of the four remaining charter members of Adullam Lodge, District Deputy Leo Zander, Past President George A. Newman and former Mayor Daniel England. The membership of Adullam Lodge now stands at 83, the largest in its history, and it will soon pass the hundred mark.

Monday evening, Feb. 24, at a largely attended meeting, Rabbi Samuel Price discussed the question of Zionism, it being the first of a series of talks on the subject for the benefit of the members of Adullam Lodge. The great value of Rabbi Price's elucidation lay in the fact that he argued the case in favor of Zionism by taking up in turn the arguments against it, presenting them fairly and clearly, and then proceeding to rebut them. The second talk on the subject, treating it from the viewpoint of one opposed, was given Monday, March 10, by Rabbi Eli Mayer of Albany, N. Y.

For the past two years Adullam Lodge has celebrated Washington's Birthday by a public patriotic meeting. This year it was thought best to give up this right in favor of the Pittsfield branch of the Jewish Welfare Board, which held a splendidly conducted meeting at the auditorium of the Pittsfield Boys' Club before a capacity audience. The hall was tastily decorated with American flags, Jewish Welfare Board banners and a large service flag, with the number 80 thereon. On the platform were the chairman, George A. Newman, president of Pittsfield Branch and past president of Adullam Lodge; William C. Stevenson, president of the Boys' Club, through whose courtesy the use of the auditorium was bestowed; Hon. Charles L. Hibbard, justice of the District Court of Central Berkshire, and Hon. Abraham K. Cohen of the Municipal Court of Boston, past president of District No. 1. Judge Hibbard, who addressed himself particularly to the children present, dwelt on the necessity of patience in awaiting the subsidence of the troubled waters stirred up by the war, and compared the national life to that of a great tree, whose roots were buried deep in the teachings of Washington, and whose branches stretched out to gather in the new ideas of the present century. Judge Cohen taught the necessity of every citizen, especially those born in foreign countries, realizing that the only way to reform the insituations of this country which had befriended and protected them and their children was by way of lawful public education and the ballot, and not by means of violence or the overthrow of social institutions by force. Martin's Orchestra furnished music.

BRADFORD LODGE, BRADFORD, PENNA.

Bradford Lodge No. 745, of Bradford, Pa., held an enthusiastic meeting in the month of February, at which the officers for the ensuing year were elected. Installation of the new elected officers was also held and was presided over by Past-President L. Kreinson. The President reported that he has arranged for competitive teams to be composed of members of the Lodge in a drive for membership, and that April 27, next, is set aside for the gala night for the initiation of the class to be secured and a social gathering afterwards for the members and their families.

Many happy remarks were made by the members present, who pledged handsome sums for the entertainment fund for the winning team.

COVENANT LODGE, DULUTH, MINN.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., held its annual banquet and public installation of officers at the Commercial building on Tuesday evening, Jan. 28, 1919. Seventy-five members and their ladies were present. Bro. Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, President of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor and principal speaker. He addressed the lodge on "Prophets and Visions." Several musical numbers were rendered, after which the members and guests enjoyed a social hour and dancing.

On Feb. 26, at a regular meeting of the lodge, a class of candidates was initiated and the lodge arranged an Americanization meeting, which was held on March 2, 1919. The lodge is planning for many diversified activities during the present year.

B'NAI B'RITH CAMPAIGN FOR MEMBERSHIP IN PHILADELPHIA.

As time is progressing, the determination for one thousand candidates in Philadelphia is being rewarded by the prospects of reaching the goal. Men of all walks of life are expressing their willingness to affiliate with the Order.

At the luncheon given by him to the members of the Campaign Committee, on Feb. 20, 1919, Mr. David Bortin of the District Grand Lodge presided and forty guests were present, and a number of enthusiastic addresses were delivered on the occasion by Messrs. L. Gerstley, Jacob Singer, Joseph Salus, Joseph L. Kun, H. Platowsky and a number of others. Mr. Gerstley urged the committee to work hard to make this campaign a success. He offered a substantial sum as a donation towards the building of the B'nai B'rith headquarters in Philadelphia. This was instantly matched by five members of Har Sinai Lodge, who, in making the announcement contributing that sum, also gave a challenge to any other lodge in the city of Philadelphia as to the number of candidates. A lively contest is now in store for the B'nai B'rith lodges of Philadelphia.

Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, President of the District Grand Lodge, communicated with the campaign committee and said that the entire District is looking to Philadelphia and that many of the cities of the District are beginning to make arrangements to pattern their campaign after Philadelphia's methods of obtaining candidates.

Mr. Joseph Herbach, the Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, is issuing a course of circulars on the subject "What the B'nai B'rith Is Doing." In these circulars he publishes the activity of the Anti-Defamation League and comments expressed by prominent persons regarding the Order.

Har Sinai Lodge issued an exceptionally attractive invitation for its meeting held on Washington's Birthday, with a strong appeal for members to be active in this campaign.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE.

Rainier Lodge, Seattle, Wash.

At the regular meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627, held on Feb. 19 at the Educational Center, Mr. Barnett Harvitz, a student of the University of Washington, and winner of the B'nai B'rith prize essay contest on July 18, read his paper, "How to Check Absorption."

On Wednesday evening, Feb. 12, 1919, meeting of Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 was held. After the regular business meeting a musical program of varied numbers was successfully carried out.

Mr. Elliott Epstein delivered a short address on the work of the B'nai B'rith and its accomplishments.

Rabbi Simon Glazer was speaker of the evening. His subject was "Fraternity Among the Jews." Rabbi Glazer raced the Jewish fraternity from the Egyptian period to the present day.

Professor DeHasse, of the School of Commerce of the University of Washington, addressed the members of Rainier Lodge at a well attended meeting held Wednesday evening, March 5, at the Educational Center.

Initiation of candidates also took place the early part of the meeting, and at the close of the entire program refreshments were served.

Emma Lazarus Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held a meeting on Feb. 25, 1919, and a social for the members followed the regular business.

WILMINGTON LODGE, WILMINGTON, DEL.

On Sunday, Feb. 23, 1919, the members of Wilmington Lodge No. 470 turned out in large numbers to attend the meeting held in the Y. M. H. A. building. Bro. Joseph Herbach of Philadelphia, Secretray of the District Grand Lodge, was announced as the speaker of the evening President Bro. Marcus Feuchtwanger, new President of the District Grand Lodge, at the same time paid an official visit to the lodge and delighted the members by his appearance.

President Feuchtwanger spoke of the necessity of each lodge to increase its membership, and expressed the hope that Wilmington lodge will fall in line with the other lodges for a substantial increase during his administration.

President Feuchtwanger spoke on the impending danger to which the Order must be alive, and likewise spoke of Reverend Simon's report before the Senate Committee.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATION BY WINNIPEG LODGE

By H. J. S.

B'nai B'rith Day, held on [illegible] March 2, was a most successful [illegible] and the large gatherings at each [illegible] of the program was full evidence of the revived interest being taken in the affairs of the lodge.

The visitor for the occasion was Bro. Gus Loevinger, from St. Paul Brother Loevinger's address was greatly appreciated In the afternoon a large class of candidates was initiated A banquet, an open meeting and a reception completed the day's activities.

The lodge will have completed ten years' existence on April 18 next. This event will be marked by a new departure in the work of the lodge. The needs of the city have far outgrown the scope of the Big Brother organization, and the lodge has committed itself to the engagement of an experienced social service director who will devote his whole time to this work. The project is arousing great enthusiasm among the members, and if the right man can only be found he will have a splendid field to labor in.

During the past year the lodge has suffered from the death of three members, Bros. Abraham Berg, Aaron Nitikman and Maurice Hoffman. In his memorial address on B'nai B'rith Day Rabbi Samuel paid a tribute to their memory. Brother Berg was a most valuable communal worker and was actively devoted to practically every organization. He was president of one of the largest synagogues, vice-president of our splendid Talmud Torah, which he was largely instrumental in building, and a leading director of the United Hebrew Relief. He was noted for the geniality of his character and never-failing courtesy. His son, Bro. S. A. Berg, made an excellent impression by his eloquent rendering of the Monitor's part in Sunday's initiation.

PAST PRESIDENTS' NIGHT BY ERIE LODGE OF ERIE, PA.

Before the largest gathering ever assembled in the lodge rooms in Odd Fellows' Hall, which included members, non-members and their friends, Erie Lodge No. 620 staged an open meeting Sunday evening, March 2. The evening was designated as Past Presidents' Night, all of whom were present. The lodge was organized twelve years ago, and the presidents in order of service are as follows: Isador Sobel, Theodore Landsberg, Morris Schaffner, Isaac Baker, Isador Simon, Jacob Schaffner, Herbert F. Jacobs, Henry L. Zacks, Isador Loeb and Max C. Currick, honorary president. Through their untiring efforts the B'nai B'rith Orphanage was brought to Erie County, the jurisdiction of which covers the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and West Virginia. The evening commenced with a most impressive initiation of a large class of new members, which was conducted by the past presidents. Those initiated were Max Sabin, Bernard Brown, Irving Kramer, Alfred Mercur, Charles Bray, Sam Pickholts, Jack Rosenfeld, David Israielowits and Raymond Schuster, just returned from service. Following the initiation a splendid musical and vaudeville entertainment, with local and outside talent, was staged, with Hiram Sallin, chairman of the entertainment committee, in charge. It was unanimously agreed by all those present that the evening was the most successful and enjoyable ever held by the Erie lodge.

NEW KENSINGTON LODGE, NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

A splendid meeting of New Kensington Lodge No. 762 was held on Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919, a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen being present.

It was a novel idea to hold an open meeting of the Lodge and invitations were extended to Jewish people of that city.

President H. J. Crown called the meeting to order and introduced Mr. A. L. Solomon, of Pittsburgh, Past-President of the District Grand Lodge, who acted as chairman. Mr. Solomon spoke upon he principles and fundamental teachings of the Order. His address was forcible and was much appreciated.

Following his address the officers of he Lodge were installed.

"What the B'nai B'rith is Doing" was thereupon amiably discussed by Mr. Reuben.

Mr. D. D. Hart also spoke, and the patriotism of the assemblage was stirred by Mr. David Stein, an officer of the "Iron Division," who saw real service across the seas, and he described in heart-rending terms the misery he had witnessed in the countries through which his regiment has passed.

Refreshments were served by the Ladies' Auxiliary and formed a pleasant finale of the occasion.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CHICAGO.

Ramah Lodge.

The monthly meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33, was held at the Covenant Club on March 10, 1919. The meeting was fairly well attended. A class of nine candidates was initiated and a large number of new applications for membership were presented. The feature of the meeting was a discussion started by Brother B. S. Mayer, on the lack of interest manifested by the members of the Lodge in the affairs of the Order. A number of members participated in the discussion, among them Brothers Finkelstein, Gusfield, Dr. Ritter and others. The discussion was brought to a close with remarks by the Secretary of the Grand Lodge, Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, who outlined the aims and objects of the Order and at the same time gave expression of his views as to the qualifications that should be demanded from applicants for membership in the Lodge and the Order.

Covenant Club.

Election of officers of Covenant Club was held at the club premises on Wednesday evening, March 12, 1919. The following evening the annual meeting of the members of the club took place preceded by a complimentary dinner to the members of the club.

The reports presented by the officers and particularly by the President of the club and the chairman of the House Committee, were most encouraging. They showed the club to be in a most healthy condition and its finances in good order. A large number of new members were secured during the year and the prospects for the future are most encouraging.

At the Saturday noon luncheon on March 1, 1919, Judge Orrin N. Carter, Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois addressed the members of the club and their guests on the subject, "The Proposed Constitutional Convention." The eminent standing and well-known ability of the speaker and the vital importance of the subject were the means of a large attendance and the address of Justice Carter was very well received.

On Saturday, March 8, 1919, John Z. White addressed the members of the club and their guests on "The French Revolution in View of Modern Events."

Oriental-Hillel Lodge.

A well attended meeting of Oriental-Hillel Lodge was held at the Covenant Club on March 3, 1919. A class of six candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge and a number of new applications were presented. Special feature of the meeting was an address by Dr. Edward J. Lewis on the subject, "Reconstruction—The Mending of Men." His address was listened to with much interest and at its conclusion Bro. Dr. Lewis was given a rising vote of thanks. Short talks were also made by Bro. Julius H. Meyer, president of the lodge, and Bro. Dr. Harry Kraus, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge.

David Fish Lodge.

David Fish Lodge No. 130, held a meeting at the Covenant Club on Monday evening, March 17, 1919. Although the weather was most inclement, a good attendance was present. An elaborate program was arranged for the evening which included a class initiation of candidates, vocal numbers by Miss Florence Bernstein, an address by Brother L. Edward Lashman, Secretary of the Anti-Defamation League, being a resume of current events in Jewry and B'nai B'rith History. Brother I. T. Feingold addressed the Lodge on the subject of "Restoration of Palestine," and the Secretary of the Grand Lodge briefly spoke on the work of the Anti-Defamation League.

NEW CASTLE LODGE, NEW CASTLE, PA.

District No. 3 has many Sunday Schools under the auspices of various lodges and the religious work accomplished and the training the children are receiving is well worth the time and effort put forth. Especially is this significant in the smaller communities, where there is no Synagogue or Rabbi, therefore the work is well worth while. Among those we notice that school under the guidance of New Castle Lodge No. 609, with nearly 100 children. An entertainment commemorative of Purim was held at their lodge rooms on Sunday afternoon, March 16. The large hall was filled to overflowing to listen to the children recite their various portions assigned them. Musical numbers on the piano and violin were also rendered by the children and after stirring addresses by the Superintendent Bro. Marcus Feuchtwanger and his very valuable assistant, Bro. Jacob Coall, a treat of ice cream and caks was served by the Jewish Ladies' Aid Society.

B'NAI B'RITH OF BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Myron Sulzberger of New York, Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, spoke before the members of Harmony Lodge No. 711 at a well-attended meeting held on the evening of Feb. 26, 1919. He spoke concerning the aims and ideals of the Order and the work now carried on through its various departments.

In conjunction with Charles H. Shapiro, the President of the District Grand Lodge, he is planning to inaugurate a social service campaign for returning soldiers and sailors.

Following his address there was a general discussion on welfare work.

At the Harmony Lodge Forum, which will be held in a few weeks, Brig.-Gen. Benedict Holden of Hartford will be the principal speaker.

The Annual Children's Party on Washington's Birthday, given by the wives of the members of Harmony Lodge of Bridgeport, Conn., was successfully carried out. An interesting program was arranged for the children, consisting of humorous readings, original sketches, games and favors for the children. Refreshments were served and an attractive musical program was also carried out.

A new lodge was formed in Toronto, Canada, under the name of Toronto, No. 836. The lodge was instituted March 9 by the following brothers from District No. 1: Brother Charles H. Shapiro, President of the District; Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee from District No. 1; Brother Joseph H. Ullman, Past President of District No. 1; Past President Brother Dr. Joseph Silverman and Brother Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, Secretary of the District. Brother Kaplan while in Toronto occupied the pulpit of the Holy Blossom Temple, Saturday morning, March 8. The following were elected officers of the lodge: President, Meyer Fischer; Vice-President, Abraham Cohen; Secretary, Benjamin Luxenberg; Financial Secretary, J. D. Isaacs; Treasurer, Bernard Goldstein; Monitor, Theodore Weil; Warden, Mortimer L. Levy (inside); Guardian, Mark G. Cohen (outside); Trustees, Reuben Shutz, Joseph Singer and Frederick Levenston.

The lodge started with seventy charter members, representing the finest men of the younger generation, many of whom are prominent in the various professions and in the business world.

COLORADO SPRINGS LODGE, COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

On Sunday, March 2, a delegation of more than twenty members of Pueblo Lodge No. 524, I. O. B. B., accepting invitation of Colorado Springs Lodge No. 523, visited the latter lodge in an effort to promote the objects of our Order. The visitors were cordially entertained. After a brief but well conducted business meeting in the lodge room, the entire assemblage (consisting of more than sixty members) met at the Elks' Club, where a splendid lunch was served.

Brother Nathan of Colorado Springs Lodge acted as toastmaster. Happy remarks were made by the several speakers in their responses. Bro. Benj. F. Koperlik of Pueblo Lodge was the speaker of the evening. His eloquent address on the aims and objects of our Order, and on the problems at the present time confronting the Jew, made a deep and lasting impression on his audience and was of great benefit to both lodges.

The affair was in every way a success, and all present expressed the hope that affairs of this kind be soon and often repeated.

At a recent quarterly meeting of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3, held at the Lawrence Hotel in the city of Erie, four applications for admission were favorably acted upon.

The Home is now sheltering fifty-one children, twenty-six boys and twenty-five girls, and indications point to the admission of four additional applicants, which will soon give the Home fifty-five children.

It is a pleasure to state that during the influenza epidemic the children continued in their usual good health. Additional committees were appointed, one on "After Care of the Children" and the other on "Parents' Welfare." A manual training school has been inaugurated.

The future welfare of the institution was discussed by those present, among them being the President of District No. 3, Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, and the former secretary of the district, Mr. Edward Hemple, now of Pittsburgh, Pa., also Mr. Felix T. Levy, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., treasurer of the Society for the Care of Orphans and Friendless Children of Luzerne County.

Miss Hattie Lewin, field secretary, is now visiting the various cities in Pennsylvania in behalf of the Institution.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY AT NEW CASTLE, PA.

The Diamond Jubilee celebration of the founding of the Order was fittingly observed by New Castle Lodge No. 609 of New Castle, Pa., on Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919.

Butler, Ellwood City, Sharon, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Youngstown, Chicago, Newark and Wheeling were represented at the meeting, in addition to the many hundreds who attended from New Castle and surrounding territory.

The celebration was ushered in with a business meeting of the Lodge and a large class of candidates was initiated. Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, President of the District Grand Lodge, was master of ceremonies.

An open meeting followed, at which Dr. H. A. Frank acted as chairman.

Mr. B. S. Pollock, of Newark, Past-President of the District Grand Lodge, and B. J. Sugarman were the principal speakers. Both addresses were exceptionally fine and were received with much enthusiasm.

A musical program of varied numbers was successfully carried out. Following the program a luncheon was served by the Jewish Ladies' Aid Society, and the evening was brought to a close with a dance.

CHARLES WEIL LODGE, PINE BLUFF, ARK.

B'nai B'rith Day was properly observed by Charles Weil Lodge No. 279 of Pine Bluff, Ark., on Sunday, Feb. 16, 1919. In the afternoon a meeting of the lodge was held at which installation of officers and initiation of a class of candidates took place. In the evening the following program was carried out:

Charles Weil Lodge boasts of the largest increase in membership in the state of Arkansas for the year 1918. It also glories in having captured the Silver Trophy offered for that achievement.

RACINE LODGE, RACINE, WIS.

Bro. Albert F. Mecklenburger and Julian J. Gusfield of Chicago, members of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, attended a meeting of Racine Lodge No. 697 on Sunday, Feb. 9, 1919. In the early part of the evening a regular meeting of the lodge was held, at which a class of candidates was initiated. After the close of the meeting, a public installation of officers was held. During the evening Brother Mecklenburger addressed the audience on the subject of "Americanization," and Brother Gusfield on "The Work of the Order in General." Quite a large crowd was in attendance and a number of new members were secured during the evening. After the meeting dancing was indulged in.

M'KEESPORT LODGE, M'KEESPORT, PA.

A regular meeting of McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., was held on Sunday morning, March 2, 1919. Matters of interest to the members were on the calendar for consideration. One of the most important items considered was the report of the committee in charge of the latest project of the Lodge, the formation of a social center for the younger residents of the city. The degree team initiated a large class of candidates.

A cabaret dance given by the Lodge on Thursday evening, Feb. 7, 1919, was not only a decided novelty but also a great success. The attendance was large and enthusiastic and the committee on arrangements was deserving of the applause and thanks of the community for its efforts in the promotion of friendship and good fellowship among the members of the Lodge.

Not less than four hundred people attended. Large numbers from Braddock, Duquesne and Pittsburgh helped to swell the crowd.

Mr. O. H. Rosenbaum, of Pittsburgh, Past-President of the District Grand Lodge, after addressing the audience, expressed gratification in the interest manifested by the members of the Lodge. The audience was entertained during the course of the evening by cabaret dancing and singing. About 10 o'clock a dainty lunch was served, after which the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing.

B'NAI B'RITH OF TACOMA, WASH.

A George Washington Dancing Party was given at the B'nai B'rith Club on Feb. 22, 1919. An interesting talk was given by Mr. Scott Henderson and songs by volunteer soldiers. Tacoma Lodge is planning a Purim Ball to be held some time in the month of March.

The B'nai B'rith dance, given by Tacoma Lodge on Wednesday, Feb. 19, 1919, was an enjoyable affair and a success in every way. There was a large attendance.

The Ladies' Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held its regular business meeting on the same evening. A special program was arranged in honor of Lincoln's Birthday. Readings on the life of Lincoln were enjoyed.

The committee in charge of the annual dance of the Ladies' Auxiliaries of the B'nai B'rith to be given Sunday evening, March 30, at Scottish Rite Hall, is extending a special invitation to all men in uniform. Elaborate preparations are being made and those in charge promise one of the most successful affairs ever given by these organizations.

AKRON LODGE, AKRON, OHIO.

One of the most conspicuous B'nai B'rith events in Akron within a considerable period was that held at Temple Israel, Sunday evening, Feb. 23. A class of twenty-five new candidates was initiated. Following the initiation there was a public meeting with installation of the following officers: President, Mr. Jacob Vineberg; vice-president, Dr. Morris Tuholske; secretary, Mr. David Tuholske; treasurer, Mr. Samuel Morris; assistant monitor, Rabbi Abraham Cronbach; monitor, Mr. Maurice Krohngold; warden, Mr. Bernhard Segal; trustee, Mr. Louis D. Freiberg.

The Vice-President of the District, Mr. Sidney Kussworm, of Dayton, gave the address of the evening. Mr. Kussworm's theme was "Brotherhood." In the course of his remarks Mr. Kussworm refuted the charge that, during the recent war Jews proved inferior to non-Jews in loyalty and courage.

After the meeting there was dancing and the serving of refreshments by a committee of ladies headed by Mrs. Morris Tuholske.

B'NAI B'RITH CELEBRATION AT FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

Under the auspices of Isidor Strau Lodge No. 519, a Cultural Advancemen meeting was held at the Hebrew Institute on Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919, i honor of B'nai B'rith Day.

MINNESOTA LODGE, ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA.

Minnesota Lodge No. 157, of St Paul, Minn., gave a banquet on the evening of March 13, 1919, jointly with the local branch of the Jewish Welfare Board at the St. Paul Athletic Club. As a result of the banquet, 47 applications for membership were secured. The affair proved probably the finest entertainment ever given for Jewish soldiers in the Northwest. Over 150 of the returned boys took part besides a large number of members of Minnesota Lodge. The affair was in charge of a committee consisting of Louis Melamed, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee of Minnesota Lodge; Hiram D. Frankel, representing the Jewish Welfare Board, and Sam Lipschultz of Minnesota Lodge, who acted as Toastmaster. A beautiful banquet was spread in the ladies' dining room of the new million and half Athletic Club. This room was packed to the doors. Over twenty-five overseas Jewish officers and men from Fort Snelling General Hospital No. 29, came in as special guests in addition to the 150 St. Paul Jewish boys who had returned within recent weeks from camps or from overseas. With seventy-five members of Minnesota Lodge to add to the festivities, they made a gala crowd. All were enthused and full of pep. After a splendid banquet served in the beautiful dining room, sing-master W. W. Norton, of the Community War Camp Service, led in community singing for a half an hour at which the rafters rang with the song. The Apollo Quartet sang solos, duets and quartets all during the dinner and also until late in the evening, interspersing the program. Music was also furnished by Minnesota Lodge Orchestra under the direction of Brother David Nahinsky. Brother Peter Leswosky played several beautiful solos. Addresses were delivered by President M. W. Skorish, Rabbi Isaac L. Rypins, Rabbi Philip Kleinman, Milton P. Firestone, Sylvan E. Hess, Gustavus Loevinger and Hiram D. Frankel. The addresses were sparkling with wit and full of fun and frolic. Gridiron stunts were played all evening on popular men in the room and there was a general air of fraternalizing and co-operation to make the evening a big success. As an example of the spirit of the evening the following may be cited:

The Jewish Welfare Board had furnished to each man attending a package of Bull Durham tobacco, a box of matches and a package of papers for the "makings." All the St. Paul boys almost by instinct jumped up and immediately turned over their packages to the Fort Snelling boys present to take to Fort Snelling to be given to the shut-ins who could not leave their beds to come to the party. The evening concluded with a showing of the film, "Fit to Fight." Everybody thoroughly enjoyed themselves and the spirit of comradeship displayed and the note of loyalty in the addresses all helped to make the evening the most remarkable of any of the war gatherings thus far. Incidentally the Propaganda Committee of Minnesota Lodge moving quietly around the hall during the evening, gathered forty-seven applications from the returned men, and these will be initiated soon. Minnesota Lodge has about fifty to sixty of its members who served during the war, and with the forty-seven newly arrived men who signed up the other night, will have over 100 veterans of the war on its roster.

THISBE LODGE, EVANSVILLE, IND.

On Friday evening, Feb. 21, 1919, a joint Americanization Day celebration and B'nai B'rith Memorial service was held, under the auspices of Thisbe Ldge No. 24 of Evansville, Ind., at the Washington Ave. Temple. The Friday preceding the birthday anniversary of the "Father of His Country" was appropriately chosen as a fitting time to reaffirm our faith in and devotion to American institutions. All the Jews of Evansville, irrespective of affiliations, participated in this affair. A special program of addresses and music was prepared and successfully carried out.

WASHINGTON LODGE, WASHINGTON, PA.

Washington Lodge No. 576 is doing good work. Their meetings are well attended and live and important subjects are discussed. A very interesting meeting was held on Sunday, Feb. 15, at which eight candidates were initiated. Under the auspices of the lodge a card party and dance were held on March 4, 1919, the profits of which will be devoted to the Palestine Restoration Fund, and the balance for charities of the lodge. The members of the lodge are very actively engaged in furthering the work of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order.

RESOLUTIONS.

Joshua Lodge No. 23, I. O. B. B.

At a meeting of Joshua Lodge No. 23, I. O. B. B., held Wednesday evening, Feb. 19, 1919, the following resolutions were adopted on announcement of the death of Brother Louis Edward Levy:

Whereas, By the will of God, our brother, Louis Edward Levy, was called from our midst in the prime of his fruitful life;

Resolved, In the death of Louis Edward Levy the Order of B'nai B'rith has lost a true and loyal member ever devoted to the principles of the Order.

Resolved, In the death of Louis Edward Levy we have lost a friend and colleague, lovable and democratic in nature, who was ever ready and eager to devote his time, energy, learning and service for the welfare of his fellowmen;

Resolved, In the cause of Judaism, Louis Edward Levy devoted the major part of his life to make the life of the immigrant Jew in America agreeable, and to make the immigrant a good and loyal American citizen was an object nearest his heart;

Resolved, In the death of Louis Edward Levy the nation has lost a great intellect, a great inventor, a genius for all that is beautiful in life and a good American.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our deceased brother, and that same be published in The Jewish Exponent.

Attest:
HENRY W. BRAUDE,
President.
MORRIS JOSEPH,
Secretary.
ABE WEIL, Chairman.
EDWARD WHITEHILL,
M. S. MEYERHOFF,
DAVID BORTIN,
Committee.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

The B'nai B'rith Club Girls had their annual election of officers at the regular meeting held on Tuesday, March 4, 1919.

On Wednesday, March 12, 1919, the B'nai B'rith Club Girls were hostesses at a dancing party for men in uniform.

The B'nai B'rith Club entertained sixty men in uniform from Vancouver Barracks on Tuesday evening, Feb. 11, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building.

The Membership Committee of Portland Lodge, under the chairmanship of Brother Nathan Markovitz, is highly elated over the results of the campaign for new members, and what pleases most is that a number of candidates are being enrolled without solicitation.

An interesting meeting of the Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, Feb. 18, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building. Dr. Jonah B. Wise gave an interesting talk on Social Hygiene and what the Oregon Social Hygiene Society was doing. Mr. Charles F. Berg, Secretary of the Society, also gave an interesting talk. The Lodge adopted a resolution endorsing the League of Nations.

MAHONING LODGE, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

By Louis Fried.

On Jan. 12, B'nai B'rith Day was a great success. A fine musical program was maintained and refreshments served. Max Shulman, of Dayton, Ohio, made a hit with the members and his visit to the local lodge was greatly appreciated.

On Jan. 26, a class of ten was initiated. The degree team consists of Bros. M. Meyerovitz, M. Ravinson, J. J. Friedland, E. R. Jonas and M. Sheibel. Officers for 1919 are as follows: President, L. Regenstreich; vice-president, M. Meyerovitz; secretary, L. Fried; monitor, J. Friedman; assistant monitor, E. Hartzell; warden, M. Seibel; guardian, S. Drabkin; treasurer, M. Ravinson.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SPOKANE, WASH.

Dr. J. K. Levin, Rabbi of Butte, Mont., was the principal speaker at the banquet given by Abr. Geiger Lodge No. 423, of Spokane, Wash., held on Feb. 23, 1919, in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the institution of the Order.

Samuel Edelstein, District Deputy, presided. The affair was attended by several hundred people from Spokane and adjacent districts.

The address of welcome was given by Samuel Edelstein, the District Deputy; a violin solo was rendered by Leo Kailin; J. A. Schiller spoke on "Seventy-five Years of Achievement"; vocal solo, Dr. L. Kaplan; address, W. J. Hindley; reading by Miss Helen Goldblatt; musical numbers by Miss Etta Kaplan and Miss Crystal.

WINNIPEG LODGE, WINNIPEG, CANADA.

Brother Gustavus Loevinger, of St Paul, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District Grand Lodge, paid an official visit to Winnipeg Lodge No. 50, of Winnipeg, Canada, on March 2, 919, to be the speaker at the B'nai B'rith Day celebration under the auspices of the Lodge. Owing to a misunderstanding with immigration officials he was detained at Emerson and was not enabled to be in Winnipeg at the time the celebration was scheduled to take place. For this reason additional meetings were arranged hurriedly by the Lodge for the following two days.

The principal address made by Brother Loevinger was at the mass-meeting held on March 3, 1919, at which he spoke on the "Seven Arms of the Order Typified by the Seven Branches of the Menorah." Under each of these headings he reviewed the activities of the Order.

During his stay in Winnipeg, Brother Loevinger was in constant consultation with various members of the Lodge on the activities of the Order and particularly those pertaining to Winnipeg Lodge.

Winnipeg Lodge is planning a number of social evenings along the lines of Intellectual Advancement. In the direction of Social Service, the Lodge is particularly energetic and contemplates the securing of a social worker to do the social service work for the Lodge and its community.

BARON DE HIRSCH LODGE, BUTTE, MONT.

A meeting of Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420 was held on Feb. 20, 1919, with a very large attendance of the members. Special feature of the meeting was the presence of Bro. J. L. Harrison, former secretary of the lodge, who recently returned from service in France. He addressed the lodge on his experiences, which were most interesting. During the course of his talk when asked by a member what the French in general thought of the qualities of the Jewish soldier as a fighter he stated the invariable answer was "tres bien." Brother Harrison expressed the view that the war has brought the Jew and Gentile much closer together in view of the fact that they were brothers in arms. He called the attention of the lodge to the fact that its service flag contained twenty-one stars, which represented more than 15 per cent of the membership of the lodge.

The lodge arranged to give a Purim Ball on March 15 under the joint auspices of the lodge and the Ladies' Auxiliary of Temple B'nai Israel.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Consolidation of Ophir Lodge No. 21 and Occidental Lodge No. 345, formally took place on Monday evening Feb. 24, 1919, at the B'rith B'rith Hall. The consolidated Lodge will henceforth be known as Ophir Lodge No. 21.

A program of music, followed by the serving of refreshments, marked the formal merging of the two lodges. Addresses were made by officers of the Grand Lodge and by officers of the two merged lodges.

The annual dance of the Ladies' Auxiliaries of the B'nai B'rith will be held Sunday evening, March 30, in Scottish Rite Hall. Elaborate arrangements are under way and the committee in charge promises one of the most successful affairs ever given by the auxiliaries. A special invitation has been extended to men in uniform.

Eighty members and their ladies of Cremieux Lodge No. 325, gave a banquet and dance on March 2, 1919, at Hotel Bristol. The affair was given in honor of Brother Milton Meyer, newly elected President of District Grand Lodge No. 4.

JULIUS HOUSEMAN LODGE, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

An unusually well attended meeting of the Lodge was held on Monday, March 3, 1919, in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel. Among the special features of the meeting were initiation of one of the largest classes in the history of the lodge; a stirring address by Lieutenant Erwin Treusch at the presentation of the Menorah to new members; installation of officers; a report of the special committees covering the activities scheduled for the year 1919.

Under the auspices of the Membership Committee, of which Brother Ginsberg is chairman, a campaign for membership will be inaugurated to increase the members of the Lodge to the 200 mark.

By Henry Cohen

Springfield Lodge No. [illegible] a very active administration [illegible] sided over by Philip S. Silbert [illegible] who anticipates a banner [illegible] things for which the B'nai B'rith Lodge stands for, "Service and Sacrifice."

The Entertainment and Intellectual Committee is arranging a number of Forums for the benefit of the members and the public at large. The first Forum was held at its lodge rooms on Monday, March 10. The speaker of the evening was Maj Anthony Fiala, who spoke on the conquest of the north pole. A number of star acts was provided by the Broadway Theater. The meeting was largely attended by members and their wives.

On March 24 a meeting of the Lodge designated as the "Past Presidents' Night," will be held with Brother Henry Lasker, First Vice-President of District No. 1 as the presiding officer, and so on until all past presidents will occupy an office. A special program is being arranged for this occasion which includes many surprises.

In the latter part of the month, at a date to be announced, Congressman Isaac Siegel, of New York, will speak on the immigration question.

The first part of April the Entertainment Committee is arranging for a Theater Party and Dance.

On Monday, April 28, a large class of candidates will be initiated and a banquet will be given to all the members by one of the brothers as a testimonial to the President, Brother Philip S. Silbert.

The first week in May the Springfield Lodge will celebrate its eighth annual banquet in honor of its men in the service who will have returned by that time.

District Grand Lodge No. 1 has chosen Springfield for its next convention. Springfield was honored with the convention four years ago at which time it was voted that said convention was one of the best ever held in the history of the District Grand Lodge. All those who attend the convention in February, 1920, are sure of having the greatest time of their lives as Springfield is an ideal convention city with an energetic Lodge that does things different than others. Also with the expectation of Brother Henry Lasker being elevated to the presidency nothing will be left undone to make it a huge success.

During the month of May memorial services will be held in remembrance of departed brethren in the Beth-El Temple. It is expected that the speaker will be of national reputation.

PAST PRESIDENTS' NIGHT BY EZEKIEL LODGE, NEWARK, N. J.

A big ceremonial of a class of candidates was held under the auspices of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90 of Newark, N. J., on the evening of Feb. 26, 1919. The affair was known as "Past Presidents' Night" and was largely attended not only by the members of the lodge but by the past presidents of the lodge. Bro. Jacob Singer, of Philadelphia, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, delivered a most interesting address. Bros. Marcus Feuchtwanger of New Castle and Jacob Herbach of Philadelphia, President and Secretary of District Grand Lodge, respectively, and a number of members of the General Committee were also present. A class of fifty candidates was initiated. The members of Jephtah Lodge of Paterson, N. J., were specially invited to attend and they responded in large numbers. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Montefiore Lodge, No. 70, of Buffalo, at a special meeting held Tuesday evening, March 11, entertained Brothers President Charles H. Shapiro, Joseph H. Ullman, Charles Hartman and Dr. Joseph Silverman on their return from Toronto. The meeting was held at the Statler Hotel and was followed by a banquet. Much credit is due to Brothers David Russlander, I. M. Hellwitz, Sundel J. Holender and Samuel Cristall for the success of the meeting.

Manhattan-Washington Lodge, No. 19, Maccabee Lodge, No. 71, and Edward Everett Lodge, No. 97, held a get-together and good fellowship meeting Wednesday evening, March 12, which was addressed by Brother President Charles H. Shapiro, Brother Charles J. Foltz, president of Manhattan-Washington Lodge; Brother Saumel H. Hofstadter, president of Maccabee Lodge, and Brother Louis W. Osterweis, president of Edward Everett Lodge, and Brother Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, secretary of the district. There were also some interesting brief talks by other visiting brothers.

Mt. Sinai Lodge No. 2 listened to a most illuminating address on the "League of Nations" by Brother Leonard J. Obermeier. Brother Obermeier is a prominent attorney in New York and a most eloquent speaker. His most interesting talk was followed by discussion participated in by Brother Samuel Fleischman, the new Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of the I. O. B. B.; Brother Dr. Richard Stern and Brother Lazarus E. Schlechter. The meeting was presided over by Brother Dr. Samuel Greenfield. Brother Greenfield and Brother Charles Hartman are arranging a series of meetings to be addressed by prominent speakers.

Manhattan-Washington Lodge, No. 19, mourns the loss of Brother Henry Meyers, who was one of the most active members of the lodge. He was a member of the Board of Governors of the Home for the Aged in Yonkers for a number of years, was also its Past President and Chairman of the Entertainment Committee. Brother Dr. Joseph Silverman and Brother Rev. Schlager officiated at the funeral, which took place at Temple Emanu-El. Brother Henry Meyers was at one time one of the leaders in District No. 7 while residing in the city of New Orleans.

Henry Jones-Lebanon Lodge, No. 79, will celebrate its Golden Anniversary by a special banquet at the Carlton Hall, March 22, 1919. Among the guests invited are the Governor of the State of New York, Alfred E. Smith; President of the District, Brother Charles H. Shapiro; Brother Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee of District No. 1; Brother Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein, member of the general committee, and Brother Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, Secretary of the District. The committee on arrangements consists of Brothers Adolph Hirsh, chairman; Israel Ben Schreiber, Louis G. Schwartz, secretary of the Lodge; Isidore Anhalt, Joel Del Monte, Henry Ettinger, Louis Fabricant, Lester M. Friedman, Norbert Heinsheimer, Meyer H. Hirsch, Joshua Kantrowitz, Max K. Kottler, Julius Kirschstein, Joseph Levenson, Mo. Minzesheimer, Ely Rosenberg, Hon. Isaac Siegel, Jacob Shapiro, Henry Sobel, Louis E. Stern and Raymond S. Wile.

Brother Louis W. Osterweis, of Edward Everett Lodge, No. 97, who is the chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee for 1919, has appointed [illegible] tee this year to co- [illegible] urther the work of [illegible] s. [illegible] y of the Home for [illegible] of Yonkers, of [illegible] eb is President, gave a very fine Purim entertainment for the old folks at the Home, which was greatly enjoyed by a large number of visitors.

Brother William Klapp, President of Rehoboth Lodge, No. 38, with the cooperation of Brother Simon Platt and Julius Lewin, has already made a substantial increase in the membership of the Lodge for the year 1919.

Chananiah Lodge, No. 165, I. O. B. B., held its regular meeting on Sunday, March 2, at B'nai B'rith headquarters.

Vice-President Brother Adolph Weiss, son of Broher Henry Weiss and nephew of Brother Albert Weiss, ex-presidents of Chananiah Lodge, occupied the President's chair on account of the absence of the President, Assemblyman Brother Morris Block.

One candidate was initiated and much favorable comment was made on account of the able manner in which Brother Adolph Weiss presided, and particularly so because of his masterly address to the candidate upon his initiation.

Ex-President Brother Lowenstein was presented with a beautiful cane as a token of the esteem of his brethren and in appreciation of his untiring labors while directing the destiny of Chananiah Lodge as its worthy President.

Brother Emanuel Stern, the nestor of Chananiah Lodge, presented this gift to Brother Lowenstein in behalf of his brethren in his usual eloquent and impressive manner.

Great activity prevails in Chananiah Lodge; new candidates are being proposed at nearly every meeting. The officers are all young men, and are working heart and soul for the interest of the Lodge and in carrying out the doctrines and principles of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

At the interesting meeting of Gihon Lodge No. 195, of Zanesville, Ohio, held on Feb. 16, 1919, officers for the ensuing term were elected and installed.

Plans for the work of the Lodge were discussed, and it was resolved to inaugurate a campaign to secure all the Jewish residents of the city as members.

Joseph Lodge No. 73 of St. Joseph, Mo., held a Past President's Night on Wednesday, March 5. Some of the past presidents of the lodge spoke of their experiences and an enjoyable evening was spent by all.

Memorial services for departed members of the lodge will be held at the meeting in March at the Temple in conjunction with the regular Friday night services.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

The question of consolidation of the lodges of Pittsburgh, Pa., was the subject of discussion at the meeting of Shaar Sholem Lodge No. 154, of Pittsburgh, Pa., held on Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919. A number of representatives of the local lodges was present.

The last meeting of McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., was unusually well attended. A large percentage of the membership including new members of Duquesne greatly enjoyed the session. A class of candidates was initiated by the degree team. In the course of four meetings, more than thirty new members were enrolled on the roster of this Lodge.

A meeting of Jericho Lodge No. 44, of Pittsburgh, Pa., held on Feb. 23, 1919, was well attended and new plans were submitted for the Lodge's activities, and the outlook is most gratifying. An active campaign for members will be undertaken soon.

Braddock Lodge No. 516 gave a dance on Wednesday evening, March 19. The affair was in honor of B'nai B'rith soldiers and sailors, who have returned from service.

An interesting meeting of Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114, of Pittsburgh, Pa., was held on March 5, 1919. In addition to the regular business session, Mr. L. Lewenter delivered an address on "Wilsonism."

A publicity committee has been appointed for the joint lodges of Pittsburgh, and the chairman thereof, is Mr. O. H. Rosenbaum, Past-President of District Grand Lodge No. 3.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

A very enjoyable meeting of Baron de Hirsch Lodge of Butte, Mont., was held on March 6, 1919. The delegates to the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge gave a clear report of the convention, which was enjoyed by all the members present.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Pisgah Lodge, No. 34, of Detroit, Mich., is arranging for a monster class nitiation to be held at Hotel Statler on March 30. The lodge expects to have a splendid and much larger class than it initiated on Jan. 19.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

On Sunday evening, Feb. 16, 1919, at the Hebrew Institute, Isidor Straus Lodge No. 519, of Fort Worth, Texas, eld its annual B'nai B'rith Day celebration.

Mr. Victor H. Hexter, Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, delivered the principal address. A musical program was also successfully carried out under the Cultural Advancement Committee.

An important meeting of Isidor Straus Lodge was held on Feb. 19, at which matters of vital interest to the welfare of the Lodge were considered. In addition thereto the election of delegates to the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge was also held.

On Wednesday evening, Feb. 12, 1919, Gulf Lodge No. 221, of New Orleans, La., held a well attended meeting. Candidates for membership were initiated and new applications were presented.

Election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge and nominations for Constitution Grand Lodge delegates were also held.

Herzl Lodge No. 608, of Houston, Texas, held a well attended meeting on Tuesday evening, March 4, 1919. Delegates to the District Grand Lodge were elected, and at the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

PISGAH LODGE, DETROIT, MICH.

Pisgah Lodge No. 34, of Detroit, Mich., has agreeably succeeded in organizing a club in connection with the Lodge. The club is distinct and separate from the Lodge in its management, yet only members of the Lodge may become members of the club. The quarters, although ample ordinarily, have already become too small to accommodate the attending membership.

The chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of the Lodge is tireless in fighting the traducers of the good name of the Jew.

The Propaganda Committee has been instilled with renewed life and is most active. The membership committee is doing wonders in the matter of securing new members.

JOURNAL MAN AT HOME.

By Fred Lockley,

In Oregon Daily Journal.

["An' we taught 'em to respeck the British soldier," sings a Tommy in one of Kipling's martial ballads. In like manner might those who take just pride in the Davidic tradition exult, and with as just cause, in the light of the records as cited by Mr. Lockley today. In the annals of the Great War there shine resplendent the devotion and the daring of the Jewish fighting man.]

A week or so ago I sat at the speakers' table with Bishop W. T. Sumner. In the course of our talk I said, "I believe the war will do much to wipe out the barriers of racial antipathy and religious prejudice." My remark reminded Bishop Sumner of an incident that happened at a western cantonment. He said a society woman wrote to the commandant of the forces stationed there, saying, "I will be glad to have you send two soldiers to my home to share our Sunday dinner next Sunday. We will see that they have a good dinner and a pleasant time." In a footnote she added, "Send anyone except Jews." The next Sunday there was a ring at her door bell, and when she answered it two smiling six-foot negroes in uniform were on the doorstep with a note from the commandant saying he took pleasure in sending two soldiers to take dinner with her. The note was signed "Major Moses Mosessohn."

When I was in France a Jewish sergeant asked me if I could help him locate Passover bread for 140 of his comrades, all of whom were from Hester and Elizabeth streets, in New York City. I not only located the Passover bread for him, but I was able to direct him to an English-speaking French rabbi, who lived in a nearby village.

We have been rather accustomed to look upon the Jew as the very reverse of a fighting man, but if we have thought this in the past, we have another think coming. I do not know how many Jews served in the army, navy or marines of the American forces, but I know that the Jewish welfare Board has more than 100,000 registration cards of Jews in the service. Of the 80,000 records which have so far been classified, the records show that there are 69,000 in the army, 8,800 in the navy and 1,700 in the marine corps. Of those in the army, more than 35,000 were in the infantry, 6,500 in the artillery, 9,300 in the medical corps, 3,964 in the signal corps and the aviation corps, 1,895 in the engineer corps, 1,213 in the cavalry, 1,019 in the ordnance, 3,521 in the quartermaster corps and 8,814 in other branches.

There were more than 5,000 Jews commissioned officers in the army. There are 30 who are colonels or lieutenant colonels, 202 who are majors, 782 who are wearing captains' bars and more than 4,000 lieutenants. In our navy we have 205 Jewish commissioned officers, one of whom is a rear admiral. In the marine corps there are 25 Jews serving as commissioned officers, one of whom is a brigadier general. Of the Jews in the army, more than 30,000 came from New York City alone; Chicago supplied 2,700. As the Jewish population of the United States is about 3 per cent of our total population, it will be seen that the Jews contributed more than their quota, when it is known that at least 4 per cent of our armed forces are Jews.

Approximately 10 per cent of the Jews in service were not within draft age limits, which means that they were volunteers. In addition to this there were not less than 10,000 Jewish sailors and marines, all of whom, of course, are volunteers. This means that at least 20 per cent of all of the Jews in the service of the United States were volunteers. Up to Nov. 1 the record showed that 451 Jews were killed in action, 142 died of wounds, 96 died from disease and 73 died from accident or other causes, while, in addition to the dead, 1,597 Jewish soldiers were wounded.

The fame of the "Lost Battalion" will never die, but it is not generally known that this battalion, composed of New York troops, was formed largely of Jews from the sweatshops of the East Side. One of these Jewish lads, Abraham Krotoshinsky, was awarded the distinguished service cross for his valor. When the "Lost Battalion" was cut off from the rest or the army, runners were sent out to secure help and reinforcements. One after the other the runners were killed without being able to secure help, and when volunteers were asked for this East Side Jewish boy volunteered for the task and made good.

In the sweatshops of New York City and in the big clothing lofts I have seen thousands of Jews sitting cross legged on tables sewing busily. They did not seem to be heroic figures. Yet I have seen these same East Side clothing workers clad in khaki at the front. They had as much snap, precision and pride in their job as anyone.

There recently appeared in the New York Herald a little poem by Howard V. Sutherland which pays tribute to the Jewish boys from Hester St. The poem follows:

Here's honor to Abe Kowalski and honor to Jakey Stein
And all his Hebrew brethren who stand in the firing line—
Friedmann, Mayer and Gruenbaum, Eliass, Eisman and Cohen—
Daily we read about them as able to hold their own.

Once let the truth be uttered: Nobody loves the Jew;
Said he was all for money; I did and so did you;
Watched him pushing his pushcart, thought he was out of place
Here in a land of freedom; his was the "outcast race."

Few of us deemed him human or figured a heart might beat
Under the ragged garments of the peddler of the street.
Dreams? Well, perhaps of money; never of aught so high
As what Old Glory waves for. You thought so, and so did I.

Well, we were wrong. Confess it! It isn't a race or creed
That makes a man a hero in a nation's hour of need.
There's something else to manhood; or yellow, or black, or white,
Your man in the hour of peril will go to the front and fight.

The Jews, as you see, now prove it. Their children were free at birth,
And now, in return, they are fighting for the freedom of the earth,
Giving their lives if need be that children of later years
Shall be glad and shall live forever in the freedom that is theirs.

Hirsch and Pollack and Feingold, Radski, Finkel and Pelz,
Epstein, Jacobs and Mandel, Weinstein, Baruch and Seltz,
Feiner, Horowitz, Isaacs, Bashwitz, Levy and Franks,
Sachs and Mirsky and Lehner—all of them in the ranks!

Then honor to Joseph Schnitzer and honor to Heyman Behr,
And all the Hebrew brethren in khaki over there.
Put prejudice in your pocket. They fought in the days of yore,
And now when the world is threatened, they are fighting. Men can no more.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Benj. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, will celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of the Order was a cabaret nd dinner at the Commercial club on March 20. Jewish soldiers and sailors eturned from service will be guests of honor and will be welcomed by Govrnor Bamberger, a member of the Lodge.

This celebration will also celebrate the twenty-seventh anniversary of the local Lodge. A novel program is being arranged by the committee in charge. The guests will be entertained by both professional and local artists.

The speakers will be Governor Simon Bamberger, District Deputy Daniel Alexander, Rabbi William Rice and Morris Rosenblatt, president of the Salt Lake Lodge. A most elaborate and enjoyable affair is anticipated.

BUTLER LODGE, BUTLER, PA.

Butler Lodge No. 772, of Butler, Pa., celebrated the 75th anniversary of the Order's existence on Sunday afternoon, March 2, 1919. A large attendance of the members of the Lodge and of those rom out-of-town was present.

It was the most enthusiastic meeting ever held by the Lodge. The club rooms were tastefully decorated and a musical program was duly appreciated by the audience.

Mr. O. H. Rosenbaum, of Pittsburgh, Past-President of the District Grand Lodge, in his address reviewed the history of the Order and pointed out the splendid work that is being done in these days of reorganization and revival.

The fourth annual dance of the Lodge was held Monday evening, March 3, at the Masonic Temple.

Roumanian Anti-Semitism Disgraces Christianity — Hyenas In Human Form

(Special Report to the B'nai B'rith News)

During the war horrifying reports reached us of the cruelties and barbarities committed by enemies of some of the nations at war upon the people of the enemy countries, but it remained for Roumania to make the most infamous record by cruelties upon its own soldiers and its own subjects. Mr. Kraus received a lengthy report signed by Roumanian Jewish citizens of the highest standing which we here publish in part, omitting in a few instances names of officers which appear in the report.

Since the year 1915, the Roumanian government has undertaken the expulsion of Jews settled in the villages and small neighboring cities of the frontier. All the Jews have been expelled from Mamornitza. The Jews of the villages of the districts of Souceava, Neamtz, Bacau, etc., were expelled, among them even those who had been permitted to become citizens and some who were veterans of the war of 1877.

In 1916 an order was issued that Jews, whether they be Roumanian citizens or not, should not be permitted to visit any stations on the frontier. That order was strictly enforced. We call attention to this because it tends to prove that so long as the Roumanian Jews will by law be divided into citizens and non-citizens, the Jewish citizens will be affected by all exceptional measures which affect the others. The question of citizenship or non-citizenship does not govern. The fact that they are Jews does. Foreigners in Roumania have at least the protection of their governments. Jews are treated as foreigners without any protection.

The work carried on by civil and military authorities of Roumania during the war against the Jews tends to make it impossible for about 500,000 of them to live in territory subject to Roumanian laws, unless the League of Nations interferes and interferes strongly. For the honor of humanity which is to be the basis of the broadest and most noble democracy, such a regime as exists there ought not to survive. The only possible cure is to abolish by law forever the Jewish question by enacting positive emancipation for all the Jews of that country without any exception. The Jews living in that country have no other country and their ancestors have lived there for generations.

Inhuman measures have been instituted by civil authorities as well as by the military so that we may suffer treatment worse than that to which any of the nations at war have inflicted on the enemy population. This in spite of the fact that tens of thousands of Jews had gone to fight and die on the frontiers for Roumania, and in spite of the fact that his majesty publicly recognized the loyal conduct of the Jews, both in the army and in the interior.

The Jews were forced to undergo so much misery and were so maltreated that they did not know what to do. The "Calvary" which they endured during eighteen months of war exceeds in horror anything in history inflicted by any nation on its own people.

Immediately after the decree of mobilization, all the Jews who inhabited the districts of Souceava and Neamtz were arrested and escorted to the cities, although all of them were Roumanian subjects and a number of them citizens and some veterans of 1877—all had one or more sons, brothers or a father at the front fighting for their country.

In the district of Neamtz they were not even permitted to take with them their baggage excepting such as agreed never again to return to the village.

In Falticeni they were stopped and imprisoned for four months without any investigation and without judgment. One of them, Mr. Stern, seventy years of age, a citizen and a veteran, had five sons at the front, one of his sons having died in the battle of Oituz. Owing to the tortures inflicted upon him in person, Stern died shortly after being freed.

Another, Mr. Pincles, not having the strength to endure the treatment inflicted upon him, committed suicide by hanging. Another, Mr. Shnurer, requested, upon being freed from prison, for a transcript of the record showing the reason why he was imprisoned. For this request he was remanded to prison where he died.

The Jews of Mamornitza, men, women and children, were led to Dorohoi. Not one Jew was left in the city. The women and children were released after two weeks, but the men were kept prisoners for six months without any charge against them. Among the arrested ones was a family who had a son at the front. The mother died soon after leaving prison. Her husband was sent to fight for his country.

A number of Jews of the district Souceava were sent bound to Falticeni. A few of them were sent to Jassy, where they were freed, as nothing was proven against them.

At Botoshani, Jassy and Bacau the regime of terror started even in the earliest days. On denunciations mostly from boy scouts of the ages of 12 and 13 years, Jews were arrested, beaten and condemned to years of imprisonment because they spoke Yiddish.

At Bacou, Podul-Iloaei, Dorohoi and other places life grew worse from day to day. It was only owing to the state of war that made an exodus en masse of Jews from that country impossible, and yet the Jews continued to do their whole duty, exposing their breasts in the service of the country which treated them as enemies.

Private Silberstein, on Easter day, received twenty-five blows because he purchased a package of tobacco for two francs and then sold it to his sergeant at his request at the same price.

A Jewish soldier was attending services in a synagogue in the village of Frumusica. Major Vasilin entered and ordered him as well as all other Jews to leave the Synagogue, led him to the front and then delivered the following speech to the soldiers: "Jews are traitors and spies, watch them well at the front, for it is they whom we must drive from the surface of the globe; they are worse than the Germans."

Soldier Katz was condemned to death on the charge of espionage, although no proof was furnished against him.

Soldier Segalesco was condemned to die for the same reason and the rabbi of the community was forced to assist in the execution.

Lawyer Dumitru Jonescu of Botosani defended that unfortunate soldier. The court complimented him on his address, but one of the judges said Segalesco had to die in order to frighten the Jews. Judgment of death was pronounced by a vote of three to two. At Patria-Neamtz, fifteen blows were given in public to a young daughter of one of the best families because she spoke the Jewish language in the street.

In the battle of Sevarat, in order to cover the retreat of Battalion 2, light cavalry, a company of 122 Jews were formed under command of a Jewish sub-lieutenant. Of this company only three remained alive. Simha Hascas, a son of a veteran, wounded in the battle of Sevarat, was executed on the suspicion of espionage.

In the retreat of Sevarat 500 Jews survived out of 2,000. General Pressan gave the order that all of them be executed for provoking a mutiny. He, however, revoked that order because there was too large a number to be executed at one time and because it was discovered that there was no mutiny. But he ordered that Lubis Strul and Hascal Simha be executed, claiming that they intimidated others.

Sergeant Worodniceanu and Private Wechsler, Jews, were executed on the suspicion of espionage and were compelled to dig their own graves.

Max Steinberg, going from Hushi to Jassy to learn the fate of his son, spoke on the way to a soldier. For this he was condemned to a month in prison for espionage.

Major Balauta declared in a loud voice that at the first desertion of a Jew he would have all the other Jews who remained shot. A lieutenant of the 8th regment of light cavalrymen, Co. 6, gave orders to Sergeant-Major Jacob of his company, to execute all the Jews he had under his command. This order was carried out on the night of the 21st-22nd of November. The Jews in that company were Ciuraru Talio, Moses Aron Dudel, David Idel, Solomon Herscu, Avram Maier and Jancu and Hertel Idel—the first four mentioned were actually killed, Jancu was seriously wounded, the other, Hertel Idel, fled and escaped death.

In order to escape responsibility for this, the lieutenant noted as present all the assassinated ones until Dec. 11th, when a battle at Cassi-Clabus took place and then he registered them as fallen in battle. The wife of Jancu received several days afterward an official communication that her husband had fallen as a hero in the battle of Clabuc when, as a matter of fact, he was then ill in a Hungarian hospital.

In the same regiment, 8th light cavalry, Private Gottesman was executed for an alleged attempt to desert. This in spite of the protest of Lieutenant Marzescu and Sergeant-Major Vasile, who declared that Gottesman was the best soldier in the company.

In regiment 69 a special platoon of Jews was formed. They were given dark uniforms, being the old black Roumanian uniforms, so that they could furnish better aim for the enemy.

Captain Dumitru Apostoleanu, commandant of the 4th company of the 8th regiment, light cavalry, is reported to have said at a place named "fata Moarta" (the dead daughter) in the region of Cazin, that he would forfeit his head if he returned with a single living Jew.

Second Lieutenant Dr. Cohn attended a post graduate class in Paris. As soon as he learned that Roumania entered into the war he returned to his country and offered his services. He was placed in the hospital for contagious diseases at Jassy, where he contracted typhus fever. In June, 1917, after the epidemic had ceased, Prof. Dr. Le Lorier, of the hospital Regina Maria of Cotofanesti, sent for him. He was, however, ordered to report to the commandant of the 21st infantry. An order was also sent that he be watched closely, as he was suspected of espionage for the reason that "any Jew who will of his own free will come from a foreign country to Roumania and offer his services in time of war must be suspected of bad intentions." This order was sufficient for persecutions against him. A reward of 2,000 francs was offered to whomever could produce evidence against him. On Nov. 1st a strict search was made of his premises and his body. He was then arrested and transported to Jassy, from there to Berlad to the court martial of the first army, where a number of times he was questioned and confronted with accusations. He was then brought before the court martial of the 4th division and after remaining in jail for three months, was given his liberty on the 30th day of January, 1918, as there was nothing shown against him.

General E. Brosteanu said to a Jewish doctor: "You are a Jew?" The doctor answered "yes." Whereupon the general continued: "Ah, you are a kind of rogue, all this time you have been traitors and spies. To you we owe all our ill luck. All that you see about you, famine, death, suffering and sick, all is your work. It is the Jews who have reduced us to this state."

The same doctor presented himself in December, 1916, to Colonel Dr. Rogas. The colonel talked to him in a mocking tone, imitating the intonation of the Jewish jargon. This offended the Jewish doctor, who protested, whereupon the colonel said: "Leave, you impudent Jew."

1. All the soldiers of foreign origin (by this the Jews were understood) will be grouped in separate units. Regiments will constitute platoons and companies of these soldiers according to their number.
2. In order to be homogenous, each of the units mentioned will be formed of soldiers of the same origin.
3. The units composed of foreign elements ought to be drawn up as well as possible. They will take part in all the operations.
4. During the action, in order to make impossible an eventual partial desertion or one en masse, said units will be surrounded by other units and in such a manner that their action can be punished immediately. When needed the respective commandants will arrange that during the action a part of the machine guns will be placed in such a fashion as to permit the immediate punishment of all those who retire from the battle in disorder.
5. You will report as to the execution of this order.

The second day of mobilization the officer of the commissariat, Major Niculescu, called together all the officers and men of the platoons and delivered a short address, then he ordered the Roumanians to leave, Jews to remain. Second Lieutenant Engineer Conn started to retire but was ordered by the major to remain. Conn answered that he was a Roumanian citizen. The major answered: "Yes, but you have not been baptized." Then he gave orders which were an insult to every Jew.

A soldier of the 6th regiment light cavalry of Botoshani was called to headquarters. There he found his father and near him a boy scout. A corporal was seated at the desk and addressed the soldier as follows: "Why did you speak with your father yesterday evening, dirty Jew? What did you discuss?" The soldier answered: "We discussed nothing. I only inquired as to my father's health." The corporal gave the soldier orders to give his father two sharp blows. This the soldier refused to do. Thereupon two guards were called who dragged the son out while the corporal beat the father with a ruler on the ends of his fingers. The soldier was led to a stable, where he was disrobed and beaten until he bled. After four days in prison he was sent to the division charged with being a spy. The superiors of the regiment, however, refused to accept the charge, but condemned him to three days in prison for having spoken to his father in the Yiddish language.

Sergeant Ghinsberg of the 67th regiment (infantry) supervised the construction of cabins at Valcele. One day in the autumn, upon returning with his workmen, he was questioned by the lieutenant as to why he returned so late with his men. He respectfully answered that the place was far away and the roads dark. Thereupon the lieutenant struck him twice saying: "I will show you the reason." Two weeks afterward an order arrived to inflict upon Sergeant Ghinsberg 30 blows in the presence of the entire company. The punishment was inflicted. The soldier ordered to inflict the punishment after striking fifteen blows, said that he was tired and could not strike hard any longer. Then a peasant was ordered to continue the task. He was told: "Listen, strike him hard for he is a Jew and if you do not strike well you will be punished." The peasant said: "If he is a Jew, then trust to me, I will make him happy." Five days afterward Ghinsberg died from the effects of the blows.

A Jewish soldier of the 67th regiment complained to his lieutenant because Sergeant Constantinescu beat him. For makng this complaint the lieutenant had the company lined up for a distance of 100 meters, ordered two oxen to be harnessed to a truck, then one of the oxen to be taken away and in its place the Jew was harnessed and whipped by the sergeant against whom he had complained. He was forced to draw the truck at the side of the ox and to pass before the company. The lieutenant seemed to enjoy it very much. The soldier was ordered to repeat the performance. Before he finished the task he dropped dead.

On the 25th of December two Jewish soldiers, brothers, were called before the colonel who asked them, "Well you are here, traitors that you are." They did not understand the colonel and shrugged their shoulders. This was construed as insubordination. They were put under arrest. The next day they were called to the office where they found their father with his hands tied behind his back. The brothers were told: "You will be tried by court martial because you betrayed your country by insubordination. They protested that they did not know the cause of their arrest and said they were not guilty of any wrongful act. The colonel had previously sent for a number of planks to their father's sawmill. The planks were taken by force. The father respectfully asked for a receipt for the planks so that he might apply to the government in due time for payment. For this he was arrested, maltreated and paraded through the streets of Botoshani in his nightgown. The two brothers were ordered to clean out the toilets with their naked hands. The father was sentenced to six months in prison and afterwards the brothers to one year each. In three months the father died in prison; his wife went insane and died. When the brothers were freed from prison they were sent to fight for the country.

Several Jews, among them Aaron Gold and David Herscu, were recommended for decoration by their officers, but a superior officer erased their names from the recommendation.

Order No. 2315 of the 25th of September, 1916, to the commander of the garrison of Craiova, conforming to the order of the first body of the army was: "Take notice and never allow Jewish soldiers to stand guard."

Confidential
No. 9182-26-9-1916
Circular of Service.

The highest major, the commander of the garrison commends to us the greatest precaution in regard to foreigners (that is to say, Jews) who are in the service of the hospital. For this reason I recommend that only Roumanians be employed in the service of the post office. The adjoining administrator will bring to my knowledge every offense of this order.

Chief of Military Hospital
Regina Elisabete,
SS General Dr. Demosthene.

A Jewish soldier was sent by his lieutenant in a delegation to Colonel Torescu, who asked: "Who sent you as a member of the delegation, Jew?" The soldier replied: "Lieutenant Filipescu." The colonel: "I am going to make him see it." He sent for the lieutenant with whom he had the following dialogue:

Colonel: Why did you send this Jew in a delegation?

Lieutenant: I sent a soldier.

Colonel: You sent a traitor, lieutenant.

Lieutenant: I know that he is a good boy and a soldier of choice.

Colonel: Jews are not soldiers, but traitors and deserters. You will be judged.

The lieutenant was transferred and the soldier was put to the hardest labor, beaten with a belt after being stripped, until the blood ran.

The commander of regiment 45 told his soldiers not to buy anything of Jews, because every Jewish house was a shelter for traitors.

Several soldiers of the reserve of regiment 67, Bacau, stated that Sub-Lieutenant Avramescu of the 3rd company said to him: "Watch well your Jewish comrades, for they are our enemies." Dr. Scharf of Herta being in the street with his camp colleague Dr. Segall, was addressed by a major as follows: "Why do you walk with military doctors? You are spying, you are a traitor, an ordinary spy. I will have you bound and sent to Dorohotu as an ordinary spy."

In November, 1915, one of the days of the Jewish feast of Succoth, soldiers entered the synagogue to find out whether any Jewish soldiers attended religious services. They found three, Leba Moscu, Strul Zissu and Segall Leibu. Those were terribly beaten, bound to a cart and dragged, the horses being driven at a lively gait. At the barracks they were again beaten and bound to trees for a day and a night. The members of the congregation complained of the desecration of their synagogue. Because the congregation complained, sixteen soldiers of the 11th company, 29th regiment, who made no complaint, were put into a dungeon for twenty days.

On the 27th of April Lieutenant Joan Negulesco, commandant of the 11th company, regiment 37, said to the non-commissioned officers of his company: "I turn the Jews over to you and authorize you to hold them closely, to watch every step and to punish them for the least mistake, because this is the only way to treat the Jewish soldiers."

A Jewish soldier of the same regiment complained against the corporal, owing to his treatment, and received the following answer: "You are a Jew and you have no right in the Roumanian army; go hang yourself like the Jew of the 8th regiment (that Jew committed suicide to avoid further persecution).

On Sept. 16th, 1916, a regiment retired toward Sovarat in order to come to the aid of the 8th division. On the way many soldiers fell from fatigue. Among them was a Jewish soldier, Lupu Herscu. The colonel being informed of this and learning that he was a Jew, ordered him shot on the spot.

A company of Jews was formed of the 4th regiment, light cavalry, which fought at Calugareni. The Jews were placed in front. Of 120 only thirty survived. The French officers, having learned of this, protested, and then an order was given to thereafter suppress forming Jews into companies.

Several Roumanian soldiers were made prisoners by the Germans and were sent by Colonel Sturdza with manifestos to distribute them at the Roumanian front. One among them, Private Haimovici, of the 40th regiment, Calugareni, was a Jew. As soon as they passed through the Roumanian frontier they requested to be sent to headquarters, where they disposed of the entire stock of manifestos. For this patriotic deed the Christian soldiers were decorated while Haimovici was sent to prison and executed on Feb. 20th in the presence of the regiment. When questioned as to the reason which induced him to return, Haimovici replied: "Love for my country."

In regiment 37, upon the order of Major Stanescu, all the Jews were taken out and a separate company formed of them, except the Jew Rudi Nadler of the 4th company, who was chosen by Lieutenant Nenciulescu as interpreter for a French officer. The company formed of Jews from the 37th regiment opposed a fierce resistance in the battle of Mt. Clabus at Oituz, remaining in position and preventing the German army from advancing. Of the 160 Jews who composed it, sixty died, many were wounded and not one was taken prisoner and for this reason they received the nickname "the Bavarian Company," but not one of them was decorated, although the order came to decorate all soldiers of merit who had distinguished themselves in service.

In the battle of Mt. Albert, two Jewish corporals and sixteen soldiers defended the position, holding back the enemy. They were proposed for decoration but were refused it by superior authorities.

One of the corporals received a telegram telling him of the death of his mother. He asked permission to go to her burial. Lieutenant Vasilin refused him and is reported to have said: "That is nothing, one Jew less. May it please God to have all the Jews die."

December 10, 1916, several Jews were transferred to Regiment 36. Lieutenant Niculae Jonescu on seeing them said: "You have come to defend the country, Itzic?" and struck each of them in the face.

A Jewish soldier presented himself for mobilization on the 16th of August, 1916. On the 28th he left with his regiment for Dobroudje. Sept. 5 he was wounded and taken to a hospital at Bucharest; on the 8th of Oct. he reported for duty. On Dec. 6 he was transferred to Regiment 3. He was sent with a delegation for munitions. On the way to the station of Urechesti he fell ill. He went to a hospital and did not recover for several months. On May 6th he reported to his regiment for duty. He remained there until June 27, when he was sent to the front, took part in the battle near Slanic, July 31. Later he fought in several battles. He was proposed for decoration by Sub-Lieutenant Ananie. He remained at the front until Oct. 25. On the 26th of Oct. he was arrested and charged with desertion for the period during which he was sick. He was sentenced to 20 years hard labor.

The above are only a few of the many cases we can report, but sufficient to show what the Jews of Roumania have to suffer.

We affirm with unchanging conviction that the pretended Jewish spies, as well as those who were executed for suspicion of espionage, were only the victims of the hatred which had been created intentionally in order to find a scapegoat for the defeat of the first part of the campaign.

Sixty years of official anti-semitism of the Roumanian government, together with the hundreds of exceptional laws made against foreigners to be applied against the Jews, have not been able to do so much harm nor excite the savage hatred as these two years of propaganda at the front. It is a ferocious hatred from top to bottom. The police, the administration, the schools and the professors, the scholars and students, the lower classes and the peasants all have been nourished with this infamous lie that it is we who have sold the interests of the country, and that we all have been deserters, spies and traitors. And the government takes no measures to establish the facts and protect our lives. It does not do anything to change this criminal atmosphere, which can be of no advantage to the country, which, on the contrary, is harmful to its highest interests, and which certainly will lead to general anarchy if the masses will see that they can do anything—blows, devastations, murders, without fear of being punished.

As terrible as the facts herein set forth are, it would have been worse if our luck would not have brought at the head of the diplomatic mission of the United States of America Mr. Charles Vopicka, a man who has shown for all the miseries which afflicted the Jewish population of Roumania not only a mind full of understanding, but a heart full of sympathy and human love, which made him act and interfere on behalf of every one and everywhere. He helped where protection was needed and was reachable. It will be sufficient to mention one fact which clearly shows what Hon. Mr. Vopicka meant and means for the Jews of Roumania. Mr. Charles Vopicka in Nov., 1918, happened to hear by mere rumor that a pogrom was planned against the Jews. He interfered proprio motu with General Coanda, the Minister-President at that time, and he interfered so energetically that the Roumanian government was compelled to take at once necessary measures. The excesses were prevented and many lives saved.

Mr. Charles Vopicka is in consequence justly considered by the whole Jewish population as the representative of true Democracy, and as the only man who rescued and can rescue them in evil days of oppression and weariness.

THE JEWISH CONTRIBUTION TO MODERN SOCIAL ETHICS.

By Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus, Harvard.

Modern social ethics are after all only slight extensions of the ethical doctrine contained in the Jewish sacred books. The first of the Ten Commandments contains the superb conception of the one God, a conception toward which the various Christian churches after many wanderings—pagan, metapyhisical and mythical—are at last returning.

Wisdom in Sabbath Rule.

One of the most scientifically determined of modern ethical standards is the rule that men and women had better work only six days out of seven. The wisdom of this rule has been demonstrated ethically, medically and economically after much inquiry and much experience with regard to the best industrial use of the human body; but this new industrial doctrine is explicitly stated in the Fourth Commandment, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work". We are so perfectly accustomed to this abstinence from labor one day out of seven that we do not in the least understand how novel and indeed preposterous it seems to a Japanese, Chinese or other Oriental who has had no knowledge of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. Baron Kikkawa, the first Japanese to take the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Harvard College, writes thus in his Autobiography: "I remember one Sunday I went out in the yard (at the house of Rev. Charles Nathaniel Folsom of Concord) and was playing ball, when Mrs. Folsam, a most gentle and kindly person, ran out of the house and scolded me (the only time she ever did so). I did not then understand the meaning of Sabbath, and I was completely bewildered; but to her eyes my act was a most grievous sin." Kikkawa was at that time twelve years old. He was not then a Christian, and never became one.

An immense contribution made to modern social ethics by the Jewish people is their conception of family life, all of which is founded on the Fifth Commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother". The family has been the stronghold of Jewish racial purity, religious duty and religious sentiment. When George Washington was trying to get a large tract of land which he held on the Kanawha river settled by men from Virginia, the exhortation he addressed to his young tenants came straight out of Genesis, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth."

Jewish and Christian Sentiment Contrasted.

As president of Harvard College I had many opportunities of comparing the strength of the Jewish family sentiment with the Christian. In forty years I never knew a case in which a Jewish family failed to come to the assistance of a son taken seriously ill at Harvard College; while I witnessed many an instance in which a Christian father and mother came reluctantly, or not at all, even when I repeatedly urged their coming. This observation I made on all kinds of Jewish families, the very rich, the very poor, and those in moderate circumstances. It made no difference to the Jewish fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, whether the case was one of dangerous contagious disease or not; they came to the sufferer's side.

Pictures of Jewish Homes.

After a somewhat long life in which I have seen many family interiors in many lands, the strong impression on my mind is that the home pictures to which I look back as sweetest, tenderest, most loyal towards parents, and most reverential towards God are pictures of Jewish homes. This result must be attributable to the peculiar ethical conceptions which are the foundation of Jewish family life.

Characteristic Jewish Qualities.

The love of children and the delight of the elders in the happiness of the children are characteristic Jewish qualities. In their religious festivals, such as the Passover, or the Feast of Tabernacles, the children invariably take part, and the observances are such as children can take happy part in. There are special foods for each great festival, and out-of-door observances in which children take eager part. Christian families have imitated these Jewish practices to great advantage; so that we have squash pies, mince pies, and succotash at Thanksgiving, turkey and plum pudding at Christmas, hot cross buns on Good Friday, and eggs at Easter, mainly for the delight of the children. The Jewish candle on the altar is multiplied on the Christmas tree.

Benevolence: From Synagogue to Church.

Again, practical benevolence, bringing relief to suffering, was one of the pillars of the Synagogue from earliest times, and has only been taken over from the Synagogue into the Christian churches. Even the ministrations to the "silent poor", which is one of the benevolent activities of many Christian churches today, is of Jewish origin. And today the great Jewish charities are better managed than the Christian.

Preserving a Literature.

But the great service which the Jewish race has rendered to the rest of the world, not only in its early centuries but all through the dark times of the Middle Ages and its centuries of persecution, has been the keeping alive of a learned class and a great literature—the greatest of all literatures till within comparatively recent years. For centuries before the Christian era the Jewish people had been in possession of a literature embodied in writing which was of the noblest quality. It comprehended history, biography, chronicles, laws, songs sacred and profane, prophecies, visions, and innumerable rules and maxims of the conduct of earthly life. The first three verses in Genesis in the King James version are the most superb sentences in the English language. The Book of Job is unsurpassable as literature. The 19th Psalm is the most magnificent of sacred songs. The 150th Psalm is the most glorious ascription of praise to God ever written. Because they had this literature the Jews were able to keep alive the tradition of education in family and community; and today the Jewish families are the most eager in any community to profit by all provisions made for public education. It was not till the Protestant Reformation that any corresponding desire for education on the part of Christian families began to find expression in public action.

The Jewish contributions then to modern social ethics, and particularly to the ethics of democracy, have been great indeed. How the democracies are going to acknowledge their obligations and show their gratitude by deeds is not yet plain. —(The Argus.)

Sketches of Modern Jewish History

By Gotthard Deutsch

XVI

From the July Revolution to the February Revolution (1830-1848).

Berthold Auerbach has in his sympathetic sketches of the village life in his Swabian home, one that is particularly brilliant. It is entitled "Befehlerles" and presents a busybody petty official who can't live without issuing some kind of order every day. The psychology of such a chanteclere bureaucrat who is convinced that the universe would go to rack and ruin were he to cease for a moment to devote to it his incessant care, is constantly recurring in the petty German principalities and in the annoying, though ludicrous, interest which their governors from "Serehissimus" (the prince) down to the county clerk are taking in the improvement of their beloved Jewish subjects.

The period from 1830 to 1848 is especially fertile in producing ordinances devoted to these noble humanitarian ideals. It would fill a good-sized volume, were one to present a collection of all "Befehlerles" wisdom that was wasted on the Jews, and therefore only the most important and most typical cases can find a place here. The city states like Frankfort shall first be considered, because Frankfort's position with its numerous and wealthy Jewish congregation which, enjoying full civic and political equality from 1811 tq 1814 under French influence, was put back on the basis of a moderated helotry after Waterloo, is highly typical for the story of these years of struggle.

The senate, the governing body of the city, demanded in 1830 that the Jews improve their form of worship without violating the traditions of their religion. One can easily notice this condescending tone which says to the Jews: we know you are a backward people but we shall allow you a little time to improve, just as a judge would put a prisoner on good behavior. We must, however, give the Frankfort senate credit for a very sensible action on an internal affair of the congregation. A banker, named Flersheim, refused to have his child circumcised. As in those days the congregation possessed corporate rights, the birth was to be registered in the office of the congregation. The rabbi, Solomon Trier, one of the last representatives of old-fashioned German orthodoxy, refused to register an uncircumcised boy as a Jew, and obtained from various rabbis and Jewish scholars opinions to this effect. The senate, however, refused to act on this suggestion, declaring that this was an internal question, while from the political aspect the child was a Jew, as long as the father wished to raise it as such. In view of later evolutions it is interesting to observe that among those who indorsed the view of Rabbi Trier, were Leopold Zunz who in his last years so strongly expressed his indifference to all religious questions, and Samuel Hirsch, who in America stood on the opposite side. "The Very Honorable and Highly Learned" fathers of the city of Frankfort, recognizing in this case the modern principle of separation of state and church, were in other respects rather slow in acting on this very principle. In a previous chapter the law of 1824 was cited, which limited the number of Jewish marriages to 12 per annum, with the further proviso that of these twelve only two men had a right to bring out of town brides into the city. This limitation was in 1834 so amended that the restriction of marriages for natives was abrogated, while those regarding foreigners remained in force. In 1845 further progress was made, and all restrictions on marriage of Jews were repealed, but even then there was a "provided" attached to the law. Marriages of Frankfort Jews with those of other states were permitted for a period of ten years by a law, issued Oct. 21, 1846. Before the ten years had elapsed, the revolution of 1848 broke out. The "Very Honorable, Noble and Highly Learned"—to give them their full title—senators fought hard, they again tried the slow method of chopping the dog's tail off by pieces so that it should not hurt so much, but a law published Feb. 20, 1849, finally abolished all civic and political disabilities of the Jews.

In a municipal republic there was at least a chance of a variety of opinions, but in the small monarchial states all was centered on "Serenissimus." The duchy of Anhalt was at least from seventeenth century on, a place of refuge for the Jews. Anhalt-Dessau is known to Jewish history through Moses Mendelssohn. The broader spirit of the ruler and his benevolence to the Jews had a great deal to do with the inner reformation of the Jews. This benevolence had sometimes a comical aspect, such as an old maid governess might exhibit in the case of a grown up young lady whom she continues to watch in her readings and social manners. Such a specimen of paternalism is found in the confirmation of Solomon Herxheimer (1801-1884) as land-rabbiner of Anhalt-Bernburg. "We, by the Grace of God, Alexius Friedrich Christian, senior ruling duke of Anhalt, etc. etc., have in our grace resolved to harmonize the religious and communal condition of the Israelitish subjects of our states with the general welfare and in this way to carry out our most gracious intentions conceived some years ago, and therefore we have called Dr. Herxheimer, formerly Kreisrabbiner of Eschwege not only as Landrabbiner but also as teacher of religion and as preacher." Then the senior ruling duke goes on by the grace of God to tell the Landrabbiner how he shall invoke the divine power to assist him in the conscientious discharge of his duties so that he can confidently look forward to the day when he shall give account of his ministration in the presence of the omiscient, holy and just judge of the universe. The Landrabbiner is then admonished to endeavor to remove the abuses and everything non-essential in religious practice which may have overshadowed the genuine Mosaic religion and morality and may have caused disorder in the service. He shall see to it that the music in the synagog shall be dignified, and that the reading of the Torah shall not be done with the customary cantillation, and even that the ritual baths for the women shall be properly improved. If he will do these and a number of other things, he may rest assured of his sovereign's protection and gracious contentment. We have no record how Dr. Herzheimer, whose catechism reached its 29th edition in 1883, and who remained in office fully half a century, justified his gracious sovereign's confidence, but the February revolution did more for the Landrabbiner's flock than the abrogation of the "Trop" and the improved sanitation of the Mikwah. The full emancipation of the subjects of Duke Alexius Friedrich Christian was decreed Mar. 27,. 1848.

Passing to the middle-sized states we find in the kingdom of Hanover a specimen of reaction pure and simple. At the beginning of this period King William IV of England was also king of Hanover. The British constitution which gave the Jews civic equality had no influence on the situation in Hanover. The diet had in 1837 passed a bill which at least abrogated the medieval "Schutz" system which made the existence of a Jew, no matter how long his family had resided in the country, dependent on the arbitrary will of the authorities. The bill was passed June 9, but the death of the king which occured shortly afterwards (June 20) prevented it from becoming law. William was succeeded by his brother Ernst August who, while a British prince, speaking German with difficulty, and member of the House of Lords, had not much use for a parliamentary form of government. Even as late as 1848 his majesty had scruples on the subject of the emancipation of the Jews. He thought the Jews were not yet ripe for such an act of charity, as he declared to a committee of the diet, March 20. The bill was nevertheless made a law on Sept. 5 of the same year. Justice requires that we do not overlook the bureaucratic spirit of the king's advisers who considered themselves the final arbiters of the question when their subjects were mature enough to take care of themselves, and who being tories in the continental sense as the king was a tory in the British sense, were filled with that spirit of conceit which is mainly responsible for antisemitism in its various shades. The "Schutz" was abolished by a law of Sept. 30, 1842, but even then peddlers, second hand shop keepers, cattle dealers and others engaged in what the law called "Nothhandel" (petty trading) were not considered ripe enough for the benefit of full civic rights. A benevolent official suggested to Samson Raphael Hirsch (1808-1888), then already a recognized leader of orthodoxy and Landrabbiner at Emden, that he issue a dispensation from the Sabbath law for Jewish apprentices so as to assist the benevolent bureaucracy in its endeavor to lead its Israelitish wards to more useful occupations. It took another five years until a law, passed Feb. 27, 1847, abolished the restriction imposed on the Jews in section 78 of the "Reichsabschied" (federal statute) of Augsburg, passed Feb. 14, 1551 which prohibited the transfer of claims held by Jews to Christians.

The matter seems important enough to deserve interpretation. The lending of money was almost the only means of making a livelihood left to the Jews in the 16th century, and even in this they were restricted, and it was often impossible for a Jew to collect a claim by a law suit. As the lord under whose protection the Jews lived had a tax interest in their business, he would occasionally protect this interest by having their claims transferred to himself through a cession, and present himself as the creditor in court. This was to be prevented. It is a pity that king Ernst August did not wait with this remedial legislation another four years. It would have been an appropriate tercentenary, showing the progress of modern ideas. The progress was indeed slow. As late as 1839 the police of Stade renewed an ordinance which prohibited the Jews visiting the fair—outside of fairtimes they were not admitted—to leave their homes between 10 P.M. and 7 A.M. They were in many places, even where they had the right of residence kept in a stockade at night, being considered as suspicious characters. Their only chance of proper treatment was when they had money, and especially when they lived outside the jurisdiction of the particular sovereign who needed their financial assistance. Herr von Stralenheim, minister of Hanover to the Federal Council which had its permanent seat in Frankfort on the Main, was charged with the task of contracting a loan through the house of Rothschild. Baron Anselm, the head of the firm, did not believe that the conditions of the bond issue were sufficiently favorable to sell the bonds, and von Stralenheim reports to the home government that old Anshel's "wahre Judennatur" makes him utilize the embarrassment of the kingdom for his own benefit, May 22, 1831. It is a testimony to the proper valuation of the "wahre Judennatur" to state here that in 1866 Israel Simon, the financial adviser of the last king, George V followed his master into his exile in Penzing near Vienna and remained there until his death. He was a strictly observant Jew, representing the old court Jew traditions, as he had inherited them from his father Ezekiel, the financial adviser of Ernst August, who had in turn inherited them from his great grandfather Michael David (died 1756), the founder of the still existing foundation, originally intended as a "Klaus" where prebendaries should study the Talmud day and night, but now utilized for Jewish educational purposes. A grandson of Ezekiel Simon, Julius, was judge. He found Judaism a handicap in his career, embraced Christianity, but had so much of a remnant of self-respect left that he considered it necessary to justify this step before the forum of public opinion in a pamphlet "Gedanken eines Juden," 1885. He might have succeeded better, had he followed the example set by a professor who said in reply to the pastor's question, whether he was filled with the belief in the truth of Christianity: "Your Reverence, I am filled with the belief in the truth that without the faith in Christianity I shall never become regular professor."

The Talmud (Yoma, 67 b) reports that when the high priest closed the reading from the Torah on Yom Kippur, he said: "There is a great deal more written in this book than I have read to you." This is my own experience. I am tempted to give so many more facts from my collection of data on the paternal form of government in its attitude to the Jews. In the grandduchy of Hesse a Jew who wished to obtain the "Schutz" had to deposit 1,000 florins to prove that he was not a pauper, but this was not sufficient. An order, passed in 1830, demanded in addition an affidavit that the petitioner had not borrowed the money and had not bribed any official or otherwise tried to obtain unlawful influence. In the small Thuringian states the governments were especially active in civilizing the Jewish religion. The duke of Saxe-Meiningen informs his Israelitish subjects in 1839 that he wishes to see the German language gradually introduced in the synagog. On the 19th of April 1842 he again informs them that on the ground of a decision by the Landrabbiner, Joseph Hoffman, secular education is so important that Jewish children attending public schools may write on their Sabbath. In the neighboring duchy of Saxe Weimar, consisting of three larger and twenty smaller patches on the map, and comprising 1,397 square miles with about 400,000 inhabitants of whom there may have been in those days 1,200 Jews, the grandduke on June 20, 1823, issued a law which not only made the German language compulsory and permitted mixed marriages with the proviso that the offspring be raised as Christians, but regulated all details of the service, including provisions how the Torah shall be opened and closed, and that the children shall not be blessed by their parents in the synagog. Hesse-Nassau again educated its Israelitish subjects by a law of Feb. 3, 1843, which for the sake of proper decorum in the synagog prohibited the sale of the synagog honors (Mizwot) and the holding of services in private homes. Regulation of circumcision which we find in various states, such as Hesse-Nassau and the Grandduchy of Hesse, in 1843 and 1844 might pass as a sanitary measure, but an official report respectfully submitted in 1844 by the radical reformer, Mendel Hess (1807-1871), Landrabbiner of Saxe-Weimar, the man who conducted services in German, reported the members who absented themselves to the authorities in order that their peddler licenses be withdrawn, who officiated at mixed marriages, etc., officiated also at the induction into office of Hendel Floersheim of Geisa who was appointed caretaker of the Mikwah. Hendel had to appear at the court house of Lengsfeld, was duly sworn that she would perform her duties faithfully, and a copy of the proceedings was sent to the congregation of Geisa who was thus authorized to allow Hendel to perform her duties.

Nobody will deny the interest attached to these relics of a history which for the understanding of the present generation might be three centuries instead of three quarters of a century old. Exigencies of space demand that we confine ourselves to the most typical cases, and even of these only a selection can be given. The kingdom of Saxony presents such a typical case. The ruler, then called Elector had about 1530 expelled the Jews from his state. In vain did the Jews try to make him revoke the edict. The usual way of the Shtadlan (lobbyist) method failed. Josel Rosheim, very experienced in this business, obtained a letter of introduction to Luther, the Elector's spiritual adviser, from Pastor Capito of Strasburg, Luther's admirer and much valued propagandist in Alsace. Luther would not even see him. The edict of expulsion remained in force for fully two centuries. Elector August II was ambitious. He saw the opportunity of becoming king of Poland, and sacrificed the "true gospel" for which his ancestor had fought so hard. He became a Catholic, but this change of heart was not sufficient for the purpose. One had to have a lot of change in the purse in order to become king of Poland. So Augustus, being elected in 1697, called Berman Halberstadt, or as he was officially called, Berent Lehmann, to Dresden in spite of the protests of the citizens, and the beginning once being made, a congregation was soon established.

Another breach was laid in the Chinese wall through the fairs of Leipsic. These fairs attracted from all parts of Europe, especially from Poland, numerous Jews to the city who were welcomed, for they brought business which might otherwise have gone elsewhere. They had the right to remain during the three weeks of the fair, a week preceding it and a week following it, and so another settlement followed. The law of August 16, 1838, legalized the condition. The Jews were restricted to these two cities, but the government took care of their spiritual needs. They appointed an "Oberrabbiner" for Dresden, and the choice fell upon the great scholar Zechariah Frankel (1801-1875), a native of Prague. Through Frankel's influence the oath more judaico was abolished, and we are indebted to the controversy which arose on this occasion for a scholarly work of Frankel's on this subject. Other restrictions remained, and were even reintroduced in 1851 after a brief interval,

The relief work for the salvation of the homeless Jewish war orphans of Galicia and Bukowina, which is the object of our society, and was organized in the first year of our activity, has been further developed in the last year. The homes for war orphans which had been begun, were completed and opened, new homes were created and those previously established were enlarged as far as possible. The assistance granted to war orphans placed with private families was continued and very considerably increased. Our station for clothing the needy had to respond to numerous calls. We are happy to state that we were in position to respond to all calls in spite of the enormous difficulties in procuring garments.

The liberation of further districts in eastern Galicia and Bukowina placed before us a much larger task. The number of war orphans appealing to us for assistance was considerably increased and put new and larger tasks before us. The indefatigable activities of the stations of the central committee established in Cracow and Lemberg which did valuable pioneer work, deserve full acknowledgement. This must especially be said of the comprehensive and systematic activities of the Lemberg station under the supervision of its zealous president Dr. Emil Parnas, which owing to its location, in the midst of the war territory, had to face unusual claims. An excellently organized activity has been started there to meet all demands for food, garments, monetary assistance and for the placing of war orphans from that district. This station assisted by the equally well organized committees and representatives in the provincial towns selects the buildings available for the homes, supervises the work in the various places and superintends the enrollment of the wards. Our society furnishes the means for the alteration and for the furniture of the homes, besides beds, clothes, linen and shoes for our wards. We also have to furnish bed linen and garments from time to time to replace those that were used up.

Lemberg

In Lemberg is located the war orphans home "Theresagasse" in which there are 57 boys and 43 girls. "Zbrogownia," formerly used as a branch of the collecting office, was changed into a war orphan's home sheltering at present 23 boys and 27 girls. Besides this, there are in Lemberg, three shelters for children, namely, "Bernsteingasse," "Lokietkagasse" and "Brajerowska" in which 22 boys and 32 girls are taken care of. Finally, there is a shelter for girls in the "Piokarskagasse" which holds 20 girls.

Przemysl

The war orphan's home in Pryzemysl was enlarged in accordance with the plans made last year and in addition to it, a shelter for children was created. Both institutions take care of 52 boys and 71 girls so that Przemysl at present has 123 children who are cared for in homes.

Sambor

The war orphan's home in Sambor also was enlarged in accordance with a previous plan and possesses at present facilities to accommodate 110 children.

Jaworow

The war orphan's home in Jaworow is now taxed to its full capacity. It shelters at present 21 boys and 12 girls.

Sanok

In Sanok, a war orphan's home was established which received 12 boys and 14 girls. Since this home was too small and the opportunity for enlargement was found, it was so enlarged as to provide accommodation for 52 beds so that the number of wards can be increased to this figure.

Jaroslau

In order to meet a pressing demand, a war orphan's home was established in Jaroslau and 40 children, namely, 18 boys and 22 girls were placed there.

Stanislau

In Stanislau, two adjoining pieces of property were rented and adapted and furnished as a war orphan's home. Owing to the difficulty in shipping the furniture and garments the opening of the home which is to shelter 60 children, had to be postponed. It will, however, be possible to open it in a short time.

Rymanow

In Rymanow the preparations for the establishment of a war orphan's home have advanced so far that it will soon be possible to open it. 32 war orphans are already on the waiting list.

Kolomea

In Kolomea we have at present made preparations for a shelter home because we have to take care of 50 children of school age. At present, the home accommodates 28 children. In there was a war orphan's home accommodating 27 boys and 38 girls and in the war orphan's home shelters 20 boys and 38 girls. The war orphan's home in

Tarnopol

Stryj

where 120 war orphans are placed, are also as before managed by the station Lemberg.

The station Cracow which is under the administration of the efficient president Court Councilor Joseph Sare, Vice-Mayor of the city of Cracow, displayed during the last year, the same energetic and beneficial activity which it had displayed before. Through the initiative of this station, a shelter for orphans was established in whose opening was recorded in our last report.

Cracow

Foundation Ernsdorf
(It might perhaps be better to say Ernsdorf Institute)

The shelter and orphan home in Bielitz, the Simachowitz-Foundation, opened February 1st of last year accommodating 60 orphans. This institute is under the self-sacrificing care of the trustees of this foundation whose president, Rev. Dr. Steiner, aided by the founders, Berthold and Anna Simachowitz, have done yeoman's work to create this institution and are devoted to its administration.

We had repeatedly occasion to ascertain that the wards in all these institutions are doing well and that the homes are under excellent administration, both from the educational and from the economic points of view, in spite of the immense difficulties which have to be met at present in the provision of food and garments. The exemplary co-operation of the central stations with the local committee is everywhere a guarantee for the efficient management of our institutions.

The local committees deserve special recognition for their efficient work in the creation and the administration of the homes. The following men and women deserve to be named particularly —Director Oranz, Mesdames Dr. Reichenstein, Dr. Klaften, Rabbi Dr. Caro and Dr. Meisels in Lemberg, Dr. Joachim Goldfarb in Przemysl, Imperial Councilor, Rabbi Aaron Lewin and Dr. Rotenstreich in Sambor, Rabbi Fraenkel in Jaworow, Imperial Councillor Maximilian Hauptmann in Sanok, Imperial Councillor Julius Strisower in Jaroslau, Dr. Carl Halpern in Stanislau, Lazar Schaechner in Rymanow, Mesdames Antonio Hulles and Caroline Schiller in Kolomea, Dr. Rosenzweig in Czortkow, David Lwow in Tarnopel, Dr. Carol Singer in Steryj, Dr. S. Reich in Pzeszow and the secretaries of the stations, Ruben Zahl and Danziger.

Unfortunately, the projected establishment of orphan homes in Cracow and Zuckmantel could not be carried out because of difficulties in sanitation due to local conditions.

The state pays for all the wards placed in homes and shelters 1.50 crowns per child and per diem.

In view of the present high prices it is impossible in spite of all economy in the administration to make both ends meet on this allowance. It therefore was repeatedly necessary to grant subsidies.

The total amount appropriated by the government for these purposes reached 450,000 crowns. This amount helped somewhat to allay the distress of the poorest of the poor but can by no means alleviate the ineffable misery of the absolutely helpless war orphans.

Care In Homes

It is readily understood that the placing of children in private homes cannot meet all the demands. Requests to place war orphans are brought to us constantly but only the most pressing cases can be accommodated. In consequence, we had to place a larger number of orphans in private homes. The government pays for the maintenance of war orphans in private homes a monthly allowance of from 5 to 10 crowns. At present 4,520 children receive such subsidy from the state. The total subsidy granted by the state for children in private homes amounted by December 31st, 1917 to about 300,000 crowns.

In order to meet the deficiency, we granted to the station of Lemberg an additional annual subsidy of 36,000 crowns per annum. The central committee which is enabled to investigate the individual cases, uses this sum for granting additional allowances. We have also sent to the central committee considerable quantities of clothes and shoes to be distributed among the war orphans placed in private homes which brought relief in cases of the greatest distress.

In the same way we assisted the station of Cracow by money and garments, because even in western Galicia, the war wrought great havoc among the poor population and forced the care of war orphans upon us.

During the last month, it became possible to extend our care over the Jewish war orphans in Bukowina. We assigned first of all to the Jewish congregation of Czernowitz, 500 crowns per month for war orphans placed in families and we hope that it will be possible to furnish adequate support to the unfortunate war orphans in this province which has suffered most from the war.

The number of war orphans placed in families supported directly by our society with a monthly allowance of from 10 to 30 crowns and by a donation of garments, has increased lately. We have now 104 children in our care at an annual cost of 19,476 crowns.

Relief Fund

In order to meet the most pressing expenditure in the care for the numerous war orphans in the cities of eastern Galicia recently liberated, we have granted to the station of Lemberg, the sum of 15,000 crowns in view of the irregularity in the payment of the state's subsidy which is caused by the necessity of submitting a report to the authorities every three months which delayed payment for weeks and sometimes even months.

Furnishing of Garments

The provision for garments was the most important part of our activities during the last year as before. Our principle to make preparation ahead of time in order to meet emergencies proved successful. The task of providing thousands of destitute children with linen, clothes and shoes, was in itself an immense task, but it became critical owing to the severe winter which in the eastern section of the country was still harder than in Vienna. Fortunately, our vice-president, Mrs. Lisette Gelber, had shown great foresight and bought during the first year of our activity, all that she could afford to buy in the line of raw material and of finished garments. Inviting bids was out of the question, owing to the restrictions placed on the commerce with garments which is still in force. It is the inestimable merit of our vice-president that she knew how to find the material and to obtain the necessary permission from the authorities so that we were enabled to clothe thousands of children.

We are under special obligation to Mr. Siegfried Karpeles, one of our trustees for his valuable activity in this branch of our work and we hope that our society will continue to retain his hearty co-operation. Mrs. Dr. Samuely rendered valuable service in the handling of the garments for which we expressed to her our sincerest thanks.

The great importance and the pressing need of our activity met with unusual recognition on the part of all authorities who in every way possible complied with our desires and we hope that this will remain so in the future.

The various government authorities from the ministry down, assisted us in every possible manner. The ministry of commerce granted us the permits for the necessary materials through the military organizations. This included the central commission for cotton, the Department for clothing the people, the military commission for linen industry and the woolen commission. We are indebted to the central cotton commission and to its department for clothing the people, for the chance of procuring large quantities of woolens and linens which were sold to us at reduced rate in view of the charitable objects of our society. It would have been impossible without this kindness to carry on our work in view of the scarcity of garment material.

The kind recommendation of the Court Councillor, Dr. Edward Prince of Lichtenstein, head of the department for social service of the war ministry procured for us from the relief work, "For the Child" presided over by the Empress, 500 pairs of wooden shoe soles, free of charge. The same society granted us at the beginning of this year, 1,000 pairs of shoes at a very moderate rate. The war relief department of the ministry of war granted us also large quantity of children's shoes—some with wooden soles and some with leather soles. The railroad ministry granted us free transportation for our shipments to the orphan homes and extended this privilege to every new home that was opened. Manufacturers and merchants assisted us materially during this year as before by concessions in sales and prices. It is our privilege to express our gratitude to all of them.

We are especially indebted to Messrs. Karl Koppel & Wagner and Kellerman & Scharmann for free storage and shipping rooms. When these accommodations became insufficient, Messrs. Mislap & Winter gave us the privilege of free use of their premises so that we can now place our material in a manner which allows us to handle it systematically and safely. Mr. Hugo Winter, one of our trustees, is entitled to our especial gratitude. We also express our thanks to Messrs. Sam S. Bing & Co. who assisted our work by substantial donations in money and in clothing material.

As it was impossible to obtain bed linen or material for such, we appealed to a number of ladies for donations of used bed linen. This canvass is still in progress and we can therefore not make a definite report.

The number of our benefactors has increased during the year covered by this report and this fact justifies our belief that our activity was appreciated by all classes of the Jewish community. We publish on separate pages of our report the names of the noble philanthropists who generously assisted in our work. We have to mention especially the munificient donation of 100,000 crowns bonds of the third war loan by Mr. Ed J. Weinmann in Aussig and express our thanks to this well-known benefactor. We also take pleasure to acknowledge the assistance granted to our cothing department by the American Relief Committee which through the Isr. Allianz in Vienna sent us 166,613.31 crowns for 1916 to 1917.

The list of our members and donors was increased by a considerable number of persons who granted us a regular assistance. Our society has at present 211 founders, 64 patrons and 4,663 members. In addition, we received occasional donations totaling 231,701.55 crowns.

In conclusion, we express our deepfelt gratitude to all those who assisted our work and add to it the prayer that they continue to show us their sympathy. We express our thanks to the ministries of the interior and of finance, to the minister for Galicia, Dr. Von Twardowsky, to the provincial government of Galicia, to the president of the war aid bureau, Court Councillor Gustav Brueckner, for the grant of maintenance for the war orphans, both in homes and in private families. We further express our thanks to Dr. Edward Prince Von Lichtenstein, the chief of the war aid bureau of the ministry for social service, who in many ways showed his appreciation of our work and assisted us in the kindest manner. We consider this a distinction conferred on our organization by one who is an authority on the subject of war relief. We express our thanks to the ministries of war and railroads for the privilege granted us. Furthermore, to the Central Cotton Commission and to its department for clothing the people for the efficient aid granted to our cause. We further express our gratitude to the editor of the Neue Freie Presse, Mr. Morwitz Benedikt, member of the House of Lords for the interest which he showed to us and the assistance which he granted us through his paper which is one of the leading journals of the world. We also thank all other papers for their helpful reports.

We also thank the various provincial committees—the B'nai Brith Lodges, the Jewish corporations, the various individuals who assisted us by collection. We thank the Boden-Credit-Anstalt for the service given us free in our financial transactions and especially the president of this bank, Alexander Weiner who as RUMANIA. The Talmud (Berakot, of Smyrna, 250 years ago, ophy of Jewish history in a nutshell, saying new troubles make us forget the old ones. Rumanian statesmen take care of it that the Talmud shall not be refuted. We need only consider the facts established beyond a shadow of doubt, disregarding all others, no matter how probable. Lucien Wolf, the British publicist, in a memoir, presented to the Peace Conference in the name of the Conjoint Committee of British Jews, proves that the cable report, announcing that the new situation under the re-established Bratiano ministry is far worse than the one imposed by the German victors was absolutely correct. Mr. Wolf cites the emancipation law of Jan. 13, which gives Rumanian citizenship to all Rumanian born Jews who can prove that they never were under the protection of a foreign power. Mr. Wolf correctly indicates that such a negative proof is almost impossible and proposes in the name of his mandatories a bill which shall give franchise to all Jews born or resident in Rumania, provided they were never under foreign protection, and imposes the burden of the proof on the government. It is time for M. Pichon now to show that he was right when he spoke of Bratiano and Jonescu as men of broad views who would never be contented with such a restricted measure, as was enforced by Germany, which limited emancipation to Jews born in Rumania and to those who served in the army with their families. Under the condition the statement of the German minister who declared that it seemed wiser to rather accept a compromise that could be enforced than a Platonic measure that would remain on the paper like that of the Berlin Congress of 1878, seems quite honest. Even L'Univers Israelite calls the new law a piece of jugglery (trompe l'oeil).

Lieut. Jacob R. Marcus, an undergraduate of the Hebrew Union College (to the right) in front of a house destroyed by shell fire in France.

We are willing to grant that stories of terrible pogroms said to have taken place in Braila, Galatz, Bucharest and other cities may be exaggerated or even invented, and that wholesale expulsions reported from many places are apocryphal, though unfortunately they are only too probable. We know for certain that the flight of Jews from Bokowina, and especially from Czernowitz, where they formerly lived, as the correpondent says, in a paradise, would be justified in spite of the denial of Jonescu, and if Bratiano should not have said to Baron Edmund de Rothschild in Paris, as was reported, that the Jews are traitors, he will use this assertion for the purpose of maintaining the old trick of perpetuating the power of the large landholders and grafters by making the Jew the scapegoat in order to bridle the poor exploited peasant. The report that Besarabia rebels against the scheme of being forced into that kind of regime is highly probable and again is ill-foreboding for the Jews.

A HOUSE FULL OF STRIFE. Whatever higher critics may say of the origin of Isaiah, Chapter 18, its author was a man of statesmanlike vision. He describes the downfall of Egypt, when the Lord "will set Egyptians against the Egyptians, and they shall fight every one against his brother and every one against his neighbor . . . and the spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst thereof . . . and the Egyptians will I give into the hand of a cruel lord."

The negative side shall as in a court trial be heard first. Thirty-one Americans, most of them men of very high standing in public life, handed to the President of the United States a protest against the establishment of a homeland in Palestine. Two of these men, former Ambassador Morgenthau and Congressman Julius Kahn, sailed for Paris to fight for this principle. Morgenthau's name, owing to his former position, presents in itself a weighty argument. He emphasized his stand by resigning from the presidency of the "Free Synagog" whose rabbi, Stephen S. Wise, stands in close relation to him, because he does not wish to share the responsibility for the latter's Zionist views. Mr. Kahn, who is inconveniently reminded by Rabbi Leon Album, of Philadelphia, formerly in San Francisco, that not so very long ago he had in a public meeting declared the homeland in Palestine "the only solution of the Jewish problems" may have to say something on the subject when the peace treaty is discussed in Congress. Congressmen are fallible, as are even popes, as we shall see. Mr. Kahn in an article against Zionism to which the New York Times gave a full page in its Magazine Section, Feb. 16, refers twice to an invitation extended by Russia to the Jews to settle in her territory, though in a Pale of Settlement. The opposite was the case. Both, Elizabeth in 1742 and Catherine in 1762, refused to consent to the admission of the Jews, proposed by the Senate, and it was only in 1772, after the annexation of a great part of Poland to Russia, that the Jews became subjects of the Russian empire, restricted, however, to the territory of the former kingdom of Poland. Mr. Kahn also entertains us with the old, by him further embellished, legend, that the Jews of Prague received from the Austrian emperor a flag in recognition of the valiant defense of the city of Prague in the siege by the Turks. Mr. Kahn saw the flag. He was told a story and his memory ornamented it further. The Turks never were near Prague, and the story of the defense of the city is a legendary ornamentation of the fact that the Jews during the siege of the city by the Swedes in 1648 and by the Prussians in 1744 were drafted to assist in repairing the fortifications and in putting out the fires caused by bombshells. The right to march under their own flag at public parades was conferred upon them independently of these facts. It may be a satisfaction to the Zionists to prove by pointing to an error as regards the past that a congressman may also be mistaken regarding the future, although this does not necessarily follow.

Further opposition to the Zionist aspirations come from many other sides. Sir Charles Waldstein (now Walston), professor at the University of Cambridge, a native of New York, condemns in an article published in the Menorah Journal for February Zionism as chauvinism and as a return to theocratic principles. He also condemns the attitude of those who, while spiritually estranged from Judaism, remain Jews. At the same time Sir Charles indorses a Jewish center with a university and a museum, a sort of Yellowstone Park where Jews, like a buffalo herd, shall be protected from complete extermination. The same stand without even the zoological garden idea is taken by M. Joseph Reinach, of Paris, the publicist and politician, brother of the philologist Theodore Reinach, who recently visited this country, in an article published in the anti-semitic Morning Post of London. These representatives of the highest stratum of bourgeoisie are seconded by Abraham Cahan, the editor of the socialist Vorwaerts of New York.

Far more serious is the change of heart which Benedict XV experienced in spite of his infallibility which should extend to such matters, falling within the domain of faith and morals. In an allocution to the consistory, held March 10, the pope expressed his great grief at the prospect that Palestine should be given to infidels—the word "infidelis" is the official signification of non-Christians—and its control to a non-Christian power. It is claimed that his words were considerably toned down when given to the press and that the original was much stronger in its language. At any rate, it is an entire change of front from the attitude which he took in an interview granted to Nahum Sokolow in June, 1917. A little bit of information seems to throw light on the subject. Governor Methuen, of Malta, suggested the settlement of the surplus of the Maltese population to Palestine. The British Colonial Office indorses the plan and Cardinal Bourne supports it very enthusiastically. "Tablet," the leading Catholic magazine of England, chronicles these facts with the additional information that the pope never had indorsed Zionism. The archbishop of Paris takes the same stand. So we have evidently a well organized Catholic opposition to the plan which shall be interpreted later. We are finally told that the Mussulman and Christian Arabs combined, following the style of their ancestors, Midian and Moab (see Rashi, Gen. 36, 35), protesting against any additional settlement of the unassimilative Jews. New York Globe, March 17, published an interview with the chief mufti of Jerusalem, who pays the Jews the old Moabite compliment (Num. 22, 6), that they are so superior to the Arabs in intelligence and thrift that the latter could not exist by their side. History evidently does repeat itself.

THE PLACE IN THE SUN. As in the days of Shabbetai Zebi, the prophet a) presents the philos- rumors of wonderful doings are flying thick. Brooklyn Eagle, March 11, tells us that a million and a half Jews are on their way to Palestine. The writer of the story was evidently not concerned about the passport and transportation difficulties. The assembly of New York, like many other state legislatures, passed resolutions in favor of the Palestinian homeland. It does not impose any obligation on the state, and the mover expects that his action will make him popular with the Jewish voters of his district. The Hungarian government is also reported as having indorsed the Jewish homeland idea. Hungary is now said to be governed by a preponderantly large number of Jews, among whom there may be some Talmudist who remembers the noble sentiment of the Talmud (Baba Kamma, 92a): If one prays for his neighbor when he is in need, he shall be helped first. Of greater weight are the indorsements of Zionism by the Frenchmen, Andre Lichtenberger, the celebrated author, by the socialist member of the government, Albert Thomas, and the socialist and anti-militarist, Gustav Herve The latter says in Eclair, Feb. 28. The Jews will emigrate in large numbers from Poland, Russia and Rumania, where anti-semitism will not disappear over night in spite of all beautiful promises. This article appeared the day after the hearing granted to the Zionists by a committee of the Peace Conference, of which mention shall be made presently.. A declaration which allows no question as to its interpretation and its authenticity is a message of President Wilson, read by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise at a dinner tendered to him March 9, in which the President authorizes the statement that "the allied nations are agreed that in Palestine shall be laid the foundation of a Jewish state." The report would receive a different aspect, if it should be true that the President moved a rehearing of the case in view of the Christian claims that had not been heard Of this again later. Emir Feisul, representing the aspiration of the Hedjas empire, made contradictory statements. Once he declared that Jews and Arabs are first cousins, and at another time he would assign them, as is done to relations from the country, a place in the kitchen.

From these uncertainties we may proceed to facts whose authenticity cannot be questioned. A Zionist commission, consisting of Dr. Chaim Weizman, Nahum Sokolow, Mendel Ussischkin and Andre Spier, to whom upon the request of the French government, Professor Sylvain Levi was added, was received by a committee of the Peace Conference, Feb. 27. Mr. de Haas was on a holiday in London, and so the American Zionists had no spokesman. Sokolow spoke in French, Weizman in English and Ussischkin in Hebrew. The demands laid down in a memorandum provide for a national committee to be elected by Palestinian Jews, and a Pan-Jewish congress to be convened in Jerusalem, Jan. 1, 1920. The National Council shall have a vote on all national Jewish questions touching the Jews, as immigration, assignment of land, banking and credit organizations, public service corporations, with full power in questions of Jewish education, with the right of taxation for Jewish purposes and of issuing bonds. Secretary Lansing was highly interested, as appeared from his question addressed to Weizman what was understood by National Home. The effect was upset by Sylvain Levi, who repeated the usual arguments against a double nationality and closed with a paean on France and the work done by the Alliance Israelite Universelle. Meantime Oscar S. Strauss, whose service as ambassador entitles him to an equal standing with Morgenthau, and Jacob H. Schiff came forward with a strong indorsement of the work of reconstruction, and Sir Alfred Mond gave to the delegates to the International Zionist Congress, opened in London, March 3, a reception and a lunch in the House of Commons, certainly an event which twenty-two years ago, when Herzl first came to London, nobody would have dreamed of.

cks was dominated by Weizman's re-[illegible], at least as far as the incomplete records at hand show. Cable messages speak of dissatisfaction in the rank and file of Zionists who charge Weizman and Sokolow with having sold the birthright of the movement for a mess of pottage because they offered to restrict immigration to Palestine to 50,000 per annum. Measured by actual experiences this figure seems perilously optimistic. Argentina, with its vast uninhabited and fertile soil, could not receive 5,000 a year. When in 1884 the number of immigrants in New York reached 25,000 a cry of warning was sent out to Europe to stop sending any more immigrants, for those already landed were starving. In time this figure was considerably surpassed and perhaps the average Jewish immigration since 1882 may not be far below this figure, but the economic conditions of Palestine are not at all to be compared to those of the United States. An interesting feature of the congress was the motion of Bernard A. Rosenblatt, an American delegate, to tax unearned increment of land values, or, in plain words, to introduce Henry George's single tax system, which was adopted. This—no matter how meritorious the scheme may be—creates another difficulty, for with the exception of experiments on a small scale in this country which, by the way, were not successful, nobody can foretell how the adoption of this system will under the given international conditions affect the future of a colony.

The split between the main body of the Zionists and the orthodox group, Mizrahi, has not been healed, as far as the information received would indicate. So there is opposition both on the right and on the left wing of the community. The agitation has resulted in one achievement which promises to be of permanent value. The Jews of Canada held for the first time in history a congress which met in Montreal, March 15 to 19. The congress adopted some pretty liberal schemes for the Jewish homeland, among which free land for the members of the Jewish legion, Dr. Zitlowsky proposed public ownership of mines and railroads, etc. More practical were resolutions for assisting the Jewish farmers of Canada and the plea for free immigration presented by Mr. Jacobs, member of the Dominion Parliament, and finally the unanimously adopted motion of Mr. Nathan Gordon, formely rabbi of the Montreal Reform congregation, to make the Canadian Jewish Congress an annual event. Thinking of the fact that before the great Russian influx began Canada held hardly 10,000 Jews, this is a wonderful achievement, showing how blessings lie in the wake of suffering.

POLAND. From all indications it appears that international jealousy will prove as detrimental to Poland in the Peace Conference of Paris as the same factor has proved detrimental to the Jews of Rumania at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. In the Polish National Assembly the Jewish member, Noah Prilucki, delivered a stirring address on the terrible sufferings of the Jews. Prilucki declared the situation of the Jews desperate. Pogroms remain unpunished, inoffensive people are assaulted on the streets, houses are looted, and men and women are murdered. Nothing is being done to prevent or to punish boycott. No Jews are appointed to office of any kind. Thousands who had been employed on the railroads during the German administration are being discharged. Thousands are begging for bread in the streets of Warsaw, having rags to cover their body. Dr. Bogen, the American representative of the Relief Action, says that all the millions poured into Poland are like a drop in the bucket. Prilucki is a member of the National Democratic party, but the fellow members of his party created such a disturbance during his speech that he could hardly make himself heard. A more demonstrative course was pursued by the Socialists when the Jewish delegate, Gruenbaum, spoke for the Poale Zion. The Socialists left the hall when he began to speak. Professor Stanislav Grabski, the leader of the National Democrats, had at least the moral courage to demand justice for the Jews, and to declare that the future of Poland demanded that the Jewish question be solved from a practical point of view, because the Polish Republic could not be safe as long as any class of the population was oppressed. Ignace Paderewski received a Jewish delegation, of which the Jewish members of the Parliament formed part, and told them that he was in favor of absolute equality for the Jews, willing to grant them all the rights which the Poles possessed in America, but would never indorse the idea of separate group rights. Rabbi Perlmutter declared that this was all that the Jews of his party demanded. There is, however, a difference between the indorsement and the enactment of a principle. In regard to the latter, the conditions of Poland leave much to be desired. We are informed that the University of Cracow imitated the Russian policy of a restriction of Jewish students to 5 per cent. The Jews of Galicia sent an appeal to President Wilson to protect their lives and property. Individual events do not seem to bear out the sincerity of Paderewski's fine phrases. From one place whose name was evidently misspelled in the cable reports, but which seems to be Wisziniowa, it is reported that soldiers in uniform beat the Jews, take everything from their houses on which they can lay a hand, and amuse themselves by acts of brutality, as making Jews break in horses, and enjoying the sport when the poor fellows who have never sat on horseback fall off. So far we learn only of protests from countries like South Africa, but no government which can have real influence has raised a voice of warning.

INTERNATIONAI ANTI-SEMITISM. It is one of the unfortunate mistakes of many well-meaning Jews to charge anti-semitism to one particular country or nation. The following selection from the news of one month, will demonstrate its international character. Mt. Angel Magazine, published by a Benedictine Monastery of Oregon, formerly in German, and lately in English, heads an article, "Jews are the leaders of freemasonry as well as of the Revolutionary Movement, throughout the world." In the list there are names that cannot be identified at all, others that belong to converts to the Catholic church, and some, like Liebknecht, that were never Jews. The Catholic magazine quotes even the strongly anti-Catholic Reverend G. A. Simons, as authority for the Jewish character of the Bolshevist movement. Catherine Dooney, teacher in New Haven, Conn., delivered an anti-Jewish harangue in the classroom, which was answered by a strike of the Jewish children. The settlement of the affair has not been reported. The London Morning Post calls Zangwill a Bolshevik, and a representative of the tendencies of his race, because he spoke at a meeting which protested against sending an army to Russia. The German Socialist leader, Gustav Noske, accused the Socialist, Oscar Cohn, of having accepted millions from Adolph Joffe, the Russian ambassador to Germany. Cohn admitted to have received a million of marks, most of which was sent for support of Russian prisoners in Germany, while only 50,000 marks were spent for agitation. The Evening Standard of London rails at the refugees from Russian ghettos, who are unfaithful comrades, and parasites, underselling and underliving, are responsible for the strike movement, nourishing a feud sentiment against society. Louis Dreyfus, former member of the French Parliament, was accused by the anti-semitic press of having violated the Trading with the Enemy Act. Investigation proved that Dreyfus, who is the head of an important grain firm, did great service to his country, and he was completely exonerated. It seems that there is a great deal of anti-semitic sentiment in France, for the government issued an order to the press to refrain from anti-semitic comments on the case of the Polish Jew, Moses Kneller, who fired a shot in front of the Elysee, March 5, as a demonstration. Kneller is said to be crazy. After being suppressed for months, the report was published in the Jewish press that a serious anti-Jewish riot took place in the city of Tunis, Nov. 12, 1918, on the day when the armistice became known. The start was made by Frenchmen who began shouting in a cafe, "A bas les Juives", and were joined by Arab loafers. A police official said that he was proud to have assisted in the pogrom, and another one said, "The Jews have only received what they deserve". Some Frenchmen said that this was only the beginning and they would do better as soon as the troops shall return from Europe. Pogroms are reported from all parts of Russia, especially from Ukraine, said to be due to an invasion of Bolsheviki. From other parts it is reported that the crimes were due to Polish agitators who wished to discredit the Ukranian government. A similar statement is made for Lithuania by Moses Rosenbaum, the Lithuanian delegate for his country to the Peace Conference. Atrocities are also reported from the oil and naphtha districts near Drohobycz, where some blame the Soviet government while others hold the Polish troops responsible. In this district Jews are largely engaged in plain labor in the naphtha mines. An appeal sent by the lawyer, Grusenberg, describes the condition all over Russia as desperate. The Austrian government, which had ordered an expulsion of the Galician refugees, numbering 50,000, has revoked this edict, while the Hungarian government republished it. This order of expulsion may be underlying a report that the Roumanian officials in Bukowina, do not allow refugees from Bohemia and Moravia to return. These refugees are probably Polish Jews, who, during the first two years of the war, fled to these Austrian provinces. Conditions in Czecho-Slovakia, are in all probability, not ideal either. A pogrom was reported from the Bohemian town of Klattau. Klattau has a Jewish population of 720, in a total of 12,000, to which in 1915, 1,117 Galician refugees were added. The town was frequently the theater of anti-semitic movements in connection with the Czech national chauvinism in 1888 and 1897. A later report says that forty students of the Gymnasium were expelled for taking part in the looting of Jewish stores. Similar are the reports from Pressburg, which may have particularly difficult conditions owing to the clash between Slovaks and Magyars. Meantime, a Soviet government has been established in Hungary which decreed separation of state and church, and seems to be quite strong. One proof of its strength is the report published in the Vienna Reichspost, the clerical organ of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand, whose assassination precipitated the war. This report, sent out broadcast by the Associated Press, for purposes that are quite evident, declared that the Hungarian government consists of twenty-four Jews and six Christians. On the other hand, it is reported that the same Hungarian government granted autonomy to the Jews. So the Bolshevik principle is at the same time said to be nationalistic and cosmopolitan. From Russia it is reported that the Bolshevist government prohibited the use of Hebrew and Yiddish. This report has, at least, an analogy in the history of the French Revolution, when the edict of Feb. 3, 1793, prohibited the wearing of beards and the talking of Hebrew. The Soviet government of Berlin is again charged with hostility to the Jews, and it is said that soldiers are going from house to house inquiring where Jews are living for the purpose of pillaging them. The failure of the League of Nations to mention equality for all religions, is said to be due to the fear of Japan, whose representatives declared that they would not consent to it unless it were at the same time coupled with a declaration against all restriction of immigration on the ground of race. This opinion is supported by an Associated Press dispatch, which affirms the right of any country to control all internal affairs, and by the report that Lord Robert Cecil declared the religious question such an internal affair. The Czecho-Slovaks gave a demonstration of this view by a brutal assault on the Rabbi of Gwozdziec, Galicia, who traveled from Carlsbad to Vienna with his wife and his very sick son. Czech rowdies tore the wig off the woman's head, cut part of the beard and the "Peot" of the rabbi, poured cold water on the sick boy, who soon afterwards died in a Vienna hospital. The latest reports of the pogrom conducted in Buenos Aires, Jan. 9, speak of a large number of victims and show that the anti-semitic sentiment is not the property of one hemisphere.

PERSONAL NOTES. For the first time we learn something about Alfred Dreyfus, who in the beginning of the war, was said to have been placed in command of a fortress near Paris. "L'Univers Israelite" said that he has been promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and that his son Pierre was made a captain and was decorated with the war cross. It will be remembered that Alfred Dreyfus, after his final vindication in 1906, re-entered the army with the rank of major, and soon afterwards resigned.

The death is reported of Camille See, former member of the Parliament, and author of a law which established secondary schools for girls. In the debate on this legislation, he was attacked by Bishop Dupanloup, of Orleans, the foremost champion of the clerical party. Professor Victor Basch, who teaches German at the Sorbonne, had the bad taste of publishing a volume of addresses, some of which were delivered in this country, including one appealing to the Russian Jews in the beginning of the war, to forget their just grievances and to pray for the triumph of the Imperial Arms, so that the organs of the temples should chime in with those of the great Russian church. Professor Basch evidently does not know that organs in the Russian "temples" are rather rare. Victor Basch is the son of the publicist, Raphael Basch, who died in 1907, at the age of ninety-two, and was formerly a teacher of the Jewish school of Pressburg. The poor health of the aged Grandrabbin of France, Alfred Levy, which caused his retirement from active duty, necessitated the appointment of a successor, who was chosen in the person of Israel Levi, the son-in-law of the late Grandrabbin, Zadoc Kahn, and the foremost Jewish scholar of France. At the same time. M. Liber, known by his biography of Rashi, which was published in English translation by the Jewish Publication Society, was elected member of the rabbinate of Paris. Jules Bauer, formerly rabbi of Nice, was elected president of the rabbinical seminary in place of Grandrabbin Joseph Lehman, who died Nov. 22, 1917. The history of this institution is recalled by the death of Rabbi Kaufmann Weil, who officiated in Rappoltsweiler until 1914. He was the last graduate of the Seminary of Metz, established in 1829, and transferred to Paris in 1859.

The final disposition of the case of Chief Rabbi Gaster, of the Portuguese Congregation, of London, has something of the ridiculous. He was elected honorary Yahid (member) of the congregation, with the proviso that he should not be invited to the meeting, and that he should be called to the Torah with the title of "Harab Ribi" and not as "Haham Hashalem". Gaster declined the honor, and this phase of the history of the historic congregation furnishes another illustration to Goethe's "Weh dir, dass Du ein Enkel bist". The tragedy of Jewish aristocracy is again illustrated by the report that the daughter of Mr. Lionel Faudel-Phillips was baptized in a church, and that Lady Henriques, though a member of the Berkeley Street Synagogue, acted as godmother. Mr. Faudel-Phillips, who married a daughter of Lord Granville-Gordon, is the son of Sir George Faudel-Phillips, who, like his father, Benjamin, was Lord Mayor of London.

We learn with deep regret of the death of Professor Ludwig Geiger, of Berlin, who died at the age of 70, Feb. 9. The report says that the sad fate of Germany caused the breakdown of the otherwise vigorous man. Ludwig Geiger was the son of Abraham Geiger, the pioneer of liberal Judaism, who although professor of German literature at the University of Berlin, contributed valuable works to Jewish history. One of his earliest works was a monograph on Johann Reuchlin, the champion of the Talmud against villifications of the apostate, Pfefferkorn, and his history of the Jewish Congregation of Berlin, published in 1871, on the occasion of the second centenary of its re-establishment. He was also the editor of the "Allgemeine Zeitung des Judentums", the oldest Jewish periodical in existence. As editor of the yearbook of the Goethe Society he occupied a prominent place among the writers on the subject.

Various Jewish papers report that the German delegation to the Peace Conference includes two Jews, Dr. Eduard David, and Mr. Max M. Warburg. David was never a Jew, nor is he, as far as known, of Jewish descent. It has been announced since that Mr. Warburg resigned, probably on the ground of opposition, due to his connection with the New York branch of his family, and that in his place, the famous etcher and painter, Hermann Struck, was appointed. Struck is an observant Jew, and the nephew of the late Jewish historian, Professor Abraham Berliner.

The long list of pseudo-Jews has received an addition by the name of the newly elected president of China, Hsu Shih Chang. We know nothing of the gentleman's pedigree, but we may rest assured that this Jewish celebrity is to be placed in the same line with Horace, Columbus, Napoleon and Pius IX, though there is a remnant of completely assimilated Chinese Jews still in existence in Kai Fang Fu.

The death of Shalom Joseph Silberstein in the Montefiore Home of New York, passed almost unnoticed. It recalls the tragedy of a talented man, who, trained as a Russian rabbi, considered himself a philosopher, destined to furnish the world with a new system of thought, which would be the last word on metaphysics. It is a tragedy of a highly talented man whose mind was warped by a perverted education.

The death of Rabbi Moses Coen Porto, of Venice, who died in Mantua at the age of 84, removed the last disciple of the pioneer rabbinical college established in Padua in 1829. Rabbi Coen Porto, a member of the famous family from which the rabbinical family of Rapoport derives its descent, was born in Venice in 1834, became assistant rabbi of his native city in 1860, and succeeded the late chief Rabbi Abraham Lattes, in 1875. The menace of the approaching Austrian Army drove him into exile at Mantua. The death of the acting rabbi, Moses Levi of Cento, illustrates the tragedy of the disappearing historic communities. Cento was, until 1848, the seat of a prominent Jewish congregation, which gave to Italy a number of illustrious rabbis. It has been reduced to about thirty souls, and will not need a rabbi any more.

Jewish Water Carrier in Galicia.

The revitalization of Sefardic communities on the other hand, is illustrated by the establishment of a Zionist union in Lyons, formed by Turkish Jews, who settled there since the beginning of the war. It is significant that they named the society for Theodor Herzl.

A decision of the Supreme Court of New Jersey has quite an interest for the conflict of Jewish law with modern conditions. Mrs. Mary Feinberg sued Louis Falk for breach of promise. The defendant pleaded religious scruples, declaring he was ready to marry the woman, who is a childless widow, but the rabbi refused to marry him because, according to the law, she would have to be released by the brother of her husband, who was living in Russia, and could not be reached. The court nevertheless, awarded to the plaintiff $5,000.

Another instance of modernization of orthodox Judaism is furnished by the first graduating exercises of the Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Seminary of New York. This institution was founded as a Yeshibah, with the purpose of maintaining Talmudic studies as general education. It is evidently impossible under modern conditions to retain this principle, and so we have now, besides the New York Theological Seminary, a still more orthodox institution, which aims at furnishing rabbis for that element of our population which desires to maintain the standard of orthodox life in Russia. The opposite tendency is illustrated by the celebration of the Socialist Yiddish poet and author, Abraham Liesin, whose admirers tendered him a banquet and public demonstration on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his literary activity. Similarly significant is the honor bestowed on Eliezer Ben Yehuda, the Hebrew lexicographer, whom his admirers presented with a purse of $10,644.64, which shall buy for him a home in Palestine, where he expects to return. The report of the opening of a Hebrew Gymnasium in Lemberg, is another instance of idealism under conditions which would not seem to favor any movement beyond a provision for the dire necessities of life.

A review of Jewish events should not pass by the death of Professor Julius Wellhausen, which occurred in Goettingen, Jan. 7, 1918, but was not reported until lately: Wellhausen was the leader of the school of advanced Bible critics, named for him. It would lead too far to present an appreciation of his theories. Suffice it to say that while he was compelled to resign from the Divinity Department of Marburg on account of his radical views, he still was a Christian in so far as he proclaimed Judaism as an entirely obsolete view superseded by Christianity. His Jewish students, however, found in him a sympathetic friend.

SUNDAY LABOR—OBSERVANCE OF JEWISH SABBATH—SUIT TO RESTRAIN PROSECUTION

Samuel Cohen brought suit against U. G. Webb, police judge, to obtain an injunction or a writ of prohibition to prevent the latter from enforcing the Sunday law against the former. Cohen, in good faith, kept the Jewish Sabbath, transacting no business from sundown on Friday until sundown on Saturday. Repeated prosecutions were instituted against him, and the judge instructed the jury that such observance did not exempt a person from the operation of the Sunday laws, as it did not constitute the observance of any other calendar day as the Sabbath. On conviction fines were levied, each less than $20, so that no appeal could be taken to a higher court, and on nonpayment Cohen was imprisoned, and sought a remedy as stated. The court held that injunction or prohibition would not lie under the circumstances, but also held that the keeping of the Jewish Sabbath was sufficient to exempt one from keeping Sunday, and remarked that undoubtedly the police judge would be governed in the future by this opinion of the supreme court. Judge Clay, who delivered the opinion said in part:

Clearly, it was not the purpose of the legislature to interfere with the Jewish conscience and require the members of that sect to continue to rest after their day of rest had ended. Of course, in speaking of Sunday, the statute refers to Sunday according to the Christian calendar and provides for its observance as such. When it comes to provide for an exemption, the controlling feature is the observance of another Sabbath than Sunday and not the observance of a mere statutory day. In other words, the purpose of the statute is to give each sect its particular Sabbath or day of rest. Any other view of the statute would require the plaintiff not only to observe his own Sabbath for a period of 24 hours, but to observe a period of time not covered either by his Sabbath or the Christian Sabbath. We, therefore, conclude that both the police court and circuit court erred in holding that plaintiff was guilty under the statute, notwithstanding the fact that he regularly observed the Jewish Sabbath from sundown Friday evening to sundown Saturday evening.

JUDGE MACK HEADS JEWISH DELEGATION IN PARIS

Minnesota Bill Preventing Di[illegible] tion in Written Instrument[illegible] tive to Real Estate Deal[illegible]

STATE OF MINNESOTA

Forty first Session

H. F. No. 911

A BILL

For an Act to Prevent, in Written Instruments Relating to or Affecting Real Estate, Discrimination Against Persons or Classes of Persons Because of Their Religious Faith or Creed.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Section 1. No written instrument hereafter made, relating to or affecting real estate, shall contain any provision against conveying, mortgaging, encumbering or leasing any real estate to any person or persons of a specified religious faith or creed, nor shall any such written instrument contain any provision of any kind or character discriminating against any class of persons because of their religious faith or creed. In every such provision any form of expression or description which is commonly understood as designating or describing a religious faith or creed shall have the same effect as if its ordinary name were used therein.

Section 2. Every provision referred to in Section "1" hereof shall be void, but the instrument shall have full force in all other respects and shall be construed as if no such provision were contained therein.

Section 3. As used in this Act, the phrase "written instruments relating to or affecting real estate," embraces every writing relating to or affecting any right, title or interest in real estate, and includes, among other things, plats and wills; and the word "provision" embraces all clauses, stipulations, restrictions, covenants and conditions of the kind or character referred to in Section "1."

Section 4. Every person who violates Section "1" of this Act, or aids or incites another to do so, shall be liable in a civil action to the person aggrieved in damages not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Section 5. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

THE RELIGION OF THE JEW.

"The Jewish people have survived, flourished and maintained an ever-increasing integrity in spite of the centuries of opposition. Other peoples have disappeared in the vortex of assimiliation, even though they were bulwarked by strong nationalism. Yet the Jews, deprived of national institutions, the right of community legislation and the privilege of marching on as a commonwealth, have preserved such a rigid individualism that their religion, thought and ideals have been stayed on."—Chicago Tribune.

THE POPE AND PALESTINE.

Rome says that a Commission of Cardinals entrusted by the Pope with the task of studying the problem of the future of the Holy Places in Palestine, from the religious and political points of view, has just completed its work.

The commission has presented its report to the Pope, and a copy is also being forwarded to President Wilson.—Central News.

ATLANTA STOPS READING OF THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

After the custom of reading verses from the Bible each morning in the public schools, the order has gone forth to discontinue the practice. The new board of education coming in with the new year has gone on record as being against any form of "compulsory religion" as being contravention to the well defined constitutional policy of the United States which guarantees to all residents the right to their own forms of religions belief or unbelief. Jewish and Catholic citizens had objected to some parts of the Bible teachings.

JEWISH RIGHTS ASSURED SAYS LUZZATTI.

Ex-Premier Luigi Luzzatti of Italy, in a public statement recently said that the Jews will surely not be overlooked at the Peace Conference. He is absolutely certain that the Allies, especially England, will free the Jews everywhere. In regard to the development of the Jewish Home in Palestine, Signor Luzzatti felt that the Jews will seek to avoid clashes with other religions in Jerusalem, and thus the progress of the Jewish state will go on smoothly.

OUR POSITION.

The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, being an international organization, selected, after the armistice was declared, two of its European members, Messrs. Herbert Bentwich, of London, one of the leading Zionists of England, and Dr. Adolphe Stern, of Bucharest, President of the Union of Roumanian Jews, to appeal to the Peace Conference at Paris to secure to Jews equal rights with other inhabitants, in lands where such rights are denied them.

Before the war, European members of the Order were composed of business men and professional men, all fairly well-to-do. The war, no doubt, reduced many to poverty. We are causing an investigation to be made as to their condition, intending, if necessary, to issue an appeal to the American Districts of the Order to raise a fund with which to help rehabilitate such of our members as are in need of it, and as they would hesitate to accept charity, it is proposed to tender them a loan, without interest, to be repaid by them only when fully able to do so. Each recipient is to be the sole judge as to the time of repayment. We are confident that nearly every one will repay as soon as able.

Early in February, having heard from Washington that Congressman Kahn was going to Europe, we inquired of him whether he would be willing to assist, while in Europe, in the investigation as to the condition of our members. We also informed him that Dr. Adolphe Stern and Herbert Bentwich had been appointed representaives of the Order to appeal to the Peace Conference as above stated and suggested to him that if he should go to Paris and feel like co-operating with them to secure for our people human rights, we would be glad to have him do so.

"To the Lodges of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and Its Members:

"We take pleasure in introducing bearer, the Hon. Julius Kahn, member of Congress of the United States of America, and member of Occidental Lodge No. 345, of San Francisco, Cal., who, on his tour in Europe, will represent our Order in investigating the economic condition of our co-religionists, so that we may thereby be of some assistance in their rehabilitation. We bespeak for Brother Kahn your cooperation."

No other credential was given him by us.

The question of Zionism or Anti-Zionism, or Congressman Kahn's attitude thereto was at no time considered, and in no manner referred to. Some days afterwards we were astonished to read that Congressman Kahn presented, or caused to be presented to President Wilson a petition, drafted by Dr. Berkowitz, Prof. Jastrow, Mr. Senior and others in opposition to Zionism, with a request that it be presented by the President to the Peace Conference in Paris. It was further reported that Congressman Kahn sailed for Europe, having been appointed by a committee of American Jews who represent the signers of that petition to appear before the Peace Conference in Paris.

The Order has taken no position, either for or against Zionism any more than it has taken a position either for or against Orthodoxy. Our object is to unite Israel and not to split it into factions. We want it distinctly understood that if Congressman Kahn should present such a petition to the Peace Conference, that he will not do so as a representative of the B'nai B'rith, but solely as a representative of the committee which drafted that petition. Congressman Kahn will not present such a petition on behalf of the B'nai B'rith, for he is not authorized to do so.

Oh, what a pity, what a pity, that at a time when so many hands are raised against our European Brethren who are appealing to us to save them, we do not present an united and solid front.

ADOLF KRAUS.

A NIGHT OF WATCHING

Once more, as the year has rounded out, we have sat down at the festive board with the ready answer to our eagerly questioning children, with the tale so old and yet ever new. It is the night when the feast is hallowed. Night with its darkness is apt to oppress the mind. Night is shrouded in the veil of mystery. All the harmful agencies seem to be loosed. We are on our guard. On the night of passover Israel's heart always palpitated. There is so much malice abroad. An ancient libel is fastened upon us. We fear for the safety of our brethren whersoever the flames of hatred are fanned by the unscrupulous enemy. But though we sit in darkness, the Lord is a light unto us. Though darkness may encompass the world, there is light in the dwellings of Israel. We turn the light on full and resplendent. We may give vent to joy, for it is the Lord's night of watching. The evil-minded are abroad to extinguish the light of the ordered state of things and to reduce it to the dark disorder of barbarism. Watchman, what of the night? Shall the powers of evil succeed? Shall there be bloodshed and civil strife and the reign of terror? Shall a universe gone mad revel in the orgies of tyranny and submerge the freedom for which all human beings long? And Israel among nations, what is instore for her? Shall it be a song of dedemption, or a dirge of despair? We are watching and waiting for the tidings that are to come from the council of the nations. What will be the issue for the Jew who has not yet emerged from the night of oppression? We stand at the dawn of kingdoms. A new order is at the door. Shall there be a new chapter opened in the history of our race? We remember the past and know that at every turn in the world's history there was a change in Israel's fortunes. So it always was when dynasties crumbled, when the Lord stirred the spirit of Cyrus, when He bade Alexander spare His people, when Caesar made ready to found an empire, when Islam spread over the world. Then again there might ensue distress to Israel whenever an innovation, a new order coming to be, manifested itself. We have none among us to interpret for us the signs of the times, none that can foretell or foreknow. But even the ancient prophets were not all infallible. When the event came, then it was known who was the true spokesman. Even at their best the prophets were but eavesdroppers at the council of God. There came to them but a rumor of the thundering greatness of the Lord. Behind the prophet and the spokesman stands God and He keeps His counsels to Himself. Sometimes He sends the spirit of falsehood to mislead and beguile. Such are the mysterious ways of Providence. But, like our fathers at the Red Sea, we would not be of those of little faith. We believe. We have faith, faith in God and in the true shepherds of Israel. The night may be long, but we know that God watches. The Guardian of Israel slumbereth not. At the dividing of the night He revealed Himself to our fathers in Egypt. Once more the night will be divided. Once more there will be a revelation to help and to guide. Once more redemption will come. And the day will surely break, the day of the new Passover, for all the children of men, for Israel among them.

DISUNITED ISRAEL

It is a sorry spectacle we are presenting over there. At Paris the statesmen are sitting and framing the document that shall spell peace to a harassed world. The task is not an easy one, though hunger and anarchy stalk abroad. Large bodies move slowly. Every one with a grievance must be heard, and every one with a pet scheme of his own. The Jewish voice is heard likewise. Would that it were a still voice. We should have wished that we had a united front to present. We have our differences, but why thresh them out before the council of nations? Are we so bereft of common sense that we can expect a favorable issue when we have only succeeded in beclouding the minds of those before whom we come to seek redress? There is no end to the delegations that this country alone has sent to plead the Jewish cause. Some were appointed by democratic bodies and others represent the aristocracy, and still others are self-appointed. And mark the hair-splitting among our spokesmen. The "messengers of the congregation" have, it seems, not fortified themselves by a prayer that there might not be "confusion in their tongue". There are altogether too many tongues. Are they all animated by the spirit of helpfulness to the common cause? Would that it were so. Some ostensibly are more concerned in their own organization. The provincial outlook overcasts the larger issues. Some appear like spoiled children asking for the moon. They would have the impossible, the unattainable. Slander is rampant. Misrepresentation of the other side is to the fore. What indeed do the responsible listeners think of us? and what have we to offer? For this is a world of give and take. Inalienable rights there are. And yet much of what is taken for granted has been thrown away like so much rubbish. How guard ourselves against chicanery? And worse of all, the rift within us is widening. Misunderstandings abound. Organizations having for their watchword the solidarity of Israel have betrayed their people's cause; have lent themselves as willing tools that the arch-enemy of Israel might have his way. The name of Jew has become an opprobrium to a section among us. Fearful for their own skin, they would dissociate themselves in perpetuity from the body of the Jewish people. What is in a name? A new name will be devised. A glorious tradition would be thrown away over night. Historical continuity is to be broken. And all for what? And if the price were high, should we sell our birthright? It seems that we are approaching the Messianic times, after all, for it is the accepted teaching that the event will be ushered in by arrogance and by strife. Leaders of Israel, bethink yourselves! Drop your quarrels. If you cannot compose your differences at home, do not freight with them the vessels that carry you. Once inside the council chamber, speak out the mind of a united Israel. Compromise with your opponent. Either you must come as a united body, or you must stay away altogether. You cannot afford to part as enemies when you leave. United we stand; disunited we shall fall ignominiously, disastrously. That lesson is old and again new. Forget it not.

AWARDED DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS.

Corporal Abel J. Levine—For extraordinary heroism in action. After his platoon had suffered heavy casualties and all the sergeants had been wounded, Corporal Levine collected the remaining effectives in his own and other units, formed a platoon and continued the advance. He was wounded shortly after the engagement, but refused assistance until his men had all been cared for. Home address, Mrs. Jennie Levine, mother, Prospect Avenue, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

First Class Private Sam Bloomberg—For extraordinary heroism in action. During the period of five days that his company was occupying an advanced and isolated position, Private Bloomberg volunteered and carried messages to his company headquarters after seeing two other runners wounded in the attempt to cross through the sweeping barrage. He was at all times under constant fire and observation of enemy machine guns, but he succeeded in establishing liaison during the entire operations. Home address, Newark, N. J.

Private Isaac Goldstein—For extraordinary heroism in action. Disregarding the warning that to leave shelter meant almost certain death, Private Goldstein went to the aid of a wounded comrade through an open field exposed to murderous artillery and machine-gun fire. Bringing his comrade back to safety he took a message from the wounded man's pocket and delivered it to its destination. Under cover of darkness he carried his comrade to a first-aid station. Home address, Newark, N. J.

Private Harry Margolin, Company A, 4th Infantry (A. S.)—For extraordinary heroism in action near Grand Ballois Farm, France, July 14-15, 1918. Under a heavy gas and shell bombardment, Private Margolin repeatedly volunteered and delivered messages over routes other than his own, when the runners assigned to those routes had been killed or wounded. Home address, Mrs. Celia Margolin, mother, 446 Rockaway Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Private (First Class) James E. Winestock, Company M, 165th Infantry—For extraordinary heroism in action, near Landress-et-St. George, France, October 14, 1918. Private Winestock showed an utter disregard of personal danger by repeatedly carrying messages from his company commander to the platoon commanders, through an area swept by heavy shell, machine gun and rifle fire in full view of enemy snipers, who were firing upon him. On one trip he found eleven men who were without a leader and he personally led them in combat against the enemy. Home address, Mrs. Ellen Winestock, mother, 244 East Twenty-eighth Street, New York City.

ARMY CITATIONS.

Corporal Morris Sherman, of the 106th Machine Gun Battalion, has been cited for gallantry and devotion to duty in voluntarily leaving shelter to collect wounded under heavy fire. This in the battle of the Hindenburg line.

Nathan Levy, 102d Engineers, private first class, for coolness and courage in removing detonators from mines under heavy enemy fire.

Aloan H. Levy, 105th Machine Gun Battalion. For exceptional courage and inspiring example frequently demonstrated in battle, particularly in the battle of Le Selle River, Oct. 17, 1918, when after all but two of his squad were killed or wounded this soldier continued in action with his company until killed later in the engagement.

First Class Private Harry Simonson. For courage and devotion to duty on the night of Oct. 16, 1918, in locating under heavy shell fire and gas concentration the units of his battalion for the purpose of delivering important messages in preparation of the attack for the fellowing morning.

SWISS JEWS TO CARE FOR 1,500 JEWISH WAR ORPHANS.

The Federated Jewish communities of Switzerland have unanimously decided to take over and provide for 1,500 Jewish War Orphans of Galicia. The Swiss Jews hope in time to be able to take care of all Jewish War Orphans of Austria.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

"Heart of Gold."

Several complaints were received at the office of the Anti-Defamation League calling attention to the World film, the "Heart of Gold." Objection was made to the use of the sub-titles, "Mme. Estelle, nee Berkowitz" and "Jack Durnberg, an east-side lawyer." The matter was brought to the attention of the Chicago Board of Censors, who ruled that these sub-titles should be altered to read: "Mme. Estelle" and "Jack Durn, a none too scrupulous lawyer." The secretary addressed a letter to the president of the World Film Corporation, who sent the following reply:

WORLD FILM CORPORATION
130 West 46th St., New York City
March 11, 1919.

Mr. L. Edw. Lashman, Secretary Anti-Defamation League, 1228 Tribune Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Sir: I am very glad to have your letter of the 6th calling attention to the matter you refer to, in which connection it will interest you to know that the head of our studio division is a Jew, Mr. E. J. Rosenthal, and that the scenario of "The Heart of Gold" was prepared for us by the talented Jewish writer, Miss Clara Beranger. Therefore, you may be sure that there was no desire or thought that anything in the picture in question would be a reflection.

It gives me very much pleasure to assure you that instructions will be issued this morning to cause the changes referred to in your letter.

Yours very truly,
RICORD CRADWELL,
President and General Manager.

Jews and Bolshevism.

An editorial in the Wisconsin State Journal saw fit to rail against "Upstart Russian Jews," who "have been scurrying to this country for protection." This was answered by an editorial in the Capital Times of the same city from which we quote:

"A favorite method being used to discredit the Liberty movement is to attempt to arouse passion, prejudice and hate against the movement by associating it with German Socialist or Russian Jew origin. . . . To fight for the interest of the common man is not Americanism; to fight against the system that exploits is not Americanism; to protest against high prices and low wages is not Americanism. No, say these apostles of reaction. Those things are the products of the disordered minds of German Socialists and 'Upstart Russian Jews.' The Capital Times has never been afraid to say a good word for the Jewish people and we are not afraid to say a good word for the 'Upstart Russian Jews.'

"The Jew has had the weight of hundreds of years of cruel oppression heaped upon his shoulders. He has had the cruel road of persecution to follow, he has been burned at the stake, he has been villified and he has been ostracized; he has suffered oppression in all its forms.

"Who, then, is better fitted by both experience and tradition to be a liberal and a radical; who is better qualified to have the fires of liberty burning in his soul? . . . The American people need have no fear of their brothers of Russian Jew extraction. They make good citizens. They make forward looking citizens.

"Those interests that prey upon the public will not win the friendship of these people. The exploiter needs to fear the Russian Jew. Newspapers that serve the munition makers, the exploiting employer and the big interests will not have the friendship of these people, of these forward looking people."

Hotel and Resort Discrimination.

A bill is now pending before the Illinois Legislature prohibiting the use of discriminatory advertising. Indications are that the bill will be passed. Similar bills are now being considered by the Legislatures of New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

All cases of discrimination of this nature should be referred to the office of the Anti-Defamation League. It has been found to be more satisfactory where letters have been addressed to the proprietors of hotels and resorts by the Secretary than in those cases where individuals took it upon themselves to address letter of protest.

Again and again the administrative committee has urged its members of the Anti-Defamation League to refer all complaints to the office of the administrative committee. This suggestion is not always heeded, for we hear of a number of individuals who have taken it upon themselves to speak in the name of the Jewish people with very unsatisfactory results. The administrative committee considers each case very carefully and its letters have much more weight since they represent the united protest of the members of our Order, which is generally recognized as the most influential organization of its kind in the country.

Mysterious Case of "K. of K."

A story by E. T. Brondsdon under the above title appeared in the March issue of Popular Mechanics. The author attempted to lay the blame for the death of Lord Kitchener upon the Jews. The article also asserted that Jews obtained state secrets from the cabinet members of England and used them to further their own personal interests.

A committee of the Anti-Defamation League called upon Mr. Windsor, editor of Popular Mechanics. Mr. Windsor admitted that there was no proof to substantiate these charges. After apologizing for his thoughtlessness in permitting the article to be published, he assured the members of the committe that Popular Mechanics would hereafter be free from all such articles. He offered to apologize in his magazine for the appearance of the article, but the committee felt that this additional publicity would be unwise.

Princess Catharine Radziwill.

The Affiliated Lyceum Bureaus of America have cancelled further engagements of Princess Radziwill. Princess Radziwill had devoted a large part of her lectures to defaming the Jews.

Jewing the Supreme Court

An article under the above title appeared in the February 8th issue ot the Oregon Voter. A letter of protest was sent to the editor, who sent the following reply:

OREGON VOTER
Weekly Magazine of Citizenship
April 2nd, 1919.

Anti-Defamation League,
1228 Tribune Building,
Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:

The courteous tone of your admonitory letters entitles them to an acknowledgment, with commendation for your work and the tactful method in which you are carrying it on. We scrupulously avoid ridicule of anything that is sacred to any race, religion or nationality, and are glad to receive the information you have forwarded to us relative to use of the word "Jew." Our failure to write to you before was due to the circumstance that we receive a large amount of publicity information from many sources, which it has not been our habit to acknowledge unless we realized that a reply was necessary in order to avoid misunderstanding.

Yours truly,
OREGON VOTER,
(Signed) C. C. Chapman,
Editor.

The Associated Press.

Several dispatches of the Associated Press reported that the Jews were responsible for the chaotic conditions now existing in Russia. A letter of protest brought the following reply:

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
General Offices
51 Chambers St., New York City.

L. Edward Lashman, Esq.,
Secretary Anti-Defamation League,
1228 Tribune Building,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your letter of March 28th. Usually when anybody makes a blanket indictment of The Associated Press, we acknowledge it and write for some instance of our wrongdoing. Then the correspondence ends.

I am glad to have the clippings from the Nashville Banner and the Chicago Daily News. Both were Associated Press dispatches. In the first instance the man in Paris said that he was a Russian Jew. If it had been the man who made the attempt on the life of Clemenceau, I think we would have been justified in carrying it. In this instance, I think it was unimportant and perhaps unnecessary.

In the dispatch trom Warsaw I think it would have been better if our editors had deleted the reference to the Russian Jew.

You have sent us two helpful clippings and we will endeavor in the future, as in the past, not to bring racial or religious prejudice into our report.

I hope you will continue to call our attention to any cases that seem to you unfair.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) FREDERICK ROY MARTIN,
T-B Assistant General Manager.

The Jews in Russia.

In view of the many charges made that the Jews constitute the Bolsheviki, the following editorial appearing in the Saturday Evening Post of the issue April 5th, 1919, will prove interesting.

Some witnesses have lately testified that a good many Jews were active in Bolshevism in Russia. It is well known that the old Russian government accused its Jewish subjects of a special penchant for revolution. On the other hand, press reports—subject to doubt, like nearly all reports from that region—speak of prosecution of Jews in liberated Poland and the Ukraine.

For generations the Jewish population of that quarter of the globe lived in as singular and unfavorable a situation as ever a numerous people found themselves in. During the Crusades tens of thousands of Jews escaped persecution in Central Europe by migrating to Poland, which members of their race had visited long before, and where they were tolerated after a fashion. Generally the government permitted them to manage their own communal affairs, sometimes it protected them. Their custom of early marriage made them prolific. In Posen, Galicia, the Ukraine, their numbers grew to hundreds of thousands. Few tilled the soil. The more prosperous were traders and money lenders. Better educated on the whole than their neighbors and with a better talent for business they farmed the taxes and were employed as stewards on the big estates. Monopoly of the liquor traffic was one of the perquisites of the land-owning nobility. This was also generally farmed to Jews.

As tax farmers, overseers of estates, money lenders, taphouse keepers, Jews were constantly brought into relationship with the mass of the people in a way not profitable to the latter. They were of alien race and a different religion, wore a different dress, perforce kept mostly to themselves. All the ingredients of race hatred were there. Polish nobility looked down upon the Cossacks of the Ukraine, who were their serfs, much as some ante-bellum Southern planters looked down upon their negroes, but without the planters' humanity. Usually a Jewish steward was employed by the Polish noble. When the Cossacks rose under Chmielnicki, in 1648, their first care was to massacre all the Jews they could lay hands on, which was the first pogrom. A lively picture of that great Cossack insurrection is contained in Sienkiewicz's novel, By Fire and Sword. Loose chronicles of the period put the number of Jewish victims then and in the ensuing war, in which Sweden took a hand, all the way from one hundred thousand to five hundred thousand.

One result was that Russia took a large part of the Ukraine from Poland, which up to that time had been the greater power. There presently followed the three partitions of Poland, by which a great part of the Jewish population of that country became subjects of the czar. Until the Russian government thus acquired a big Jewish population by conquest it had always rigorously excluded Jews from its territory. Even the great Catharine, though encouraging other foreign immigration, banned the Jews. Thus two million or more people became subjects of a government which held them in such antipathy that it forbade them to cross its borders, while every circumstance had tended to prejudice the contiguous non-Jewish population against them.

Huddled in the Pale, from which they could not move, the czar's Jewish subjects were vouchsafed barely a right to exist—if they could. Organized oppresion from St. Petersburg and volunteer pogroms make up a considerable part of their subsequent history. It is not to be wondered at if sometimes revolution looks good to many of them, yet the best evidence seems to show that the mass of the Jewish population is opposed to Bolshevism.

BAD TREATMENT OF TURKISH-JEWISH SOLDIERS.

Constantinople.

The National Jewish Council of this city, which is composed of the Jewish Consistory and of delegates of Jewish organizations, has addressed a memorandum to the English High Commissioner, requesting him to instruct the Turkish government that they should release from service all Jewish soldiers who are still in the Ottoman Army. In their memorandum, they mention the terrible suffering endured by our soldier coreligionists during the four years of war. Having been specially employed in the construction of roads in Anatolia, they were, for several months, completely abandoned. Thousands died from lack of food or illness; a large number also died through insufficient equipment and bad treatment. The High Commissioner appeared to be deeply moved by the contents of the memorandum, and promised that he would give the necessary orders to the Sublime Porte.

JEWS IN BOHEMIA OUTLINE THEIR DEMANDS

The correspondent of the [illegible] Times and of the Philadelphia Public Ledger from Prague cabled last Saturday regarding the demands made by the Bohemian Jews. In the last two months Jewish Congresses have been held in Vienna, Budapest, Lemberg, Cracow, Stanislau, Czernowitz, Agram and Prague, representing an aggregate of over two million Jews. All of these expressed themselves as adherents of the Zionist movement, but only a small proportion belong to the orthodox wing of Jewry. The Congress at Prague, which was held early this month and was attended by delegates from various other congresses and 300 delegates from the Czecho-Slovak Republic, postulated the following demands to the Allies:

First. The historical right of the Jews of all nations to consider Palestine their fatherland. Second. They demand that Palestine should be under the protectorate of Great Britain. Third. They acknowledge the sovereignty of the State in which they reside, but wish to be considered as a foreign colony in that State, with freedom of language and public instruction. Fourth. They demand complete economic emancipation within the State and the right to compete in the professions. Fifth. Their own representation in the Czecho-Slovak Parliament. Sixth. Special representation in the Peace Conference and League of Nations. Seventh. Facilities to attend their world's congress which they wish to hold either in Paris or Switzerland as soon as possible, and to which delegates already have been elected.

The principal preoccupation of the Jews in all this part of the world is for the immediate restoration of order on any terms, and that, in its permanent political arrangement of the new countries, the security of minorities shall be guaranteed. President Masaryk's attitude toward the Jews residing in this country and toward the Zionistic movement is as follows:

"The Jews will enjoy equal rights with the rest of the citizens of our State. We also shall abolish the immoral and oppressive Austrian system of State churches, which has misused both churches and religion for political ends. I can only express my sympathy with the Zionist movement among the Jewish people in general. This is not a movement of political chauvinism, but a moral regeneration."

THE JEWS IN THE WAR

Editorial From Cleveland Topics

The splendidly unanimous participation of Americans in the war, without regard to class, creed or nationality has been too thoroughly celebrated to necessitate further comment.

And thereby there is time now for an examination of the relative activities of the several ingredients of the melting pot. A detailed report on the war efforts of one group of Americans was this week issued under the title of "The War Record of the American Jews."

The report shows that the total number of Jews in the military and naval service during the war was between 165,000 and 200,000, or from 4 to 5 per cent of the American forces at the time the armistice was signed.

The report points out that the Jews compose about 3 per cent of the total population, so that the proportion of Jews in the service was about 50 per cent greater than the proportion of Jews in the total population. One cause of this showing was the volunteering of 40,000 Jews, and another was that their population is thickest in the cities where the draft was most effective in its operation. and that there were comparitively few Jews in agriculture, mining and other industries which were exempted.

Seventy-two per cent of the Jews in the army, the report says, were in combat branches, although only 60 per cent of the army as a whole is in combat service. Complete casualty records have not been obtained, but the committee estimates that 2,000 Jews were killed in action and that their casualties totaled 10,000. The highest rank reached by Jews were those of brigadier general in the army and marine corps and rear admiral in the navy.

SOLOMON MARX.

A family reunion featured the celebration of Tuesday evening April 1, 1919. of the eighty-fifth birthday of Solomon Marx, of New Orleans, La. The setting was a house filled with flowers and gifts and there were callers far into the night. The outstanding presentation of the day was a magnificent silver menorah, emblem of the B'nai B'rith, by Gulf Lodge No. 221 of that city. Mr. Marx is the oldest member of the Order in New Orleans.

JEWISH WELFARE BOARD

Specially Prepared for the B'nai B'rith News

Advancing by giant strides, the Jewish Welfare Board is making remarkable progress in its work in France. Throughout the A. E. F. the "Mogen Dovid" has become a symbol of helpfulness and good cheer. The Jewish Welfare Board today can be found in twenty centers of its own in France and Germany, in all the large army hospitals, where American wounded are patients, at all overseas points of embarkation, and on board transports bringing home our victorious troops. Recreation, educational activities, religious ministration, and the personal service of more than one hundred intelligent, sympathetic Jewish men and women, are phases of the overseas work of the organization that have proved a source of cheer to thousands of men in uniform.

Jewish Welfare Board Club Rooms at Coblenz, Germany.

With the arrival of additional workers by practically every transport, new centers were opened, and there are twenty Jewish Welfare Board buildings for American soldiers abroad. This number includes ten huts in the Le Mans area alone. The location of Jewish Welfare Board centers, their headworkers, and addresses, have just been made public as follows: Bordeaux, 61 Cours D'Alsace Lorraine, headworker, Mr. Simon N. Gazan; Brest, 41 bis rue de Chateau, headworker, Mr. Henry J. Sachs; Coblenz, 11 Florina Market, headworker, Mr. Leo Mielziner; Dijon, 96 rue de la Liberte, headworker, Miss Gertrude Heymann; Gievres, headworker, Dr. Louis Krauss; Le Mans, 7 rue Montauban, headworker, Charles S. Rivitz; Nantes, 16 Rue Scribe, headworker, Mr. J. Howard Lichtenstein; Paris, executive offices, 3 rue Clement Marat, club house, 41 Boulevard Haussman, executive secretary, Dr. David S. Blondheim; St. Aignan, headworker, Mr. Joseph Peddot; St. Nazaire, 25 rue du Croisie, headworker, Mr. Leo M. Sorrin; Tours, 26 rue se L'Arsenal, headworker, Mr. William A. Schwab.

In Coblenz the Jewish Welfare Board had the good fortune to secure handsomely furnished club rooms formerly occupied by a B'nai B'rith Lodge, and installed its facilities therein. The rapid growth of the work in Paris, was evidenced by the fact that it was found necessary within the last month to open an additional club house in this city. Administrative offices were fitted up in a new building at 3 rue Clement Marat, while the building at 41 Boulevard Haussmann, which had formerly served all purposes, of administration, recreation, religious work and personal service, is now used only as a club house and center for religious work and recreation.

The arrival of Colonel Harry Cutler, chairman of the board, in France recently has given new impetus to the work, and Colonel Cutler is personally supervising the extension of the overseas work of the Jewish Welfare Board. The co-operation of the Welfare Board was guaranteed to the Army Educational Commission. Dr. David S. Blondheim was transferred to the commission as the Welfare Board's representative, and Jewish Welfare workers were appointed teachers for university and elementary classes of soldiers. Miss Rebecca Affachiner, assistant regional director in the Le Mans area, was made educational director of the entire area. In addition the Jewish Welfare Board has availed itself of the opportunity to open extension classes in its own centers, and conducts classes in American history, civics, English, French, geography and Jewish history.

A phrase of relief work has also just been undertaken by the Jewish Welfare Board for prisoners of war and refugees who are of Jewish faith. Throughout France, and especially in Paris, were to be found German soldiers who had deserted during the war, and had sought refuge in Paris. A large number of these were Jews. Their plight was pitiable, for they lacked food, clothing and friends. Through the Jewish Welfare Board headquarters they were provided with clothing and sustenance and means of temporary support. Arrangements are also being made for relief work among Russian-Jewish soldiers, who are still held prisoners in Germany and Austria.

While various new avenues of service are opening up, for the Jewish Welfare Board's entertainment and religious work, the original necessities are not being neglected. The festival of Purim offered a unique opportunity to combine both religious observance and entertainment. In all of the Jewish Welfare huts in France as well as in this country, Purim festivities were arranged. The Megillah was read, the Purim Spielers frolicked, Jewish folk-songs were sung and "salach monos" distributed.

Eight tons of matzoths were shipped to France to insure a proper Passover observance for the Jewish soldiers. Thousands of Haggadahs also were sent overseas and plans are now under way for Seder services, and for a holiday observance that will not be forgotten by the Jewish soldiers.

The Jewish Welfare hut at Ecommy was recently visited by General Pershing himself, on a tour of inspection in the area. General Pershing spent the afternoon with the Jewish Welfare workers and was served with chocolate and cake by the young women in charge of the hut.

While the development of overseas work has been rapidly going on, transport service has become a new field of Jewish Welfare Board endeavor. The task of putting a "Star of David" man on board every home-bound transport was started during the last month and welfare workers placed aboard all of the larger boats. Leo C. Baum, stationed on the Leviathan, was the first transport worker. Mr. Baum arranged Purim services, at which Henry Morganthau was the guest of honor, and Friday evening services with Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels as speaker. In the small office allotted to the J. W. B. Jewish heroes of many battlefields met. Members of the ship's crew, many of whom had been aboard the Leviathan for a year or more, met for the first time in the J. W. B. office. Supplies were distributed to the soldiers on board, and especial care was taken so that the men in the hold and in odd corners of the ship should not be overlooked.

Forty Jewish Soldiers Enjoy Sedar Feast.

From the rough fare of trench life to sumptuous festival commemorating the faith of their fathers was the pleasing experience of 40 Jewish lads while in Detroit en route to Chicago with 1,100 other soldiers who came through the Michigan Central station Monday evening.

The Feast of the Passover was surely a treat to the lads weary for home. "It's a real deliverance this time," chirped a khaki-clad soldier, and he expressed the sentiments of the 40 who trooped into the private dining car on a siding of the Michigan Central, where the Jewish Welfare Commission had prepared a community sedar.

A Most Unique Sedar

It was probably the most unique sedar since the time of Moses. All in all it was a real "homey" home service, the welcome as well as the food, to say nothing of genuine tablecloths, the first the soldier boys had eaten from in 18 months.

The entire inside of the car was festooned with the gay colors of the flag the boys had served overseas, while on each table red carnations and fern leaves furnished sparks of color to please the eyes, while the food was pleasing the palate.

I. W. Jacobs and A. J. Levin read the ritual, which was shortened for each succeeding group. Twenty lads were served at 5:30 o'clock, 16 an hour later and four at 7 o'clock. J. K. Skirball and Miles Goldberg, of the National Jewish Welfare Commission, were mainly responsible for the unique celebration, while Fred M. Butzel, Mrs. Wolf Kaplin, Bernard Ginsburg and Milton Alexander served for the local committee. Harry Wiess did the catering.

Bring Their Irish Friends

An incident occurring toward the end of the sedar told more eloquently than words the kind of comaraderie and fraternalism developed in the trenches. Two of the four last "Jewish" lads served had fiery red hair and physiognomies that could have obtained their origin in no place else but the Emerald Isle.

The two Jewish boys, each having a pal that was the staunchest of friends for 18 months, could not resist the temptation of bringing their Irish friends with them. The committee in charge rather smiled as they came, pretended they were "hoodwinked," the Irish lads looked rather scared, but went through the ceremonies solemnly. Irish smiles broke through the solemn clouds as the meal progressed and it became apparent that real food was being served as well as ritual.

"Some meal," whispered one, while the other smiled and rolled his eyes heavenward. The commission distributed cigars to all the soldiers, Jews and Gentiles.

REPORT OF SOCIETY FOR HOMELESS.

member of the executive committee of our society, assisted us with his advice and his activity. We also thank all the benefactors and members of our society for donations and dues.

If our society had not been called into existence, it would have to be created now in view of the terrible misery among the children which has been reported to us from the eastern theatre of war. In the remotest eastern section, it was until now impossible to undertake any action in view of the local conditions but it will have to be done in the very near future.

The chance of continuing and perfecting our relief work depends on the means that we may obtain. Jewish charity, the symbol of Judaism—the guarantee of its continued existence, is the basis on which our activity is founded. It is firmly established in the sense of obligation which every Jew feels towards orphans of his brothers and sisters.

The word of the Psalmist, "Happy they who guard righteousness and do charity at all times" is explained by our rabbis as referring to him who cares for orphans in his home.

We have created such a home. Our society and its support are now one of the noblest duties of mankind, appealing to our patrons and friends that they may continue to enable us by liberal donations and membership dues to continue and to enlarge our charitable work. We hope that all benefactors and lovers of mankind will make our task their own. Our work inspired by the sentiment of love of our fellowmen and by the appreciation of the imperative necessity has for its object to assist the homeless, to bring aid to the orphans, to save the children who are the safeguard of the future of our people and our strength. Jewish charity, the tradition of our people, is our wisdom and our understanding in the eyes of the nations.

BEN BRITH RECEIVES CROIX DE GUERRE

David Redman of Ottumwa, Iowa, a member of Ottumwa Lodge No. 808. I.O.B.B. of that city has just returned from eighteen months' service in France. He was in Company G, 168th Division (Rainbow Division). Brother Redman was decorated with the D. S. C. for bravery under fire, and the Croix de Guerre was awarded him for rescuing two French wounded soldiers in the battle of Sergy last July. Brother Redman was wounded and gassed twice.

ISAAC M. WISE CENTENARY

Anniversary Address by Rev. Dr. Henry Berkowitz of Philadelphia

The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Rev. Dr. Isaac Mayer Wise was commemorated by a special session of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, held in Cincinnati, Ohio, April 2 to 7, 1919. The anniversary address was delivered on the evening of April 2 in the Plum Street Temple from the pulpit occupied by Dr. Wise for nearly half a century. The honor of delivering the address was bestowed on the Rev. Dr. Henry Berkowitz, rabbi of Rodeph Shalom congregation, Philadelphia, and chancellor of the Jewish Chautauqua Society.

After an introductory address by Dr. Louis Grossman, president of the conference, Dr. Berkowitz spoke on Dr. Wise as "The Pioneer Leader of American Israel". He reviewed the century and pointed out three great tides of influence that entered into the life currents of the times, by which the career of Dr. Wise was mightily determined. These were the forces that inaugurated, first, the political emancipation; second, the intellectual freedom, and finally the religious reformation of the Jew from Medievalism. Into these currents Dr. Wise directed the course of his people. The rare gifts with which he had been endowed gave him the vision—clearer than that of any of his contemporaries, and the vigor, more lusty in energy and more powerful in execution—that made him, as all now freely acknowledge, the pioneer leader of American Israel.

His independent spirit revolted against the galling restrictions under which the Jews of Bohemia lived and in 1846, a young man of 27, he ventured forth with wife and child to America. Perhaps the most pathetic moment in the history of the young immigrant was that of the disillusionment which came to him on his landing. When face to face with the sordidness and pettiness of the realities, his heart sank and gloom enveloped his soul. Out of this torpor he was roused by Dr. Max Lilienthal, then officiating in New York. "The impression I received in the Lilienthal home", he wrote later, "perhaps decided my career in America".

It was then that he proved himself the man of far-reaching vision. Like Moses. whom the Midrash portrays as casting his eyes from Mt. Nebo over the Promised Land, and forecasting the great events there to come to pass, so Dr. Wise planned a glorious future for Israel in America. With characteristic vigor he set himself at once to transforming his vision into a reality. He was to transform the Jew in America into an American Jew. He found the Jew here still a European. There were Sephardic Jews, Dutch Jews, Polish Jews, German Jews. Each group kept up the distinct Minhagim—or modes of worship, languages and customs. The timid, hunted temper of the European Ghetto still clung to them, whom Longfellow depicted as "The Ishmaels and Hagars of mankind".

To raise the Jew to self-consciousness, to make him realize that he, the heir of noble traditions, had come at last into the heritage of freedom and was no longer an outcast; to make him lift up his head and walk erect, a man among men; to feel in every pulsebeat of the Jewish heart an answering throb to the inspirations of the new world—this was the ambition that fired the heroic soul of our Master. Into that cause he flung himself unselfishly and labored for its achievement from 1848 to his death. As the pioneer leader of that courageous fight, he soon recognized that individual and spasmodic efforts were unavailing. Therefore, he plead, argued, labored, tried, failed and tried again and again, until at last, in 1873, he succeeded in organizing the union of American Hebrew congregations, with its Board of Delegates on Civil and Religious Rights.

In the heart of this achievement lay a still deeper purpose. The union was to bring to American Israel its vital participation in that second trend of mighty influences that had come to recreate the intellectual life of the world. In the spirit of the great rationalistic Jewish philosophers, Dr. Wise set himself, along with the other creative minds of his day, to separate the false from the true in the great mental upheaval that followed the discovery of the principle of evolution. He wrote a number of valuable treatises. But he was not content therewith. He was pre-eminently a teacher. In the columns of his two great journals, the "American Israelite" and "Die Deborah", he popularized a knowledge of the new science of Judaism. From earliest days he kept his clear vision bent with wrapt intent on one definite goal, the founding of a school for the training of rabbis and teachers. It was not until 1875 that this purpose was fulfilled, when the Hebrew Union College was opened in Cincinnati. From its halls have graduated two hundred Rabbis. Through them the whole educational movement among American Jews has been directed along modern lines.

The inevitable outcome was the founding of the refrom of religion upon a definite and firm basis. From the first Dr. Wise clearly saw that life was creating in this land a new people—American Israel. He became the avowed champion of an American Judaism. While others discussed the relative merits of the Sephardic, Polish or German prayer books, he discarded them all as alien to the new spirit and he produced the "Minhag America", pioneer of all like efforts, which were finally harmonized in the Union prayer book. His zeal and initiative impelled him to introduce most of the reforms now prevalent, yet he was not prompted by an overmastering individualism. On the contrary, he labored untiringly for years to secure the consensus of Rabinnic wisdom and effort. It required a new generation of Rabbis —homogenous in training and imbued with the American spirit. Thus came into being his last great creation, the central conference of American Rabbis, over which he presided ten years, until his death.

In a stirring peroration Dr. Berkowitz pictured the spirit of Dr. Wise, the pioneer, still impelling to union, and now active in the united efforts of all branches of American Israel to bring the blessings of political emancipation to Jews in all lands. He told of the delegates of the conference and the union now in Paris laboring to secure such an article in the covenant of the League of Nations. The collapse of the centers of Jewish learning abroad places upon American Israel the onus of future leadership in Jewish education. The free spirit of the new education must inevitably lead to the spread of that reform which aims to bring religion and life into honest conformity. The old autocracy that bound the synagogue to a final code is destined to fall, because there is no final code. The law of unfoldment reveals the values of the gifts of each age to the religious life of the race. Our age is witnessing the glorious fulfillment of the prophetic words with which Dr. Wise spake his valedictory to the conference on his eightieth birthday. "All thinking men and women will, within a quarter century, recognize in the ethical monotheism of the Hebrew prophets, which is the essence of our reform, the true religion for mankind". The war has taught nations the supremacy of the moral law. To-day the visions of Micah and Isaiah for disarmament, arbitration and justice have become the practical issues of our statesmen. At such a time reactionaries are heard ridiculing the mission of Israel; Socialist-Nationalists declare religion negligible and subordinate to race, nationality and culture. The whole unselfish career of our great leader inspires us, in the face of these false outcries, to face the future inspired by new courage and exalted by new hope.

THE JEWISH CONSUMPTIVES' RELIEF SOCIETY.

The Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society of Denver, Col., received from Messrs. H. Cohen and A. Denebein, executors of the L. J. Cohen estate of St. Louis, the amount of $5,000, representing the bequest of L. J. Cohen, St. Louis, who was killed in an auto accident on Christmas day 1917.

The Utility Building for the patients living in the thirty-four tents, is near completion. This building represents the last word in plumbing as far as toilet and bath facilities are concerned.

The fifteenth annual convention of the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society of Denver, Col., will be held in the City of St. Louis, Saturday and Sunday, May 17-18, 1919, at the Statler Hotel. The convention committee, with Mr. H. Siegfried as chairman and Mr. Oscar Leonard as chairman of publicity, are perfecting arrangements for the convention and will shortly send out a detailed program.

Capt. Philip Hillkowitz, president of the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society, who was serving in a number of base hospitals as pathologist and bacteriologist, expects to return home soon.

JUDAISM IN THE WESTERN WORLD

By Dr. Max L. Margolis

(Written for the B'nai B'rith News)

Long before the fateful year in which the eagle of Rome feasted upon the bleeding body of the lion of Judah, Jews and Judaism had established themselves in the Western World. Jewish dispersion antedated even the Babylonian captivity. Then, it is true, a large body of the Jewish people was transplanted eastward. The migration westward had begun earlier. Scripture makes reference to Jews sold in the slave market to the Greeks, but the date is uncertain. Individual Jews, such as were sturdy and loved adventure, sought out the isles of the sea and the coast land of the Mediterranean where they might better their economic condition. Egypt, the gateway of the West, harbored a Jewish colony which had its beginnings before the Persian domination. In the times of Philo the West held more than a half of the Jewry of the world. Standing at the close of Jewish nationhood in the home land, proud of the glorious history of his race, he grasped the full meaning of Roman orderliness beyond which over the Rhine he disdainfully discerned Teuton uncivilization matched by the uncouthness of the Scythian hordes across the Euphrates.

East and West he had met before. In prehistoric times the light that was kindled in the East slowly but surely cast its rays upon the Western shores. It is characteristic that the first seats of European civilization were those contiguous to the East: first, the Ionian colonies to the North of the Semitic world, then Greece, then Italy. There was naturally give and take, and products of Western civilization were carried back Eastward. The traders were the go-betweens, carriers of culture, intermediaries. The peaceful penetration followed in the wake of Tyrian masts. Carthage matched power with Rome, and the mastery of the Mediterranean passed on to the toga-clad law-givers of the imperial city of the West. European civilization, nurtured by the East, had come to maturity. The East itself had been touched by the spirit of Hellenic culture, and the impact shook the little land of Palestine. Judea came to know its place in history. Vanquished by the Roman colossus, it conquered its conquerors spiritually. The Jewish settlements with their synagogues and their sacred scrolls cast a spell upon their heathen surroundings. Judaism fascinated, attracted the pagan world. The ghetto beyond the Tiber might be unsightly and the Jewish vendor of small articles of ware the butt of the satirist. But it was felt that what the philosophers were seeking after was in the possession of a small scattered people, ingrained in man, woman and child. The grandees of Rome took to associating with the despised Jew and the Jewish sabbath was observed by the stranger at the gate. It is true, Christianity ultimately supplanted Judaism in proselytizing the Roman world. But then the very fact that it and not some other religion, like that of Mithra, prevailed was due not to the pagan elements which it absorbed and which in a measure made it more acceptable, but to the Jewish strain which alone mattered to the serious-minded. In the Christian form, Judaism overcame paganism.

The subsequent centuries brought to the Jew untold sufferings, which are too well known. Like all family quarrels, the quarrel between the two faiths, the mother and the daughter, was bitter. Christianity pronounced Judaism to be defunct, a mere survival and an anachronism. Judaism retorted by refuting such arguments as in an unscientific age might be advanced. Christianity looked forward to the day when the Jew would rectify the error of rejecting the Christ. Judaism persisted in holding that at best, the founder of Christianity alone with the prophet of Arabia paved the way for the Anointed that was still to come and who would convert the world to the Jewish truth. While the Christian used force, intimidation and even blandishment to win over the Jew, the Jew offered a passive resistance. He made good, as in antiquity so in the middle ages, as the carrier of culture. He brought with him to Europe a knowledge of the Greek philosophers and scientists long before the renaissance. He was busy translating those ancient books and making them accessible to Christian Europe. Above all, he preserved the Hebrew original of the Bible. It was the study of the Hebrew original that ultimately created the rift in the Church. Puritanism was the re-assertion of the Jewish strain in Christianity. So the Jew was a force in the West in purifying religion, in breaking the Roman idea of universal spiritual dominion and in making possible the rise of national churches. And the end of the reformatory movement is not yet. Nevertheless it is a fallacy to assume that either religion will make way before the other. Nor is it desirable. Christian piety has developed on lines of its own, and so has Jewish piety. Both are needed in the spiritual world. St. Francis ("a poor copy of a Palestinian original") and the Gaon of Wilna represent different ideas of sainthood. Both may coexist. The Church, however, is still obsessed with making political capital of spiritual power. We Jews do not beatify or canonize our saints. Once more, during the dark periods of medievalism, Judaism vindicated its right to existence by combating the residue of paganism in the Western World.

The nineteenth century brought with it a new phase. Beginning with Schleiermacher and ending with Harnack, German-made theology proceeded to wrench Christianity from its Jewish substratum. It proclaims to the world that in its very beginnings Christianity means but a minimal Jewish strain and that the indebtedness to the Jew is the least important. In the wake of this construction there has come irreligion. Judaism battled with pure and unadulterated paganism in antiquity; it combated the pagan element in Christianity during the middle ages. Its function today is to crush the monster of irreligion. I know that the Jew is himself caught in the vortex. But the Jew will come to his own. Judaism will outlive even Bolshevism. Never mind Jew Bolshevists. They are apostates. They are not the exponents of Judaism. Nor are the other international Jews who would divest themselves of the Jewish name. Jews and Judaism are inseparable. Judaism has still a place and a task to accomplish in the Western World. The newest paganism is not a bit more sautary that its ancient prototype. But for Judaism to be a powerful leaven in the West it must rekindle the lamp in its birthplace. A Christianized Judaism makes itself nugatory as a proselytizing force. You cannot borrow from without and then preach it to the world. For the world has that already. But the world will listen to the Jewish voice from within. A Judaism anchorless in the dispersion will die from inanition. A Judaism "orientated" in the most literal sense will be a spiritual force to be reckoned with. "Out of Zion shall go forth the law." Its propagators shall be the ancient carriers wheresoever they may be dispersed. Give the dispersion a center and Judaism's place in the Western World will be recognized, in the Western World of tomorrow.

"OUR BOYS DID SPLENDIDLY."

The Jewish Legionaires, officially described as the 38th and 39th Judaeans, constituted a part of "Patterson's Column" during the recent operations in Palestine. Patterson's Column was the name given to the troops under the command of the former leader of the Zion Mule Corps, who is now a Brigadier-General. This column captured the fords over the Jordan, and then chased the Turks to Es Salt and Amman, where they were either killed or captured by British Cavalry. In a letter written to a friend in London, General Patterson says of the Jewish Legionaires: "Our boys did splendidly."

ASSIMILATION CANDIDATE IN AUSTRIA BADLY DEFEATED

In a contest for membership in the Constitutional Convention, in the German part of Austria, the assimilation candidate was badly defeated. The victorious candidate was the engineer, Stricker, who is now the only nationalistic Jew elected to the Constitutional Convention.

caused by the revolution of 1848, when full equality had been proclaimed by the federal constitution (Deutsche Grundrechte). The diet in 1833 had refused even permission to Jews to engage in manual trades. A special order of the king was necessary in 1835 to compel the tailors' guild in Dresden to register a Jewish boy as apprentice. Yet Zechariah Frankel refused to accept the position as chief rabbi of Berlin urgently offered to him in 1844, because Prussia, while it granted the Jews full civic equality, would not recognize the rabbi as public official. In Dresden he had the satisfaction that the government recognized him and paid the congregation a subsidy. This was the highest ambition for the Jews of Germany up to the beginning of the world war. We will have to close the latest epoch of Jewish history with the year 1914.

Jewish Commonwealth in Palestine

To the Editor of the B'nai B'rith News:

As one who has had the great privilege of spending many days in Palestine, the Holy Land, I feel it a duty at this time to show the attractions of that land and to express the hope that the League of Nations will confer upon Great Britain the power and responsibility of suzerainty or trusteeship for a Jewish Palestine. Furthermore, now that the Russian Jews are so divided, the task of leadership and task of supreme service should be accepted by our American Israel which, as we know, possesses the ablest and richest Hebrew organizers for this purpose. By such leadership and by this way, I believe the Valleys of Sharon and Esdraelon shall once again blossom like the rose and among those sacred hills a Jewish commonwealth will be founded in social justice and "The law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

As a fruit-bearing and agricultura. country, Paestine has some great opportunities for profitable intensive farming. Her innumerable springs and streams, mentioned in the Bible, still flow, the rainfall is sufficient and the ancient cisterns can be repaired. The farmer can grow fine barley in Gaza; there may be fruitful orchards and vineyards where I picked the Rose of Sharon, and the Plains of Esdraelon and Beisan will grow sesame and wheat, while flocks of sheep and goats will dot the so-called desert of Judea. I thought the Ghor and the Dead Sea Valley only sad desolation, but being far below sea level, here may be grown the best of tropical fruits. You, who divine the values of this Holy Land, just think of the possibilities it has of even four crops a year of the fruits of both Italy and England.

Although some American Jews oppose this movement into Syria, it is sustained and supported by the ablest and richest of their race and backed by the League of Nations.

But all this is but preliminary to this question: What, in your opinion, has the Bible prophecies to say to guide us as to this movement, also, as to the origin of the Anglo-Saxon race? Were their progenitors the Ten Lost Tribes of The House of Israel? Also, as to these Ten Tribes, were they Jews like the two tribes of Judah?

Rev. J. H. Allen says in his "Judah's Sceptre and Joseph's Birthright" that certain notes in the Bible prove "there is a people called 'The Whole House of Israel' of which 'The Whole House of Judah' is regarded as neither part nor parcel." True they are brethren, because of the seed of Jacob and so Jacobites, or, as Jacob's name was changed to Israel, his descendants may all be called Israelites. Yet the name Jew is a corruption of the name of Judah, hence it is that the names Jew and Jews are applied only to the people who composed the Kingdom of Judah. Also it was their land only which was designated as "Judah" and finally known as Judea and Jewry or "All Judea" and All Jewry."

Western Asia was the original home of both the Ayrian and Semitic races and it was from thence as we read in Genesis XI: 7: "The Lord did scatter them abroad upon the face of the earth as 'Outcasts.'" "Divorced" says Isaiah, "Wanderers and Lost" says Hosea; "Lost Sheep" says Matthew.

Josephus says after the seventy years of exile only two tribes returned and fell under Roman sway, while a multitude—no doubt the Ten Tribes—were still in Media beyond the Euphrates. Heroditus says much the same, while Sharon Turner traces the progenitors of the Anglo-Saxons from where Esdros starts the Israelites at the same time and follows them thence on to the "Isles of the West" and this agrees, also, with Freeman and Rawlinson.

We read in Ezekiel XXXIV: 11; of These Ten Tribes, "The House of Israel are my people saith the Lord God and ye are my sheep, the sheep of my pasture are men."

And surely they must have been a strong people for in 663 B. C. they attempted the conquest of the Ninevites. No wonder God speaks of them as "My battleaxe and with thee will I break in pieces Nations and with thee will I destroy Kingdoms." "Ye are an elect race called out of darkness into His Marvelous Light." God goes on to declare in Ezekiel XI:16: "Although I have cast them off among the heathen and have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them a Sanctuary in the countries where they shall come."

In Deuteronomy XXXII:17 we see that God calls them a "strong nation in the North and in the West to possess the gate of His enemies; and they are the Ten Thousands of Ephraim and the Thousands of Manasseh." (Ephraim and Manasseh were the two sons of Joseph by his Egyptian wife and some writers hold the United States is this tribe of Manasseh—"The stone cut out of the mountain without hands"—as mentioned in Daniel.)

All this theorizing may appear to some as being visionary, but when one reads "Judah's Sceptre and Joseph's Birthright" by Rev. J. H. Allen (1918) and the books by Prof. S. L. Totten of Yale (1891) one cannot but give the matter close consideration. "It is a startling statement" says Prof. Totten "yet one founded on ample evidence that the Anglo-Saxon is the literal lineal blood descendant of the Ten Tribes of Israel whom Sholmaneser deported into Media 721 B.C., and who, thereafter, have been so completely lost." In defense of this plea, similarity is shown between the roots and arrangements of the Hebrew and English and Gaelic languages. Also, General Vallancey, L.L.D., says "the language of the early inhabitants of Ireland was a compound of the Hebrew and Phoenician."

Such authorities as Schroder and Professor Balmer, find in Puritan names traces of Hebrew origin and point also to the ease with which Hebrew renders itself into English and it is known that certain words were a great help to Sharon Turner in tracing the Anglo-Saxon back to his earlier home in Media. And he found other evidence in the gold and silver ornaments and coins, coats of mail and rich stuffs now preserved in the museum at Copenhagen, all of which betoken that a different civilization from the Roman must have come there with the lost Ten Tribes from the Elbe and the Black Sea, via Scythia and Scandinavia.

This subject is too extensive to be explained in full here, but one thing is sure as to the best English literature we can but concur in those remarkable words of Disraeli in his "Tancred:" "To whose harp" he says "do the people of England fly for sympathy and solace. Is it Byron or Wordsworth or even the myriad Shakespeare? No; the most popular poet in England is the sweet singer of Israel and by no other race, except his own, have his odes been so often sung." And this naturally carries us back to the debt the Anglo-Saxon owes to the men of Israel and to the mighty protest that was made by them before the Christian era, against the autocratic oppression of Rheboam and to that "Sword of 'The Lord and Gideon' which as Disraeli says "won for England its boasted liberties! Also, the Scotch achieved their religious freedom chanting upon their hillsides the same canticles which cheered the heart of Judah amid their Syrian glens."

As to the religious belief of the Anglo-Saxon, Max. Muller says, Monotheism and the faith in the one Living God was grafted into every member of the Semite family and is tracked back to Christ. the One Man in whom all the families of the earth shall be blessed."

In closing this very meagre article, I would ask your readers to consider carefully the objections that have been put forward to this proposition and that one especially, asserting that "it would appear impossible that the Ten Tribes of Israel should have lost all identity of their origin, laws, language, customs, traditions, etc., while the Two Tribes of Judah retained them. Is it possible that a people shall forget all that, as did the Anglo-Saxons, if they really are the tribes of the House of Israel? The answer is that this is possible. Many races have been known to have lost all identity, language, etc., in a few centuries. It is shown in Ireland by the descendants of the troopers of Cromwell who have lost all traditional knowledge of their British descent, and are more Irish than the Irish themselves. This has been brought about in a few hundred years. This was also the case with pagan Israel, while with the tribes of Judah which have remained Jews, it was different. The centuries of persecution have kept them distinct and apart from other races, more than anything else.

BRADDOCK LODGE, BRADDOCK, PA.

On Wednesday, March 19, 1919, a dance was held under the auspices of Braddock Lodge No. 516, of Braddock, Pa. There were over 150 couples in attendance, the evening being most enjoyably spent in social pleasure. A number of the younger members of the lodge were particularly active in making this new venture a success and the special committee in charge was commended for the thoroughly high class manner in which the arrangements were carried out. The officers of the lodge were assisted by Bro. Louis Sulzbacher, whose magnificent service in behalf of the lodge and of the Order has earned for him the title of "Patron Saint."

An open meeting was held on Sunday, March 23, 1919, under the auspices of Braddock Lodge No. 516, of Braddock, Pa.

Bro. A. H. Friedman delivered a splendid address on "Overseas Reminiscences," and Bro. Isaac Carmel received the closest attention to his discourse on Zionism. The gist of this address was the work now being done to restore Palestine to the Jews, that they may once more form a nation and occupy the land from which they were expelled many years ago.

Little Miss Jennie Goldberg delivered a recitation that was indeed a credit and greatly pleased the assemblage.

Miss Rose Rubenstein gave a vocal solo, accompanying herself on the piano. She made a decided hit.

These entertainments will be held twice a month, immediately after the regular lodge meetings, and promise to be an interesting feature and result in much good for the Order. They are under the supervision of A. Hochstetter, chairman of the Propaganda Committee, and are educational in their nature.

On Sunday, April 13, at 3:30 p. m., Rev. H. R. Robertson will address the meeting, his subject being "The Grandest Thing in the World, Character," and a rare treat is in store. All B. B. members are cordially invited to attend.

The Order is growing rapidly, new members being admitted at each meeting. Bro. D. Weiss, chairman of the Membership Committee, is a "live wire" and is doing fine work for the Order by infusing new blood with progressive ideas and plenty of "pep."

POLISH GOVERNMENT'S MANIFESTO AGAINST POGROMS.

The Polish government has issued a manifesto against the pogroms. The manifesto reminds the rioters that all citizens enjoy equal rights in Poland, and that there are not two categories of citizens in the country. Everybody, the government states, can live in Poland according to his customs, so long as they do not harm the interests of the state. The Poles only recently knew what it meant to be oppressed, and the Polish nation always stood for freedom. The Poles must, therefore, learn how to appreciate the status of those whose destinies are bound up with the Polish state. In conclusion, the government utters the warning that all further anti-Jewish rioting organized by military and civil persons will be sternly suppressed.

JEWS IN POLAND.

Collaboration with Poles.

Dr. Steinhaus, Deputy for Jaslo (Galicia), and Dr. Gross, Deputy for Cracow, in the Polish Assembly, have published the following statement:

On February 6, a meeting took place of all the Jewish parties in Galicia who agree on the question of collaboration with the Poles. The towns of Lemberg, Rzeszow, Tarnow, Debica, Bochina, Wieliczka, Oswiecim, Chrzanow,, Ropczyce, Jaslo, and Cracow were represented. A resolution was passed that all the Jewish parties in Galicia, with the exception of the Zionist Party, should unite into one Democratic Party, which would offer to the Polish nation its entire support in public affairs.

PROFESSOR LUDWIG GEIGER DEAD.

Professor Ludwig Geiger passed away on February 9. He was the son of the pioneer of Reform Judaism in Germany, Abraham Geiger, and carried on the work of his father. He was a great opponent of national Judaism, but nevertheless worked energetically for Jewish interests. His literary work, especially that relating to Burkhardt, is very well known, although criticized. He was the Editor of Allgemeine Zeitung des Judentums, and in that paper carried on the work of Dr. Philippson, his predecesor.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

Mr. Ben Selling, chairman of the American Jewish Relief Committee, announced at a recent luncheon of the members of Portland Lodge, held at the Multnomah, that the B'nai B'rith of Portland has given $2,100.00 to the fund for relief of indigent Jews abroad, and the Portland Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, contributed $200.00.

The girls of the B'nai B'rith Club assisted in entertaining the boys of the 3rd Oregon Regiment on Monday evening, March 10, 1919, at the Auditorium. The same club gave a dance on March 12 at the B'nai B'rith Building for men in uniform, under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service.

Portland Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held a regular meeting at the B'nai B'rith Building on March 18. The meeting was well attended and at its close a card party was held, which was enjoyed by all.

The B'nai B'rith Building Association announces that the building which was turned over to the War Camp Community Service for soldiers and sailors during the war has been turned back to the association.

The Victory dance and entertainment given by Portland Lodge, assisted by the Portland Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, was one grand success and was the most enjoyable affair given by the lodge. Special features, such as moonlight dancing, a vaudeville act from the Hippodrome, a roulette wheel and prizes and other attractions made the evening one that will long be remembered by the 500 or more who attended. The souvenirs of fancy paper hats and balloons added much to the pleasure of the evening. The Benson Hotel Jazz Band rendered live music, and the first of a series of entertainments given by the lodge was one big and enjoyable success.

NO JEWISH EQUALITY IN ROUMANIA

The highest court in Roumania decreed that the recent decree issued by the King of Roumania, granting equal rights to Jews, was illegal, since it did not receive the approval of Parliament. Basing themselves on this resolution, all the courts in Roumania refuse to grant naturalization to the many Jews who have applied for it.

The Jews of Bukowina are in a state of utter depression ever since Roumanian authorities occupied their land. They preferred to throw themselves at the mercies of the Hungarian Bolsheviki rather than to submit to the cruel rule of Roumania. With the declaration of Bessarabia in favor of a Soviet government, many thousands of Jews will pass out of the Roumanian regime and come under Bolshevik rule.

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE ENDORSES JEWISH COMMONWEALTH

The General Assembly of the New Jersey State Legislature on March 18 adopted a resolution urging the American representatives at the Peace Conference to use their best efforts to secure the recognition of the national aspirations and historic claims of the Jewish people with regard to Palestine, in accordance with the Balfour declaration, and that provision be made for the establishment of such political, administrative and economic conditions in Palestine as will assure the development of a Jewish Commonwealth. The resolution, which was adopted unanimously, was introduced by Assemblyman Joseph Siegler, of Newark, and has been forwarded to President Wilson.

JEWS IN WORLD'S WARS.

The Jew of the ancient world was a fighting man. His early kings were all great soldiers. No people ever fought with more devotion than did the Jews in the centuries of persecution immediately preceding the Christian era. Throughout the Christian centuries the Jew has been a man without a country, and until modern days a universal object of persecution. With no land to fight for, he naturally lost his martial qualities. The great struggle which has been going on has given the Jew his opportunity. American Jews have a brilliant record to their credit and have supplied a larger percentage of soldiers than is proportionate with their population. Jewish women, too, in the work of the Red Cross, the Food Administration and the Liberty Loan campaigns, have done their full share of patriotic service.—Providence Journal.

DIAMOND JUBILEE CELEBRATION BY WHEELING LODGE NO. 615, WHEELING, W. VA.

Sunday, March 23, was a "red letter" day in the annals of B'nai B'rithdom at Washington, Pa., and Wheeling, W. Va. In the afternoon Washington Lodge No. 576 held its regular by-monthly meeting which was well attended and graced by the presence of District Grand Lodge President, Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, Pa., 2nd Vice-President, Morris Schaffner and Rabbi M. C. Currick, member of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, both of Erie, Pa., who occupied the chairs of President, Vice-President and Monitor respectively and with the assistance of the other officers of the lodge served as a degree team at the initation of a class of candidates after which stirring addresses were made by the visitors and a light lunch was served.

As the District Grand Lodge officers were expected to attend a meeting at Wheeling, W. Va., that evening, a delegation from Wheeling Lodge 615 visited Washington Lodge and after adjournment took the Grand Lodge officers and 20 members of Washington Lodge in autos on the 30 mile trip. Upon their arrival in Wheeling an overflowing attendance greeted them, comprising almost the entire local membership in addition to visiting members from Clarksburg, W. Va., Steubenville, Ohio, and 18 members from Bellaire Lodge, Bellaire, Ohio. Here again President Marcus Feuchtwanger was given the chair and he in turn appointed the following: Bro. Morris Schaffner, 2nd Vice-President of District No. 3 as Vice-President, Bro. Rabbi M. C. Currick, member of the Intellectual Advancement Committee as Monitor, Bro. Leon B. Stein member of District No. 3 Genl. Committee as Assistant Monitor and Past-President Eugene M. Baer as Warden. A class of 15 candidates was formally introduced and initiated in a very impressive manner. After a few brief remarks on the good and welfare of the order by visitors, the lodge adjourned and the members marched in a body to the vestry rooms of the Eoff St. Temple, where a tempting lunch was served by the Temple Guild Girls. Rabbi Mischkind gave the invocation, followed by all singing America, then every one partook of the tempting food, followed by addresses by President Marcus Feuchtwanger, 2nd Vice-President Morris Schaffner, Rabbi Currick, Rabbi Mischkind and last but not least our genial Gene Baer in a few fitting remarks presented President Marcus Feuchtwanger in behalf of Wheeling Lodge with a beautiful water set, the product of one of Wheeling's industries. Officers of sister lodges in attendance were Robt. Abel, President, A. H. Landay, Vice-President, Harry C. Grossman, Monitor, David S. Grossman, Warden, Samuel Berman, Treasurer, and Louis Grossman, Trustee, of Washington Lodge 576, Washington, Pa.

Aaron Winer, President, and Louis Heller, Secretary, of Clarksburg Lodge No. 727, Clarksburg, W. Va., Jacob Weizer, President, Julius Weill, Vice-President, Wm. Weizer, Treasurer, Abe Sternberg, Warden, Louis Lando, Secretary, and Max Herzberg, A. H. Fink and M. Hirsch, Past-Presidents of Bellaire Lodge No. 785, District No. 2, of Bellaire, Ohio.

It was midnight before any one thought of leaving and then the leave taking started by those who were from out of the city and had some distance to go. The talks were inspiring and educational, holding all with deep attention. Regrets were exchanged that such a profitable night had to come to an end. Every one voted it one big gala night that will go down in Wheeling Lodge's history as difficult to equal.

Letters and telegrams were read from Ben J. Sugarman, Newark, N. J., Chairman of the Diamond Jubilee Committee, M. S. Meyerhoff, Philadelphia, Pa., Treasurer of District No. 3 Grand Lodge, Adolph Edlis, Pittsburgh, Pa., member of District No. 3 Grand Lodge General Committee, Louis Sulzbacher, Braddock, Pa., Ex-secretary of District No. 3 Grand Lodge, and Rabbi A. H. Silver, Cleveland, Ohio, Honorary Member of Wheeling Lodge.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

Amos Lodge No. 121 at its first regular meeting on Monday, March 10, was addressed by Dr. Payson Smith, Commissioner of Education, commonwealth of Massachusetts. Dr. Smith spoke on "Education and Democracy." Dr. Payson Smith is one of the leading educators in the United States. Amos Lodge at its last meeting initiated 15 new candidates. About 30 more are awaiting initiation. Brother Rabbi Abraham Nowak addressed the new brothers, explaining to them the aims and objects of the Order.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND

A meeting of Cleveland Lodge, held on March 14, was well attended and enjoyed by all present.

The Entertainment Committee provided a moving picture program consisting of a good comedy, a comedy-drama and an educational feature. Thirty four new members were given the obligation. The Entertainment Committee announced that at every meeting of the Lodge some form of entertainment will be provided for.

Whether the League of Nations will solve the problems that confront the nations of the world was thoroughly discussed by members of Cleveland Lodge at the meeting on March 27, 1919, in the B'nai B'rith Building. It was an informal discussion.

The Lodge, in conjunction with the Jewish Welfare Board, held Seder Night April 15 at the B'nai B'rith Building.

Major General Leonard Wood, of the United States Army, was the guest of the Cleveland branch of the Jewish Welfare Board of Cleveland Lodge, Sunday, April 13, 1919.

The occasion of his coming to Cleveland was the forming and dedication of the Welfare Board activities in that city. The exercises were held at the B'nai B'rith Building and Rabbi Wolsey presided. The meeting was open to the public and was largely attended.

Returned soldiers and sailors have been specially invited to attend the Junior B'nai B'rith dance on Sunday evening, April 20.

A very important meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 was held on the evening of March 27, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building. Aside from matters of importance affecting the general welfare of the Lodge, a debate was arranged on the subject "The League of Nations."

An even dozen new candidates presented themselves for initiation and the Degree Team of the Lodge performed its duty in a most satisfactory manner.

The meeting of the Lodge held on March 13 proved to be one of the most interesting meetings of the year in spite of the fact that it was held on the 13th of the month. A wide range of topics was discussed. They covered everything from a criticism of the officers to the merit of starting a new building with a new gymnasium. A new Activity Committee was appointed, also a Gymnasium Committee, which will investigate the cost of outfitting a portion of the building for athletic purposes.

The subject of new members was given special attention and every member present agreed to obtain two applications by the time the next meeting was held. Altogether the meeting was one of those old-fashioned ones, peppery and forceful.

On the second night of Sedar, which falls this year on the 15th of April, the usual ceremony will be conducted under the auspices of the Lodge in the B'nai B'rith Building. The Executive Committee is arranging to have repeated the ceremony of former years in order that strangers in Cleveland and those members who wish to attend the services may be given the opportunity to do so. The services this year will take on an added attraction because the Jewish Welfare Board is planning to invite all members of the Army and Navy in Cleveland as guests of the Board.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION BY THE B'NAI B'RITH OF NEW YORK.

Under the auspices of District No. 1 a public meeting was held at the Mt. Morris Theater, New York City, on Sunday morning, April 6, 1919, by the courtesy of the Institutional Synagogue to commemorate the second anniversary of the entry of the United States into the World War. The speakers were United States Senator W. M. Calder, Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, Conn., president of the district, and Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein of the Institutional Synagogue.

Senator Calder praised the B'nai B'rith for its work in carrying on an excellent campaign for Americanism, and added:

"I believe the standards would be increased if immigrants undertook the responsibilities of citizenship as soon as possible. Immigrants who spend ten years in this country without becoming naturalized should be returned to the countries from which they came."

The Senator praised the Jews for their part in the war, and then touched upon the League of Nations. He expressed the opinion that it would be defeated in the Senate unless the present draft were greatly amended.

CLASS INITIATION AND BANQUET BY PISGAH LODGE, DETROIT

With nearly its entire membership present, Pisgah Lodge No. 34 of Detroit initiated the largest class of candidates in its history at the Hotel Statler, on Sunday evening, March 30, 1919, at which time a class of almost 400 candidates was initiated.

The initiation ceremony was followed by a banquet and entertainment held in the two large ball rooms of the Statler, and concluded with a dance that lasted until midnight.

The new members were initiated by the new degree team recently organized, which performed its first work of this character. The team is composed of Morris Garvett, Rabbi S. S. Meyerberg, Milton M. Alexander, Leon Goldsmith and David Marymont.

While the new members were being put through the work in one room of the hotel, the ladies, who made up half of the attendance, were entertained in a parlor by a program of music, singing and classic dancing, participated in by Miss Charlotte Meyers, little Myra Fusterwold, Oshie Baker, Miss Mozette Burton, Daniel Russo and a jazz trio from Kinsel's orchestra.

At 6:30 the banquet was served, and it proved to be a real lovefeast, for the speeches which followed were all eulogistic of the great work being done by the order and of Anton Kaufman, editor of the Jewish Chronicle, who is leaving Detroit to establish a national Jewish weekly in the metropolis. Mr. Kaufman was the guest of honor and the class initiated was dedicated to him.

Morris Garvett, president of Pisgah Lodge, was first called upon. He told of how the organization had grown from a mere handful to a membership of 1,000, and that the rapid growth proved that it was a recognized force for betterment among the Jewish people of Detroit. He said that he knew it was appealing to all elements among his people and is giving them something that is bringing them back into the fold.

"Our war on sorrow, ignorance and immorality is intensifying the spirit of our people and on this rests our success," he concluded.

Following came Sidney Kunsworm, vice president of District 2 of Dayton, O. He said that he desired to congratulate the wonderful lodge in Detroit for its remarkable growth and hoped that it would continue to grow, for it is bringing out that the B'nai B'rith does not care whether a man is a banker or a peddler—if he has the spirit of brotherly love he is welcomed into the order.

The speaker pointed out the patriotism of his people during the recent conflict in Europe, saying that there were over 100,000 Jewish boys to march "over there," ready to sacrifice their lives that Democracy might live.

"The Jewish race," Mr. Kunsworm said, "numbering 3 per cent of the population of the United States, furnished 4½ per cent of the fighting strength of the government."

Hiram D. Frankel, of Minneapolis, president of District 6, made an address which opened with humorous remarks which kept the banqueters in an uproar, and then he waxed serious. He thanked Pisgah Lodge on behalf of the organization for its great work, and felicitated Mr. Kaufman for the great work he had done among the people during his three years' residence in Detroit. He urged that the work of reconstruction among the returned Jewish soldiers and sailors be carried out, following a plan that will be mapped out within a few weeks, and said that this will mean more than meeting the boys at the railroad depot, giving them a free meal and then forgetting about them.

He pleaded for more Yiddish pride in the home, and urged that the old traditions of the home be followed more closely, for in this way greater progress may be made by the Jewish race. All should work together for greater brotherly love, harmony and benevolence, he said, and benevolences should be enlarged by an increase in contributions to the charities supported by the B'nai B'rith.

Milton M. Alexander made a presentation speech in which he gave Mr. Kaufman a watch, chain and locket on behalf of the order. He said in part: "Brother Kaufman, it is my opportunity and responsibility to express to you the love and the esteem and the affection which the Lodge bears for you, the happiness and understanding you have brought us, the love and the well wishes you take with you, the cherished memories you leave behind."

Rabbi Leo M. Franklin delivered the benediction. The invocation was given by Rabbi Samuel S. Mayerberg.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Under the auspices of the [illegible] Forum of Harmony Lodge [illegible] open meeting not only to the [illegible] of the Order but to their [illegible] held at the Harmony Hall [illegible] evening, April 13, 1919. The event was one of the best features that the Harmony Forum ever arranged.

Dr. Stephen F. Maher of New Haven, president of the Connecticut Health Commission, was the guest of honor and he delivered an address on the subject, "A Sister of a Certain Soldier," a story that particularly concerns us and our people.

An interesting program was arranged, and after the speaking, dancing was indulged in.

Torpedoed Three Times.

Thrilling experiences of being thrice torpedoed, told most graphically, thoroughly entertained more than 200 members, when Ensign Morris Miller gave a talk at a smoker given by Harmony Lodge. He also talked on the necessity of citizenship, the reduction of illiteracy and of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. He spoke quite forcibly on the point that one effective way to combat Bolshevism is to reduce illiteracy and teach the foreigners the duties of good citizenship.

In speaking of his adventures while in the navy, Ensign Miller told of one incident when he was torpedoed first. Four and one-half minutes after the Antilles was torpedoed on Oct. 17, 1917, it sunk, with a total loss of life of seventy persons. He was in the water, with many other survivors, for four hours before he was rescued by the crew of the Alcedo. Three weeks later the Alcedo was torpedoed in the Bay of Biscay and twenty lives were lost.

While on the U. S. S. Finland they were struck by an enemy torpedo and eight men were killed. They were hit about one day's sail from France and they limped into port. Another time when he was stationed on the William Rockefeller that boat was hit by a torpedo on May 18, 1918, just off the French coast. The casualties totaled three men.

Other entertainers of the evening were: Piano selections by Alexander Greenspun, violin selections by David Greenspun, card tricks by Robert Sherman, mimics by Harry Fox, songs by George Greenspun, recitations by Morris Greenspun. Refreshments were served.

LECTURE BY GEN. HOLDEN.

At the meeting of Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., held on March 25, 1919, Brigadier General Benjamin Y. Holden, of the United States Army, delivered an address to the members of the Lodge and a large number of their friends. The subject of his address was "The Record of the Jewish Race in the World War." The members of Harmony Lodge were especially well pleased with the address.

This lecture was the first of a series to be given under the auspices of the Lodge and a cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend the coming lectures for which the following speakers have been secured: Prof. W. L. Phelps, of Yale University; L. J. Obermeier, Assistant District Attorney of New York; Congressman Henry M. Goldfogle and Judge A. K. Cohn, of Boston, Mass. The lectures will be announced through the press and are expected to prove the most interesting course of lectures arranged for Bridgeport during the present season.

HARMONY LODGE HOLDS FIRST FORMAL DANCE.

Rain did not interfere with the formal dance given by Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., on the evening of March 19th, 1919.

The hall was prettily decorated for the affair and catchy dance pieces were played by the M. M. and M. orchestra. Between dances Phil Kues, a member of the orchestra, and George Greenspun, the popular Bridgeport tenor, entertained with vocal selections.

The patronesses of the dances were: Mrs. Charles H. Shapiro, Mrs. Sigmund Loewith, Mrs. Maximillian Stein, Mrs. Lawrence S. Finkelstone, Mrs. Samuel Sussman, Mrs. Benjamin W. Brownstein, Mrs. Samuel N. Schnee, Mrs. Maurice S. Rosen, Mrs. George N. Finkelstone, Mrs. Joseph Gilman, Mrs. Jacob Flamm and Mrs. I. J. Goldman.

Following is the committee of arrangements: Joseph Solomon, chairman; Joseph H. Lederer, George N. Finkelstone, Maximilian Stein, George Greenspun, Michael Shulansky, Bernard Rubenstein, Joseph Gilman, Max Frank and Joseph Hirchfield.

OMAHA LODGE, OMAHA, NEB.

The intellectual advancement committee of Omaha Lodge No. 354 of Omaha, Neb., of which committee Harry H. Lapidus is chairman, has offered very good programs for members of the Order, as well as ladies and friends. The last Thursday of each month is devoted to some program, both musical and educational. A short time ago Dr. Millener, the wireless expert, gave an illustrated lecture to the members on the wireless telephone. which he helped to perfect while in the service of the United States. At another meeting, which was open to members, ladies and friends, a musical program was offered, as well as a demonstration of teaching deaf children how to talk by the lip movement. This demonstration was put on by the Nebraska School for the Deaf.

At the meeting held on March 20, the lodge had as visitors Bro. Aaron Horvitz, field secretary, and J. H. Skirboll, sectional director for entertainmment of soldiers for the Jewish Welfare Board. Both gave splendid talks of their work among our boys in the various camps.

The membership team is striving hard to break all records for increasing the membership and at the rate they are working there is no doubt but that they will accomplish their aim.

The social service committee is doing its usual good work and is taking care of all juvenile cases of children of our faith who are tried in Omaha courts.

We publish herewith the following letter from Judge Troup of the Juvenile Court.

Feb. 15, 1919.

To the President of the I. O. B. B. Lodge No. 354.

I wish to say a word in behalf of the social service committee of this city, a Jewish organization composed as it is, of Jewish people of the highest social and moral standing in this community. We all recognize in this committee a positive force for good in this city. Its members are constantly laboring in the interests of the Jewish people, and particularly energetic and awake to the welfare of the boys and girls of this community, to the end that their moral conduct may be guided and protected aright along the paths of righteousness and right living.

As judge of the Juvenile Court of this city I am constantly coming in contact with their splendid work and recognize the great help this committee and its individual members have been to this institution and to other kindred organizations in this community.

Very respectfully,
A. C. TROUP,
Judge Juvenile Court.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO

A lecture on "Sex Hygiene" was given by Dr. Goldman on Wednesday evening, April 16, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Hall under the auspices of the Committe of Fifty of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of San Francisco. The lecture was for men only. B'nai B'rith members and their friends were present in large numbers. Dr. Alvin E. Cerf presided.

On Wednesday evening, April 30, a class initiation will take place under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty, of which Brother Louis Geballe is chairman. Proposed amendments to the bylaws of Unity Lodge No. 273, pertaining to membership status were taken up for final action at the meeting held on April 7, 1919. An address, "Some Present-Day Problems", was given by Brother Edmund Tauszky.

An informal dance was given by the Committee of Fifty of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of San Francisco on the evening of April 9. A large number of members attended and discussed the work at hand.

The Ladies' Committee, representing the two Ladies' Auxiliaries of the B'nai B'rith of San Francisco, elected officers at a recent meeting and outlined a tentative plan for social, educational and charitable activities for the year.

The committee voted its thanks to Mrs. Milton Meyer for her untiring and successful work in behalf of the committee and the auxiliaries during the past year.

The impressive new ritual of the ladies' auxiliaries of B'nai B'rith was exemplified by a new degree team at a class initiation conducted by Columbia Auxiliary No. 1, on March 10, in B'nai B'rith Hall. Mrs. Sylvia K. Licht, president of the auxiliary, presided and addressed the new members at the conclusion of the initiatory ceremonies.

The Columbia and Modine-Ophir Auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith, held a ball on Sunday evening, March 30, 1919. Elaborate arrangements were made for the affair and a number of novel features were successfully carried out.

B'NAI BRITH OF CHICAGO.

Oriental Hillel Lodge.

At a well-attended meeting of the Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72, held at the Covenant Club, Monday evening, April 7, 1919, Mr. Hiram D. Grankel, of St. Paul, president of District Grand Lodge No. 6, was the guest of honor. He delivered an address on the subject, "Open Portals," which was well received by the members present. Dr. Rudolph I. Coffee followed with an addres on the subject, "Construction, Not Reconstruction." At the close of both addresses a rising vote of thanks was tendered the speakers.

Ramah Lodge.

Owing to the fact that Pesach fell upon the regular meeting night of the lodge, the meeting scheduled for that date was postponed and held on Thursday evening, April 17, 1919, at the Covenant Club.

The meeting was called earlier than usual, for the purpose of enabling the lodge to transact its regular routine business before 9 o'clock, so that the social program could be successfully carried out.

Special features of the meeting were the initiation of a class of candidates, and an address by Mrs. Seraphine Pisko of Denver, Colo., secretary of the National Jewish Hospital, on the subject, "Work of the Jewish Hospital for Consumptives," illustrated by stereopticon views.

The balance of the program was taken up with songs and recitations. The social meeting was open to the public, and a large number of ladies availed themselves of the privilege of attending.

At the close of the evening refreshments were served and the meeting was closed.

Covenant Club.

The regular weekly dinner dance held on Wednesday evening, April 9, was unusually well attended, and the entertainment committee prepared a novelty surprise, which was appreciated by all those present.

On Saturday evening, April 12, 1919, an informal dance was held and was much enjoyed by all.

At the Tuesday noon gathering of the members and their friends at the Covenant Club on March 25, 1919, Major Reed Landis (the American ace) addressed the audience on the subject "Above German Clouds." This was a rare opportunity given to the members of the club and a number of them and their ladies were present to listen to this daring young aviator speak of his experiences in the air.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PITTSBURGH

Saar Sholem Lodge No. 154

The meeting on March 16 was attended by a large number of the members who extended the hand of fellowship in welcome to Bro. Max J. Lewis, former secretary of Wilkes-Barre Lodge; Brother Lewis is at present in the Government Service, as Internal Revenue Inspector, and coming recommended by Judge Strauss and Joseph D. Coons, past presidents of the District, was received in a most kindly manner, for which he in a neat address expressed his gratitude and appreciation. Brother Lewis makes his headquarters at 1412 Keystone Building, Pittsburgh.

Jericho Lodge No. 44

On Sunday, March 23, the request of the War Department of the United States for one hundred workers for Welfare Service on Transports will be discussed; doubtless the meeting will be well attended and some interesting news will be given concerning the arrangements made by our Government for the return of our boys from overseas. In view of the fact that Mayor Babcock has appointed some of our members on the committee to arrange for the proposed Peace Celebration and the activities now being displayed for a thoroughly appreciative and a glorious reception to our returning soldiers and sailors, the discussion is looked forward to with considerable interest.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SEATTLE

Mr. M. Haas, of Washington, addressed the members of Rainier Lodge No. 627, of Seattle, Wash., at its meeting held on March 5, 1919, at the Educational Center. Before the lecture a number of candidates were initiated and Mr. E. Rosenberg, a delegate of the Lodge from the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge, submitted a report.

A regular meeting of Rainier Lodge will be held on the evening of April 2, at the Educational Center. Mr. Weiner having just returned from Welfare Work Service abroad, addressed the members of the Lodge on the experiences he gathered while in that service.

An Appreciation—1842-1919.

That a bright star has dropped from the blue firmament of Jews, that a kind husband and father has gone to his final rest, that the B'nai B'rith has lost one of its early and wholesouled workers, that we shall miss his welcome presence in our meeting rooms—these are but a few of the truths we make into a wreath of praise, and with it, glorify the sacred memory of our late departed brother, Henry Meyers, for many years a member of the Order, a past president in two lodges, a veteran member of Washington Lodge, and for nine years a Governor of the District Home at Yonkers.

His small frame, too often wracked by suffering, was nevertheless guided by a steadier mind, superior in intellect, profound in religious spirit, fair, honest, kind and compassionate, considerate, and above all, complacent. In fact, Henry Meyers possessed many lovable qualities, which, closely interwoven with a few harmless eccentricities, gave him a fine, dependable attractive personality.

He gave to the B'nai B'rith as cheerfully as he did to his family; not a single matter escaped his notice, when he was well enough to give it attention. Not more than his lodge was the Old Folks Home at Yonkers a continuous source of pleasure and care for his busy mind; he gave ungrudgingly of his resources and his talents to bring pleasure to the inmates. The annual Thanksgiving event at the Home, over which he presided, was the outstanding occasion to which he and most of his family gave personal effort.

Born in Germany of German parentage, he came to this country at the age of 17 and settled in the city of New Orleans, where he lived and thrived for about 20 years; he then came to this city (New York), continuing his business until about 15 years ago, when he retired to the comforts of private life. It was during the entire time of these last years that he gave so cheerfully of his efforts toward the success of the Home—in the capacity of Governor.

His early years of activity were marked by persistent effort and skill and were deservedly crowned with success. He was a member of the Gulf Lodge of New Orleans, one of its presidents, a member and once president of Washington lodge, annual representative to the Grand Lodge sessions since 1902 and several times officer therein, a devoted governor of the First District Home at Yonkers for about 10 years, one term the treasurer and one term vice-president thereof.

Our lodge has lost a brother whose years of unstinted service are excelled by few, if any; the community has lost a vanishing type of devotee: the family will long mourn the "Touch of the vanished hand,

And the sound of the voice that is still."

May his soul rest in peace.

By Brother M. M. Stark, Manhattan—Washington Lodge No. 19, District No. 1.

BUTLER LODGE, BUTLER, PA.

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the institution of the Order was celebrated by Butler Lodge No. 772, of Butler, Pa., on Sunday, March 2, 1919.

The meeting was called to order at 2 p. m., more than 50 members being in attendance, and the officers occupying their respective stations. Six new members were elected, thus raising the membership to 69, and 11 were initiated with appropriate ceremonies.

Butler Lodge is almost the youngest lodge in this District, and now boasts of splendid quarters, where the spirit of friendship and harmony is given full opportunity for development. Letters of congratulation, regretting inability to be present, were received from Judge Josiah Cohen, past president of this District; Marcus Feuchtwanger, president of the District, and Dr. S. H. Goldenson, of the Temple; their good wishes were gratefully acknowledged and loudly cheered.

Brother Friedland, of McKeesport Lodge, arrived before adjournment and extended cordial greetings from members of that Lodge. A rising vote of thanks was tendered the visiting members and a promise exacted from them for an early repetition of their visit.

Brother David Rosenbaum, who recently returned from active U. S. A. service in France, gave an interesting description of army life in the United States and in France. He spoke quite favorably of the Jewish Welfare Board.

ADULLAM LODGE, PITTSFIELD, MASS.

By M. Ziskind.

Adullam Lodge No. 326 of Pittsfield, Mass., has been very active of late not only in securing quite an additional number of new members, but in arranging several intellectual treats for its members and the community at large in their section.

At our installation Archibald M. Hillman of Worcester installed the following officers: President, M. Ziskind, Vice-President, Charles Kapner. At the close of this meeting the lodge retired in a body with its guests to the New American House, where a banquet was held. Archibald M. Hillman and Rabbi Samuel Price of Springfield were the speakers of the evening, and retiring President George A. Newman acted as toastmaster.

On Sunday, Feb. 16, the Horeb Lodge degree team, headed by Brothers Dr. Gans and Joseph Koletsky, initiated thirteen candidates.

On Monday evening, Feb. 24, Rabbi Samuel Price of Springfield delivered a talk to our members on Zionism, and March 10 Rabbi Eli Mayer of Albany, N. Y., spoke to our lodge, expressing the views of the anti-Zionists.

Both talks were very much appreciated by our members, as it gave them an opportunity of hearing both sides of the question very ably discussed.

Monday, March 31st, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York will speak under the auspices of Adullam Lodge in the Masonic Hall, which has a seating capacity of about 800, using for his theme, "Personal Impressions of the Peace Conference." This affair will be open to both Jews and non-Jews, and admission will be by ticket, which can be procured from the arrangement committee without charge.

At present nine candidates are awaiting initiation and Adullam Lodge is very close to the 100 mark. Associated with President Morris Ziskind in all these activities are Past Presidents George A. Newman, Gerson Rosenthal and Leo Zander. Brothers Harry M. Meyer, Gerson Rosenthal and Daniel England are also giving generously of their time towards the arrangements of the Rabbi Wise lecture.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Moving an audience that thronged Hiram Hall to a tense pitch of enthusiasm and interest, Dr. Stephen J. Maher, president of the Connecticut Public Health Association, in a thrilling address, "The Sister of a Certain Soldier," emphasized to Horeb Lodge members at a meeting held on Sunday night, March 23, 1919, that there should be only one measure of standard among races. Dr. Maher's book bearing that title is a work of great literary merit, and its story, surrounding the adventures of a colored girl during the world conflict, was dramatically and forcefully presented.

To recognize the good in humans, regardless of race, was the theme that quietly and yet potently ran through the story of the colored girl; who, although shamed and snubbed by white folks, yet offered her life that some of her white neighbor's children might live during the infantile paralysis epidemic, and who does sacrifice her life in order that colored men of her race might go forth to help the white man in his fight for Democracy.

It was a powerful story told in a powerful way, and the realistic message of Dr. Maher will long be remembered by Horeb Lodge members.

Horeb Lodge unanimously went on record as indorsing the plan to establish an institution for crippled children suffering from tuberculosis at Crescent Beach, Niantic, Conn., which project has been fostered by Dr. Stephen J. Maher for a number of years.

The lodge has prepared an honor roll record for the 105 of its members who are in the United States Army and Navy.

CHIPPEWA VALLEY LODGE, EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

On March 16, 1918, the lodge had a Purim Ball and also celebrated B'nai B'rith Day, the funds to be used for the relief of war sufferers. A handsome sum was realized which was due mainly to the efforts of Brother Emil Weinfeld.

B'NAI B'RITH CLASS INITIATION.

A large class initiation under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of Philadelphia was held at the Lu Lu Temple on Sunday, March 31, 1919.

The event was the most auspicious held in Philadelphia for a number of years. The one hundred and forty candidates who responded to the call were impressed with the ceremonies incidental to their induction into the Order. Two distinguished guests from the city of New York addressed the large audience, composed of candidites and members of the fraternity, Samuel Fleishman, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of the Order, and Charles Hartman, executive member of the Order, spoke.

The feature of the affair, however, was the oration delivered by Rabbi Isadore Rosenthal, of Lancaster, Pa. Rabbi Rosenthal gave a forceful exposition of the activity of the Order for three-quarters of a century.

President Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, addressed the candidates.

The General Committee, consisting of Adolph Edlis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; H. S. Platowsky, Philadelphia, Pa.; Joseph H. Ruben, McKeesport, Pa.; Albert Rosenstein, Lancaster, Pa.; Louis Rosenblatt, Wilmington, Del.; Leon B. Stein, Wheeling, W. Va.; B. J. Sugarman, Newark, N. J.; Jacob Singer, Philadelphia, Pa.; Marcus Feuchtwanger, New Castle, Pa.; M. S. Meyerhoff, Philadelphia, Pa., and David Bortin, Philadelphia, Pa., were present.

At the conclusion of the Class Initiation, a dinner was tendered to the General Committee and the guests at the Hotel Vendig.

MISSOURI LODGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The new administration of Missouri Lodge No. 22, I. O. B. B., of St. Louis, held its first meeting Feb. 26 under very pleasing auspices. Henry Oppenheimer, the new President, directed the meeting very capably and the prospects for a successful year look very promising. As the feature of the evening, Brother David Sommers of Ebn Ezra Lodge, gave a very interesting and instructive talk on "Personal Experiences in Traveling Through Palestine." Brother Sommers spoke in a conversational manner and held the attention of those present throughout his entire talk. Much business was transacted and the evening closed as cigars were being passed.

At the regular meeting of the Lodge, held on Sunday evening, March 16, a large number of members were present. A special class was initiated by a team of Past Presidents of the Lodge in a very impressive manner. A number of very important committee reports were presented, among them being that of the Auditing and Budget and Finance Committee. The reports show Missouri Lodge in splendid financial condition and the budget for the year shows the liberal spirit of the Lodge in its estimated disbursements for charitable causes. The entertainment committee announced that arrangements for a reception and dance to be held March 30 had been made and that it looked for a large crowd.

It was decided to hold a general discussion on "Zionism" at an early meeting and the committee thereof is busy at the present time.

HENRY JONES LODGE, NEW YORK

Henry Jones-Lebanon Lodge No. 79 held its fiftieth anniversary and peace jubilee on March 22, 1919. This was a very splendid affair and will long be remembered by those who were present. The following were the speakers: Hon. Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State; Brothers Lester M. Friedman, Adolph Hirsh, Charles Hartman, Charles H. Shapiro, Captain Moses Minzesheimer, Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein, Isaac Siegel, Joseph Levenson and Joshua Kantrowitz.

Much credit is due to Brother Adolph Hirsh, chairman of the arrangement committee, for having arranged so fine a program. The other members of the arrangement committee were: Brothers Israel Ben Scheiber, secretary of the committee; Isidor Anhalt, Joel Del Monte, Henry Dottenheim, Louis Fabricant, Meyer H. Hirsch, Joshua Kantrowitz, Max Kottler, Julius Kirschstein, Max Levy, Joseph Levenson, Moses Minzesheimer, Ely Rosenberg, Louis G. Schwartz, Jacob Shapiro, Hon. Isaac Siegel, Henry Sobel and Raymond S. Wile.

At the next meeting of the Lodge, on April 10, Brothers Charles H. Shapiro, president of the district, and the Hon. Samuel Campner, former Mayor of New Haven, have promised to address the members of the Henry Jones-Lebanon Lodge No. 79. Other members of the district have also been invited to be present at this meeting.

ABRAHAM LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

By Harry J. Fox

At a meeting held at our Lodge rooms on Sunday, April 6, a committee was appointed to help procure positions for sailors, soldiers and marines who have returned from the service. Committee appointed were Jacob B. Klein, Benjamin B. Shalet, William Tischlerand, Mark Reinstein. They were chosen to assist the Jewish Welfare and Activities League and the Young Men's Hebrew Association.

At this meeting eight members were initiated and seven applications for membership were received. The entertainment committee outlined their plans for a pinochle tournament on April 20 for members only, and a whist for members, their families and friends on May 18. The following committees submitted their reports, which were listened to with great interest: The honor roll, degree team, entertainment, social and various other committees, who displayed a great deal of enthusiasm. It clearly indicates that Abraham Lodge is the oldest leading Lodge in Bridgeport.

Oil paintings of our departed distinguished brothers, Moses Klein and Bernard Klein, were hung in a most appropriate place in our Lodge rooms. They were painted by Geza Fisher, a painter who is a member of our Lodge. The degree team is in fine working condition and initiated a class on several occasions. Harry J. Fox, secretary of our Lodge, has carried on a correspondence with our members in the service, and it was a pleasure to hear of the various experiences that our brothers have gone through in this great war. Henry Greenstein, our worthy president, has outlined a plan to our membership committee that clearly shows that he is endeavoring to make Abraham Lodge the best meeting place. Every meeting is being attended by a large membership. Something is doing all of the time.

McKEESPORT LODGE, McKEESPORT, PA.

The best attended meeting within recent years was held by McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., on Sunday morning, April 6, 1919.

The turnout exceeded the fondest hopes of the officers and an agreeable surprise was the presence of Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, president of District Grand Lodge No. 3.

President Feuchtwanger explained his custom of dropping in at lodge meetings without previously announcing the visit, in order that he may meet the "regular" attendants at the meetings and not the "casuals."

In a forcible address President Feuchtwanger reviewed the work being done in District No. 3, pointing out in specially strong language the success of our campaign against the defamation of the Jew, whether on the stage, on the screen or in the press.

The most striking and best appreciated portion of his message was his positive assertion that the B'nai B'rith can not and does not represent any element of "ism" in Jewry, but represents solely the Jew.

He was optimistic in his views as to the growth of the B'nai B'rith activities throughout the District, embracing Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New Jersey and Delaware.

A large class of candidates was initiated by the president whose rendition of the ritual and general instructions as to future work along the line of benevolence greatly impressed the members and inspired them with enthusiasm and an ardent desire to render even greater service during the present campaign of revival.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

A membership campaign has been launched by Jehuda Halevi Lodge No. 710 of New Britain, Conn., on March 23, 1919, to increase its membership by 100 members. After the campaign shall have been concluded, a class initiation will be arranged by the Lodge and the Chairman, N. D. Saxe, has secured the following speakers for that occasion: Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, President of the District Grand Lodge; Harry Lasker of Springfield, Mass., First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge; Rabbi Samuel J. Abram of Bridgeport, Joseph H. Ullman of New Haven, Past President of the District Grand Lodge and member of the General Committee; Samuel Campner, former Mayor of New Haven, and Judge Jacob Caplan of New Haven.

At that meeting several returned soldiers from across the sea, members of the Lodge, will tell of their war experiences.

A banquet will follow the meeting under the supervision of the Entertainment Committee of the Lodge.

INSTITUTION OF LODGE AT TORONTO, CANADA.

A new Lodge was formed in Toronto under the name of Toronto Lodge No. 836. The Lodge started with 72 charter members, who represent some of the best citizens of Toronto. The following members of the general committee installed the Lodge: Brother Charles Hartman, executive member of District No. 1; Brother Joseph H. Ullman, past president of the district; Brother Dr. Joseph Silverman, Rabbi of Temple Emanu-El of New York; Brother Charles H. Shapiro, the president of the district, and Brother Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, secretary of the district. The initiation was followed by an elaborate banquet at the King Edward Hotel, at which eloquent speeches were delivered by the distinguished visitors, also by a number of the local brothers.

Brother Dr. Kaplan occupied the pulpit of the Holy Blossom Temple on the Sabbath preceding the institution of the Lodge. Brother Kaplan called special attention to the splendid work of the Anti-Defamation League.

Members of the general committee, on their return to New York, paid a visit to Montefiore Lodge No. 70, of Buffalo, N. Y., which held a special meeting in honor of the distinguished guests. The meeting was followed by a banquet.

SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Springfield Lodge No. 684 of Springfield, Mass., held a past presidents' night on Monday evening, March 24, 1919, with a many featured program in honor of its members who have attained the highest honor conferred by the lodge.

The guest of the occasion was District President Charles Shapiro of Bridgeport, Conn., who made a brief address. The humorous sketch, "A Night at the Past Presidents' Club," was then put on, while through the courtesy of the Golstein brothers of the Broadway Theater several acts were given, the B'nai B'rith orchestra furnishing music. The drill and exhibition of Troop 22 of Boy Scouts at the close of the evening was much appreciated by the 100 odd members present and visiting members of Holyoke Lodge. Following is the committee of arrangements, which also was the cast of the comedy sketch: Chairman, Henry Lasker; vice-chairman, P. L. Davison; grand marshal, Frederick Cohn; master of ceremonies, Frederick Rabinowitz, and Paul Krauss.

B'NAI B'RITH OF DENVER.

The regular meetings of Denver Lodge No. 171 for the month of April were scheduled to take place on the 13th and 27th of April.

The meeting of the 13th of April was interesting, as the result of an address of Bro. J. A. Harrison on the subject, "Another View of the League of Nations."

Denver lodge lost another of its old members in the death of Bro. Lesser Levy. He filled every position in the gift of the lodge and held the position of treasurer for 19 years. Brother Levy was a man of sterling character, plain and unassuming, and all those who knew him best will remember him with tender recollections.

With reference to Social Service and Big Brother Work, Brother Cowan, chairman of the committee, in his report says:

"We may think we are doing good work, but we have only scratched the surface. What we need is follow-up work, and it is difficult to rely on volunteers for this work. After a meeting of our full committee, we hope to offer a suggestion that, if it meets with your approval, will be effective in lessening Jewish delinquency. If we want to stop this tide of anti-Semitism that is slowly but surely creeping America-ward we will do well to watch and work with our wayward boys, so that they may be a pride to us. We will find it well worth our while."

GILEAD LODGE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Brother H. D. Frankel of St. Paul, president of District Grand Lodge No. 6, paid an official visit to Gilead Lodge No. 41 of Milwaukee, Wis., at its last meeting in March, and spoke upon the subject of "Open Portals" to the largest gathering of members that has ever taken place since the consolidation of Milwaukee lodges. Great enthusiasm was created through his visit, and as a result of a campaign which commenced the following day, in which Brothers Frankel and Loevinger took part, 53 petitions were received, and the committee on membership is still out on the drive to increase the number to over 100. Within a short time the Lodge expects to have a large class of candidates for initiation.

ETHAM LODGE, SACRA[illegible] CAL.

Etham Lodge No. 37 held [illegible] most interesting meeting [illegible] past five years on March 11, [illegible] ception was tendered Dr. Fried and the boys who have recently returned from the colors.

Interesting remarks were made by Dr Fried, who spoke of the Jewish Welfare work in the Texas camps. Sergt. Morris B. Rothholz spoke of the social and educational work of the different welfare organizations at Vancouver Barracks, Wash., and especially of the B'nai B'rith at Portland, Ore. Sergt. Joe Goldstein, who was recently discharged, after fourteen months' service overseas, told of his interesting experiences at the battle front.

Milton Marks, assistant city attorney of San Francisco, gave one of his usual splendid addresses and urged on the membership committee by offering a loving cup to the winning team.

At the previous meeting of Etham Lodge, the newly elected officers were installed by District Deputy Leo Garfinkle. Afterwards the officers and members banqueted at the Travelers Hotel and several interesting addresses were made by Ben Shapiro and Milton Schwartz of Oakland Lodge and by members of Etham Lodge.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATION BY MESABA LODGE, VIRGINIA, MINN.

At an enthusiastic meeting of Mesaba Lodge No. 673, attended by over 40 members, at which several members from surrounding territory were present, plans were made for the coming year's work. Five candidates were initiated in the lodge and another member was admitted by card of withdrawal, making a total of 66 members in the lodge. The officers of the lodge acted as the degree team, assisted by Brother Charles Oreckovsky of Duluth. Following the meeting, the members repaired to the Odd Fellows' Temple, where they participated in the annual B'nai B'rith day banquet. Brother Oreckovsky of Duluth, member of the general committee, spoke very interestingly about the work of the order in District No. 6.

Other remarks were made by Brother Morris K. Baer and Rabbi Sugarman. Fifty members of the lodge were present. Brother Nathan Keller acted as toastmaster. In the evening an open meeting of the lodge was held, at which the members were present with their wives and families. Brother L. Edward Lashman of the Anti-Defamation League addressed those present upon the social service activities of the Order and the work of the Anti-Defamation League. The evening's entertainment concluded with a dance, in which several hundred people participated.

LOUIS D. BRANDEIS LODGE, REGINA, CANADA.

A most interesting meeting of Louis D. Brandeis Lodge No. 833, Regina, Canada, was held on Sunday evening, March 9, at which time a class of eleven members was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge. After the regular order of business was disposed of, the Lodge was closed in due form and the social committee took charge of the Lodge and carried out a well arranged program, which was enjoyed by all those present. The main feature of the day was an address on "The Work of the Order," by Brother I. Yampolsky.

The Lodge holds regular meetings twice a month. It has rendered relief to some co-religionists who were in need. The sick committee of the Lodge has been active and kept watch to see that none of the members in case of need should suffer.

The Lodge, through its Anti-Defamation League Committee, has also been active in the matter of protecting the fair name of the Jew.

ADULLAM LODGE, PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Adullam Lodge No. 326 of Pittsfield, Mass., was responsible for the largest meeting ever held in Pittsfield, under Jewish auspices, when Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York spoke at the Masonic Temple to an audience of over 800 people. The press of Pittsfield was very complimentary for the privilege extended to the community at large of hearing Rabbi Wise, and made special comment that the city was especially indebted to the president of Adullam Lodge, Morris Ziskind, who was not only active in getting the Rabbi to speak, but also very much interested in all the arrangements.

Rabbi Wise spoke on "Personal Impressions of the Peace Conference and the League of Nations".

DISTRICT NO. 1

New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1, the mother Lodge of the district, has been increasing its membership lately, thus joining in the general membership campaign in honor of the 75th Diamond Jubilee, recently celebrated by the order. Brother Ed. Brucks, the newly elected president of the Lodge, with the co-operation of several other energetic members, has announced the receipt of 21 new applications. Sixteen brothers of the Lodge recently returned from service. New York Isaiah Lodge, in proportion to its membership, had the largest quota of brothers in the service.

Brother Dr. Samuel Greenfield, president of Mt. Sinai No. 2, is arranging a series of meetings to be addressed by prominent speakers. These meetings are expected to be largely attended. New York Isaiah Lodge No. 1 has invited Brother Leonard J. Obermeier of Mt. Sinai No. 2 to address the Lodge. Brother Obermeier is one of the most eloquent of speakers.

Jordan Lodge No. 15 was addressed last Thursday evening by Brother Chas. Hartman, member of the executive commitee of District No. 1. Brother Hartman appealed to the Lodge to preserve its fine B'nai B'rith traditions of enthusiastic activities.

District No. 1 held a public meeting Sunday morning, April 6, 1919, at the Mt. Morris Theater, New York City, to commemorate the second anniversary of the entry of the United States into the World War. This was held at the Mt. Morris Theater by courtesy of the Institutional Synagogue, of which Brother Congressman Isaac Siegel is president. The following were the speakers on the occasion: United States Senator Hon. William M. Calder, Brother Charles H. Shapiro, president of the district, and Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein of the Institutional Synagogue. There was also a special musical program arranged.

Harmony Lodge No. 711 gave a formal dance Wednesday evening, March 19, at Harmony Hall, Bridgeport, Conn. The patronesses were: Mmes. Charles H. Shapiro, Sigmund Loewith. Maximilian Stein, Lawrence S. Finklestone, Samuel Sussman, Benj. W. Brownstein, Joseph G. Shapiro, Samuel N. Schnee, Maurice S. Rosen, George N. Finklestone, Joseph Gilman, Jacob Flamm and I. J. Goldman. The committee of arranements included: Joseph Solomon, chairman; Joseph H. Lederer, George N. Finklestone, Maximilian Stein, George Greenspan, Michael Shulansky, Bernard Rubenstein, Joseph Gilman, Max Frank and Joseph Hinchfield.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 was addressed recently by Prof. M. S. Mandell of Yale University. Horeb Lodge will be addressed at its next meeting by Dr. Stephen J. Maher, president of the Connecticut Public Health Association. His subject will be "The Sister of a Certain Soldier," a story on race prejudice. Horeb Lodge will conduct the special class initiation at the "get-together" meeting that [illegible] to take place May 7, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith headquarters, New York City. The metropolitan Lodges of District No. 1 expect to make this an impressive initiation, and every effort is being put forth by the members to make this one of the best class initiations ever held in the district.

At a meeting of Jordan Lodge No. 15, New York City, held on April 3, 1919, Bro. Charles Hartman, Past President of the District Grand Lodge and member of the Executive Committee of the Order for District No. 1, was the guest of honor and delivered an address to the members on the work of the Order.

Jordan Lodge is about to engage in a membership drive and is satisfied that as a result thereof it will materially increase its membership.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

At the meeting of Trinidad Lodge No. 293, of Trinidad, Colo., held in the month of March, a class of four candidates was initiated. A vote of thanks was tendered Rabbi Macht for his efforts in bringing about such a splendid result.

The meeting room has been fitted up in the lodge room, and a number of Jewish periodicals and magazines are constantly on file. The Lodge has appointed a committee to secure a good collection of books of Jewish interest.

District Grand Lodge No. 2 will hold its annual convention in the City of Louisville, Ky., May 4, 5 and 6, 1919.

DISTRICT NO. 3

Brother Charles Hartman, member of the executive committee of the Order for District No. 1, and Brother Samuel Fleischman, president of the Court of Appeals of the Order, both of New York City, attended a large class initiation in Philadelphia on March 30, 1919, at which time over 200 candidates were initiated into the Philadelphia lodges.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

A large crowd attended a masquerade dance at the B'nai B'rith Club House on Saturday evening, March 15. The hall was beautifully decorated, and during the entertainment refreshments were served.

Dr. J. K. Levin, Rabbi of Temple B'nai Israel, while representing Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420, of Butte., Mont., at the Diamond Jubilee celebration of the Order, held at Spokane, Wash., delivered the principal address before Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423, of Spokane.

A regular meeting of Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420 of Butte, Mont., was held on April 3, which was very spirited, and a committee was appointed to attend to the wants of returning Jewish soldiers of that city and to secure employment for them.

A regular meeting of Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420 of Butte, Mont., was held on March 20, 1919, when Bro. H. Blumkin presented the annual report of the Grand Lodge, wherein special emphasis was made of the progress of Baron de Hirsch Lodge as depicted in the increased membership and enhanced financial standing.

A joint Purim Ball held at the Women's Club on March 15 under the auspices of the lodge and the ladies' auxiliary of the Temple was a brilliant success.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta, Ga., held an unusually well attended meeting on April 9, 1919, in the vestry room of the Temple. Mrs. Annie T. Wise and Harold Hirsch addressed the gathering on civic and educational topics, which proved of much interest to all those present. The evening was rounded out by a Dutch luncheon and smoker.

DISTRICT NO. 6

Brothers Edward L. Lashman of Chicago, director of the Anti-Defamation League of the Order, and Charles D. Oreckovsky of Duluth, member of the general committee of the District Grand Lodge, paid an official visit to Mesaba Lodge of Virginia, Minn., on Sunday, April 6, where they assisted in the initiation of a class of candidates, attended a banquet and public meeting under the auspices of the Lodge. The two Grand Lodge officers made addresses both at the Lodge meeting and at the public meeting.

Iron Range Lodge No. 793, of Chisholm, Minn., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, March 13, 1919, with initiation of a class of seven candidates. A dinner and public meeting, followed by a dance, were the main features of the celebration.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Gulf Lodge No. 221 of New Orleans, La., held a well attended meeting on Thursday, March 13, 1919. Besides the many matters of interest which always present themselves at the meetings of that lodge, the forthcoming convention of the District Grand Lodge was discussed, for which the committee of the joint lodges of New Orleans made extensive preparations, made it desirous that a large number of members participate in making the event a most enjoyble and a hospitable one for the delegates and their ladies.

Under the auspices of Isador Strauss Lodge No. 519, of Fort Worth, Texas, a grand ball was given on Thursday evening, April 3, 1919, at the Hebrew Institute. The affair proved a great success. At the close of the evening refreshments were served.

The Amarillo Jewish Community and the B'nai B'rith Lodge of that city lost a valued member in the death of Brother Max Goodman, one of the oldest Jewish citizens of that county.

Dr. S. N. Deinard, of Minneapolis, delivered a lecture on Palestine under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of New Orleans, La., on Sunday, March 9th, 1919.

MANHATTAN-WASHINGTON LODGE, NEW YORK.

Manhattan-Washington No. 19, together with several other lodges of the Metropolitan District, is arranging a public seder to take place on the second night of Passover. Manhattan-Washington Lodge has been in the lead for a number of years arranging public sedorim, which are usually very largely attended. Manhattan-Washington Lodge No. 19 takes great pride in Brother Dr. J. L. Blumenthal, who was recently elected president of the Board of Governors. Dr. Blumenthal, who is a prominent physician in this city, is a director of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, and has been interested in philanthropic work for a number of years.

IN MEMORIAM

Kansas City Lodge I. O. B. B. Makes Splendid Gift In Memory of Departed Brothers

The Y. M. H. A. library was made richer by the addition of a complete set of "Graetz' History of the Jews", which was presented to the association by the K. C. Lodge No. 184, Independent Order B'nai B'rith. The books were presented in memory of members who had departed this life during 1918, and is a part of the policy to perpetuate the memory of all departed brothers by making contributions of useful literature.

The members passed away and in whose memory the books were given, are:

Israel E. Bernheimer,
Herman Bayles,
Max Cohen,
Jacob Gardner,
Adolph Hirsch,
Louis Levy,
Nathan Samuels,
Samuel Wertheimer.

The Y. M. H. A. recognizes the honor, and the obligation which the acceptance of the memorial imposes upon it, and is deeply appreciative of the confidence which the gift attests.

B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE AT ERIE

At a recent quarterly meeting of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3, held at the Lawrence Hotel in the city of Erie, a number of new applications for admission were received.

The Home is now sheltering 51 children, 26 boys and 25 girls, and indications point to the admission of four additional applicants which will soon give the Home 55 children.

The future welfare of the institution was discussed by those present, among them being the president of District No. 3, Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, and the former secretary of the District; Mr. Edward Hemple, now of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. Felix T. Levy, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., treasurer of the Society for the Care of Orphans and Friendless Children of Luzerne County.

Miss Hattie Lewin, field secretary, is visiting the various cities in Pennsylvania in behalf of the institution.

DAUGHTERS OF B'NAI B'RITH DISTRIBUTE PASSOVER SUPPLIES TO POOR

The Daughters of the B'nai B'rith, of New York, since organizing five years ago, have been aiding the poor in the community in a worthy manner.

Realizing that many families are in urgent need, they are making extensive arrangements for the distribution of food for the Passover holidays, and are endeavoring to raise funds to carry on the work on a much larger scale than heretofore.

Each family is supplied with matzoth, matzoth flour, potatoes, onions, eggs, etc. Heretofore the organization has supplied about one hundred and fifty families each Passover, and it is endeavoring to exceed that number this year.

RESOLUTIONS

Forrest City, Ark., April 4, 1919.

Whereas, God in His Providence has removed from our midst our brother, George Swartz, and transformed him to the Grand Lodge on high.

Resolved, that we deplore the untimely taking off of our brother, so young and so well able to bear his part of the burdens of life, and that we as a Lodge and as his brothers, bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will.

Resolved, that the resolution be spread upon the minutes of the Lodge, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased brother and a copy be furnished the B'nai B'rith News, The American Israelite and Jewish Spectator for publication.

H. J. Warshavsky,
Perry Cooperman,
L. Barnett,
Committee.

REHOBOTH LODGE, NEW YORK.

Brother Samuel Lederer of Rehoboth Lodge No. 38, of New York City, will celebrate his golden wedding anniversary on May 4. He has been a member of the Order for the past fifty years and he will combine the celebration of the two occasions. Brother Lederer was the first president of Rehoboth Lodge to be elected for one year. Prior to this the president of the Lodge was elected only for six months. Brother Lederer was the Representative of his Lodge at the Grand Lodge session and also served as Treasurer for a number of years.

McKEESPORT LODGE, McKEESPORT, PA.

Steps are being taken to restore the Ladies' Auxiliary to its former active position. With the aid of the brethren, the ladies have planned a strong campaign of activity, and on Wednesday, March 19, met at the Progress Club for the installation of the newly elected officers.

A delegation of boosters from the parent organization attended the ceremonies. Considerable enthusiasm was displayed by the ladies, who are striving to make the Auxiliary as strong and as progressive as the B. B. Lodge.

The retiring officers explained that the recent war and the war activities had slackened the interest formerly shown, but with the return of normal times of peace and prosperity, a return to former flourishing condition is expected and hoped for.

The brethren suggested that efforts be made to secure for the membership of the Auxiliary the sister, wife or daughter of each B. B. member, and a drive for that purpose will be started very shortly.

SAMUEL LODGE, VANCOUVER, B. C.

At a well attended meeting of Samuel Lodge No. 668 of Vancouver, B. C., held on Wednesday, March 19, 1919, a class of candidates was initiated by the new degree team.

The initiation marked the most impressive ceremony ever witnessed in the lodge.

The degree team wore high priest hats gowns and collars representing the different stations of the lodge. The newly initiated candidates were greatly impressed with the beautiful teachings of the Order and promised to take an active part in upholding same.

At the close of the meeting refreshments and smokes were served and after enjoying a pleasant evening everybody rose and joined in singing "God Save the King."

HOMESTEAD, PA.

Sergeant Major A. H. Friedman, a member of McKeesport Lodge who was recently honorably discharged from the service, related some of his overseas experiences at the meting of Homestead Lodge No. 586, of Homestead, Pa., on the evening of April 6, 1919. The meeting was open to the public and was largely attended.

The last monthly meeting of the Homestead I. O. B. B. was addressed by Lieut. David Glick, an A. E. F. man, who at one time was an instructor in the Homestead High School.

MINNESOTA LODGE, ST. PAUL, MINN.

An open meeting of Minnesota Lodge No. 157, I. O. B. B., attended by about three hundred people, was held on the evening of March 24. Judge Grier M. Orr delivered an address on "Boys and Girls," speaking in an intimate way on questions relating to juvenile delinquency. Community singing was followed by a movie, "The End of the Road," a picture produced in the interest of health, under the auspices of the United States government.

MEMPHIS LODGE, MEMPHIS, TENN.

At an interesting meeting of Memphis Lodge No. 35, held on Feb. 23, 1919, delegates to the coming convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7, to be held in the city of New Orleans in the month of April, were elected. Brother Samuel Schloss, the oldest member of the Lodge, was honored by receiving a unanimous election.

An interesting address was made by Julius Schloss, president of the B'nai B'rith Lodge at Pine Bluff, Ark. Several candidates were elected to membership in the Lodge.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT WHARTON, TEX.

A new lodge of the Order was instituted at Wharton, Tex., under the auspices of District No. 7. Mr. Sol Schoenmann, of Houston, Tex., president of the District Grand Lodge, officiated and the new lodge will be known as Sharith Ysrael Lodge No. 835. The official degree that exemplified the ritualistic work was composed of Brothers Goldman, Gordon, Mendelson and Hurwitz. A number of members of the Order from surrounding cities attended the institution and at its close a formal reception was held.

JEWISH HOPES AT THE PEACE TABLE

By JULIAN W. MACK.

(From the Menorah Journal)

No one can positively foretell what the Peace Conference is going to do with reference to "Jewish Rights." But we have our hopes, our aspirations and our aims, and we know that these have met with the most sympathetic response and approval at the hands of the allied powers. So we feel certain that when the representatives of the Jews of these allied countries appear before the American representatives at the Peace Conference, or before the Peace Conference itself, if that privilege is granted to them, their requests will be addressed to sympathetic ears, and they will find a readiness never before equalled in the history of the world to devise ways and means by which at last the rights that are due to the Jew shall be accorded to him. And in this cause, we American Jews are pursuing no selfish purposes. We ask nothing for ourselves. All that any Jew can ask has been accorded to us as to every other citizen in this free land of western civilization. We go to speak for the people from whom we have sprung, for the stock of which we are a part, for our brethren in Eastern and in Central Europe who heretofore have been denied all of the rights, not merely that a people may request and expect, but that every human individual is entitled to.

The Jews of America have cheerfully and splendidly responded to the appeal to relieve the material wants of their afflicted brethren in the War Zone. New York Jewry alone has just raised $5,000,000, as it did a year ago, and the rest of the country's Jewish population, with the assistance and help of many non-Jews, has raised an additional five to ten million dollars the past two years for this purpose. That money, it need hardly be said, is essential. It was necessary, in dealing with the afflicted Jews in the Eastern war region, that a Jewish War Relief Fund should be created, because in most of those lands, unlike our wonderful country, and that of our western allies, the Jew was never accorded full and equal rights; not even a proportionate share in the world's philanthropic offerings. The cry of the widow and the orphan and the homeless and the hungry always meets with a splendid answer from every Jew, and it is not surprising that American Jewry met the demand made upon it for this material aid as it always has met and always will meet similar demands.

What Rights Do We Hope to Attain?

In the same week that the noble record of the last great relief fund was being written in letters of gold, there was a still more important event that marked an epoch in the history of the Jews. That was the assembling of the first American Jewish Congress. There were gathered together four hundred men and women; three hundred of them elected democratically from every section of the country by their fellow Jews; the remaining hundred appointed as representatives by the national Jewish organizations. Two or three organizations, not entirely negligible in the number of their membership, or in their religious zeal, were absent. It is sad, it is pitiable that in these days of Jewish suffering, any Jews or Jewish organizations should so misunderstand the implications of this Congress, the problem of Palestine and the demands for Jewish rights in Europe; and it is still more pitiable that these misunderstandings should be due in part to fear—fear lest the patriotism of the American Jew may be suspected or assailed—a selfish fear that deters some American Jews from standing up and working in the light of day for the just demands of their brethren in the lands of oppression. I care not how honestly anti-Zionistic these dissenters may be, or how loyal their Americanism—so long as they participate in the utterly false representation that Zionism is antagonistic to full-fledged unalloyed Americanism, they are disloyal to their people and to their religion. And against their patriotism as American citizens, I am ready to measure and to compare before any impartial tribunal the sturdy, exclusive, unqualified Americanism of any true American Zionist. The aims and aspirations of the Zionists were never misunderstood by the non-Jews. The charge of lack of patriotism is not made by the non-Jews of any land against the Zionist; that charge comes only from some of our brethren deluded by their fears.

What then are we seeking at the Peace Congress? What "rights" does the American Jewish Congress hope to obtain by sending a delegation to Europe to work in co-operation with the world's Zionist Organization and with representatives of Jewish organizations from all of our co-belligerent lands? Two rights, to put it briefly: justice for the Jewish people as a whole through the re-establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jew; justice for the Jew in all of those lands of eastern Europe and the newer countries that are to be recognized at the Peace Congress—justice for the Jew in those lands in which justice has heretofore been denied to him.

Are these worthy objects or unworthy? Should the Jew bow his head in shame for striving to secure them? Should the Jew attempt to hide these aims from the world? Should they excite fear on the part of any man and especially any Jew? Let us examine them, and see what they involve.

The Lesson of the Roumanian Flaw.

One of these two claims directly affects the larger number of Jews—the Jews of eastern and of central Europe. Rights have been asked for them before. At the Peace Conference of 1878, when the kingdom of Roumania was established, it was understood that citizenship had finally been secured for the Jew in Roumania. It was thought that the Powers had imposed this as an express condition to the creation of the Roumanian kingdom. It was believed that all Roumanian Jews—the ancestors of many of whom had been inhabitants of that land for centuries—would attain full and equal rights with their fellow Roumanians. The clause guaranteeing this was faultily worded. The Powers that entered into that treaty, limited as they were by the independent rights of each sovereign state, not having at their command what we sincerely hope the world will have henceforth, a League of Nations, felt themselves unable to compel Roumania to live up to the full measure of the obligation assumed by her not merely to the Roumanian Jews but to the signatory nations. Hence, but the smallest fraction of Roumanian Jewry attained to citizenship, while the vast majority for the past forty years have been condemned to the position of aliens in their motherland—men and women without a country. That is a condition of such rank injustice that the whole civilized world should blush with shame that it has been unable to correct it. That is a condition that will not be permitted to continue hereafter in Roumania if the Jews are able to obtain from the Powers the hoped for recognition of their rights—nor will it be permitted to begin in any of the new or enlarged states of Europe.

This is the first essential demand of the Jew for his brethren—equal civil, political and religious rights in every land. But it is true that the resolutions of the Jewish Congress and the cry of the Jew in eastern Europe go beyond this. He asks for equal civil, religious, political and national rights in those countries. And it may properly be asked what do we mean by national rights.

Why the Jews Must Have National Rights in Certain Lands.

Are we not content here in America with absolute equality of the individual before the law? Do we ask any national rights for the American Jew, for the English Jew, for the French Jew? Then why ask it for the Czecho-Slovak, or the Roumanian, or the Polish, or the Jugo-Slavic Jew? Of course we ask no such rights in the countries of western civilization. Their entire make-up and political structure is totally unlike that of the countries of eastern Europe. This country has grown up in the traditions of English liberty, of Anglo-Saxon freedom; no man wants to change it. This country of ours is unique in the history of the world. Here are gathered together representatives of fifty or more different stocks or peoples, all working together, all coalesced into one great people, the American nation. But let us not forget that history has developed differently in other lands. Let us not attempt illiberally to impose our American political conceptions upon the people of eastern Europe. Let us rather look at their situation from their own point of view—observe how they treat the various peoples within their realm, and them let us ask for the Jews—always recognized in these countries of eastern Europe as a distinct group—only the same rights that each of the other groups, called in eastern countries nationalities, are there accorded. In other words, free and equal rights means free and equal rights according to the customs of the country in which they are demanded. In those countries that look only to the individual, we, of course, ask only free and equal civil, political and religious individual rights. But in countries that are divided into groups, each of which has a separate language, independent schools, and a distinct culture, there surely equality of right demands that the Jews, there recognized as a distinct group, should have exactly the same group rights, there described as national rights, that each of the other groups has.

An expression of opinion on this point which is of great significance was made recently by a true friend of the Jew, although he was not speaking primarily of the Jewish problem — President Thomas G. Masaryk of the new Czecho-Slovak state. No one in high position has stood up more stoutly for the human rights of the Jews in the Austro-Hungarian Empire at a time of personal danger to himself than Professor Masaryk—not only now, but for more than a quarter of a century. Dr. Masaryk is himself a Bohemian—a Czech. And he is President of the Mid-European Union that met at Independence Hall and drafted resolutions recognizing minority group or national rights in all of these newer countries of eastern and central Europe. German Bohemia, he declared, is of course a part of the Czecho-Slovak state, its people are citizens of that state; but we have no thought of making Czechs out of the Germans; we recognize their minority group right; we recognize their right to their language, their schools and their church, and in the Czecho-Slovak state that right of minority groups will always be respected and protected. He made the same declaration concerning the rights of the Jewish people in his country and in those countries of eastern Europe in which from time immemorial the Jewish people have been recognized as a separate and distinct group—countries where three or four, perhaps five distinct groups, not fifty as in this country, have always lived together, formed one state, but each with its own distinct and separate ideals, culture, literature and education. And he fully recognized and declared that for the realization and protection of these minority rights, minority political representation in the councils and administration of the state and the municipalities was essential.

If the American Jew were animated by selfishness and fear, he would keep his hands off this problem and would let these groups of people in foreign lands struggle for themselves. But if the American Jew, true to his ancestry, true to himself as a man, is ready to stand up for the oppressed of every nationality, color or creed in every part of the world, how can he remain silent when his own brethren in eastern Europe are in danger of being denied that equality which for all other groups in those lands is an unqualified right? He would have to abdicate his manhood, if he feared to stand for his own brethren, for the incontestable principle of the right of the Jewish people everywhere to equality of states, a principle with which the delegation of the American Jewish Congress found President Wilson, as it expects to find the leaders of the Allied Powers, fully sympathetic.

What We Really Want in Palestine.

And now as to the second problem—Palestine. What is it that we want there, and what is it that some fear? The problem seems so simple to those who have been dealing with it for years that it is even difficult to explain. It is difficult certainly to comprehend the doubts and fears of the antis. We do not want an independent state for the Jewish people in Palestine at this time. And why not? Because at this time the Jews form only one-sixth of the population, and an independent state under such conditions would be both impracticable and undesirable. We are entirely content that the land shall now be placed by the League of Nations under the trusteeship of Great Britain, with the obligation there to lay the foundations of and, by proper land and immigration laws and administration, to promote the development of the Jewish Commonwealth. Only when the Jews shall be in the majority will they be ready for the Jewish Commonwealth. Shall it then begin as a Home Rule Commonwealth or shall it at once become an absolutely independent sovereign small state? Shall it ever be an independent state one of the sovereign states of the world? Who knows? In the course of years, perhaps—in the course of decades, as civilization evolves out of the present chaos, it may or it may not be desirable that the world shall be divided into a great number of small states. It may or may not be desirable that the world shall be divided into a few great states, each the trustee or the protector of a number of smaller commonwealths within their empires. No man can know. No man can foresee what the future may bring. We are now concerned with the immediate problem.

The age-long dream of the Jew, the prayer of the Orthodox, has been that the Jewish people may be re-established in Palestine. What this means is not that all Jews should be gathered there—the land would not hold them—or that any Jew shall be driven out of his home. But simply that those Jews who for any reason have the pioneering spirit to refound their people—one of the glories of the world, shall be able to do so; that it shall be made possible again for this people to flower as a nation or a commonwealth, not merely for the benefit of the Jew but for the benefit of all humanity; a people which when gathered together in earlier days on this soil —not a majority of the Jews of the world but simply a nucleus—evolved and created those fundamental principles of religion, of ethics, of morals, of social justice, on which our entire civilization is based; a people scattered for two thousand years and yet having within itself the vital spark that preserved it throughout centuries of oppression the like of which the world has never seen. With such a past and with the demonstration they have made in the past thirty-five years through their sixty Palestinian colonies—oases in the deserts of Asia Minor—and that miracle, the re-creation of a dead language as the living tongue of the whole community, the Jewish people may be trusted, when gathered together again in their homeland, to bring forth the higher fruits for the benefit of all mankind.

There Is Nothing Un-American In Our Program.

In the light of these facts, should we American Jews, because of the splendid opportunities we have here in our own

JEWISH PATRIOTISM

Address of the Earl of Reading Before the Judeans.

New York, April 22, 1919.

Mr. Chairman, Colleagues, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I need not tell you that I have been suffering for some little time. But I forgot it in the eloquent speeches to which I have listened. It was only when the personal reference came to myself that I recalled again that I was, for a moment, and must be a martyr. To hear the observations which were made of me by successive speakers was really, I almost believe, intended as a test of my capacity for self-control. Was it possible that I should listen all through without blushing. Whether I did or not, I am unable to say, but I will tell you in all earnestness and sincerity that I am glad that you think so well of me. I am just enough to say that I don't deserve much of what was said. I am also just enough to say that if intention and purpose count as to value of action, then I claim the full credit.

I wish I had the privilege of a minister. I will not say that I wish I had his eloquence, because to that I do not aspire to attain, but the privilege that he had of reflecting upon the members of the society, and the obvious pleasure that he took in doing it, made me wish that I could add to the various positions that I occupy that of a spiritual minister.

But I am tonight your guest, as a member with you of our community. I rejoice that I have had the opportunity of meeting the members of this society. I take leave, in the pride of a free Englishman, to differ from some of those pleasant but, nevertheless, rather badinage observations of the minister, to say that I am convinced from what I know, from what I have seen and from what I have heard that if I am not addressing all the culture and intellect of Judaism in New York, I am at least addressing many of its chief representatives.

But I am addressing you also in the capacity of British Ambassador, and nothing that I can say can disassociate me from that position. If I were minded to speak to you simply giving utterance to my own personal sentiments, I should be doing wrong. I cannot sever myself from the position of the accredited representative of my country in the United States. That it should so happen that I am also a member of your community gives an added zest to the pleasure of my being with you this evening, and I trust the pleasure which you are enjoying is to some extent equal to that that I have experienced and am now experiencing. But I must remember, and I beg you to remember, that I cannot speak outside of my representative capacity. Fortunately, we have one ambassador present besides myself, and somewhere out of that eye in the back of my head, which everybody ought to have, I have discovered that Mr. Elkus is feeling for me and with me. I don't know how many ex-ambassadors there may be amongst you, but those that are there will also share my feelings. A diplomat is always in a difficult position when he makes a speech. It is not the habit of governments to entrust their definite statements to the diplomats in other countries, because governments like to make those utterances themselves, and if I spoke to you it might be thought that I am announcing some conclusion which has not yet been definitely arrived at. It might be thought, again, that I am concealing something which I know, and that I am speaking with the determination not to communicate anything. There is some truth in both of those statements. There is the whole truth in neither. And the delicate position of an ambassador is not diminished by the recollection that there is an assemblage of the most distinguished men in the world sitting at present in Paris, who are engaged both in making and unmaking states, and, therefore, I will ask you to bear in mind when I am addressing you, during the short time that I shall occupy your attention, that I am besides being your guest and sharing with you in all the pleasures, which I have been told and verily believe it has given to you as also has been given to me—let me remind you that I must speak with much caution, and let me also tell you, in case you may not know it, that there are many things which you may think are perfectly well known to me which I can assure you have not yet reached me.

But it is indeed fitting, if I may be permitted to say it, that you should have invited me as the representative of Great Britain to meet you this evening, because, as Dr. Wise reminded you so well, it is from Great Britain that that great historical declaration of Mr. Balfour came, in the name of the British government, which received so much support from allied nations, and which has indeed been as the kindling of a great light in Israel.

I know there has been some controversy as to the exact significance to be given to the words which Mr. Balfour used. It is quite possible that all the interpretations are not correct. It reminds me rather of a distinguished poet of ours who was asked to explain the meaning of the language that he had used in a verse. There were so many interpretations arrived at by cultured and learned societies that he was puzzled at the end himself and only hoped that he had had them all in mind when he wrote those words. But I may say to you as an individual that it is not surprising that throughout the world of Judaism there was great and enthusiastic acclamation of that celebrated statement of Mr. Balfour's. Whatever the view may be that you take of it, and heaven forfend that I should ever step into that controversial domain, this at least must stand firm in every community, in every assembly where Jews are gathered together, it stands as a recognition for all time of the right, civil, religious right, and the full liberty of the Jews throughout the world. Whether a man be a Zionist, or whether not, all will rejoice that the opportunity is given, that the declaration of policy at least is made by the British government that those Jews whose racial, religious, national or other aspirations may prompt them to go to Palestine, their homeland, will have the opportunity of settling there. I avoid so far as I can, and I am never quite sure that I am doing it, the language which might lead some one society or another to claim me as its adherent. I am trying in the best way I can to give expression to those innermost thoughts which must actuate us all, without at the same time espousing the cause, of either one or the other of the controversalists. But I do know that this statement has meant much, because, after all, although no one would expect either that all Jews would wish to go to Palestine or that Palestine could receive all Jews, nevertheless, we do know that in that country, with the policy to be pursued which has been declared, and that when effect is given to it, that there at least will be a land to which those who are unhappy under persecution, religious or otherwise, those who have suffered martyrdom for the simple reason that they happen to have been born Jews, will be able to go and if not able will be assisted by their more prosperous brethren, to hie them to the land where at least they can say they are at home. After all, it is not unnatural that you here in America, and we in Britain, should be of the same opinion. I recall not only the history of Great Britain and its treatment of the Jews to which Dr. Wise and others have already given utterance, but the action of America and Americans in past times. Why, sir (addressing Mr. Schiff), I remember even your own action—you yourself raised your voice with others at a time when persecution, unfortunately, was dogging the very footsteps of Jews in certain countries. What the result may be of the labors of America and Great Britain it may be rash to prophesy, save that I think we are entitled to say and to assume that liberty, civil liberty, religious liberty must prevail wherever these countries have an influence, wherever they can bring their authority to bear.

I will not hazard a conjecture as to what is happening at Paris at this moment, save that again I shall not hesitate to affirm that the decisions arrived at are conceived in justice and are based on liberty. The men who are there, particularly those who are best known to you and those best known to me, can only work for justice and for liberty because it is the very breath, the very spirit of the men. For, sir, this war can come to an end we verily believe. It was waged for civilization, for great and immutable principles. It has effected at least much of its purpose. It has conquered military despotism. It is, I verily believe, vindicating at this moment international law, and it will be true to itself only if also it stands for that justice and liberty which was proclaimed throughout the war, not only in our country, but almost, I had said in louder tones, and with greater vibration, throughout this country by you here who were not so close to the battle, and you were stirred to the depths by the ideal, possibly the only ideal which would have driven you to take the steps that you did, and to cast everything that you had into the balance, the ideal that you were striving to secure this justice, this liberty which you had, throughout the world to make it a better and a happier place to live in.

In my country we began the war by calling upon our citizens to enlist voluntarily. We were not prepared with a great army. We thought that our part was to provide a great navy and to that to the best of our ability we devoted ourselves—to provide supplies, to assist with finances, but we did not think that millions of men would be required of us. I pause not to consider the question—I only refer to it in order to explain how it was that suddenly we found ourselves calling upon our young men to enlist. And I refer to that only for one reason—just to tell you that if you had been there with us, you would have felt as I did the thrill of satisfaction that in a country which had behaved to Jews as England had, the young generation of Jews responded with alacrity, with enthusiasm, indeed racing to see who could be first to serve under the Union Jack. I speak of men I know and of things that I have seen. And I only say this to you, not through a desire to claim any special credit for it—we do not wish special credit—we did what was the bounden duty of every citizen of his country. Be it remembered, and all history will show it, that in those lands in which the Jews are treated with justice and equality, there is a fervid patriotism and a faith of citizenship that will bear comparison with any class in any community and in any country. It is only what should be expected from those who, after all, have been known throughout the generations as men who have done their duty, who have sought justice and who have tried to do justice. For this war, after all, appealed to us as perhaps no other war could because it raised on high for all to see the great standard of justice, fully poised, neither bending to the one side or to the other, blind to religion, blind to race, merely standing there embodying impartial justice to all men. And, therefore, it called forth our best. Here in this country I know what has happened. There was enlistment and there was also conscription. And it is again the greatest satisfaction to you, I know, as it is certainly to us who are not citizens of your country, to realize how much has been done in the same way, how excellent was the response and how well your people have acquitted themselves in the field of battle. I often think, and indeed I never can address an audience of Americans without the thought being with me at all moments, so that I have even the greatest difficulty to restrain myself from giving utterance to it too often—when I think of what America's entry into the war meant to us. There were times in the great struggle when the victory—in which we always had confidence seemed at a very remote distance—at times even the men with the keenest sight could not reach it. There were clouds, very black clouds, over the vista, and faith alone could carry men along the way. There came the day when America stepped in and said: "We are with you," and with that saying America meant, as we knew, that when she had said it she would see it through to the bitter end. Ah, then, I can assure you, the mists cleared. There was a beautiful sun shining over the vista and the distance seemed suddenly to have become comparatively short; how short none of us knew at that time and indeed I think none of us expected it to be quite as quick as it was, but it had a magnificent effect, and let me assure you that it was not only because you were lending all your material support; that you were sending munitions of your own; that you were lending moneys; that you were building ships; that you were sending your navy to help with ours; that you were shipping your soldiers as fast as you could train them; it was not only that. You may perhaps not quite realize all that it meant. It was the moral support that America gave when she elected to come into the struggle with us that encouraged and stimulated all of the Allies, wherever they might be, that brought to them not only the additional evidence of the justice of their cause, but it set the seal upon their judgment by bringing into it a nation which never had fought except for the purpose of securing justice and liberty.

And now let me say to you that I shall carry away from here this evening the recollection of my meeting with you and of your splendid welcome to me, with the addition of the words of farewell which were spoken, and strange as it may seem, rightly spoken. I am going back within a short period to my own country, not because I desire it, but because it is my duty to go back there and do that which pertains to my lot, whatever it may be. I am, as you have been reminded, Lord Chief Justice of England. I am not sure but what you needed reminding of it—sometimes I have needed reimnding of it myself, and when I think of going home and taking my seat again as Lord Chief Justice and remember that it will be expected of me that when occupying that seat I shall know some law, I confess that I am a little apalled at the prospect of what I shall have to read before I can properly discharge the duties which are mine. But I shall go back there with the knowledge that here in America I have made, as I believe, many friends. If I were to take ad literam some of the beautiful things that have been said to me tonight and on other nights, I should be in grave danger of thinking more of myself than is my just due. But, nevertheless, I know that these manifestations of friendship; aye, as you said, sir (to Mr. J. J. Frank), of affection, which all love to treasure, are really springing from you Americans to me as the representative of the nation which has sent me here in my present capacity. I love to think that it is that that you honor. I rejoice to think that you have affection and admiration for the British. It pleases me beyond words to think that our British administration has called forth tributes from you. And above all, I carry with me the profound conviction that, however others may strive to embroil, that whatever may be said by those who, for one reason or another, have their little fling at the British-Lion, sometimes, not nearly so ill-naturedly meant as it appears—however that may be so, I am carrying with me the conviction that you and we, the English speaking peoples of the world, are united together as never before because we have fought together; we have bled together; we have struggled together to maintain a great ideal, which is that which was originally yours and ours in the common ancestry of Britain, which is your heritage as it is our heritage, which has been invigorated and refreshed by you in your country, swept as it is from one ocean to another, which has gained strength in ours from its sea-girt coast and the strong breezes that blow upon it. With the knowledge that we shall work together, that we shall never forget what has happened between us; that we shall struggle always to maintain particularly that civil and religious liberty which we have learned so to prize, and we shall hope that this Peace Conference now sitting, which I verily believe will give us a peace that will make an end of wars for a very long time to come, if not forever—for that peace which will mean the triumph of democracy, for that peace which shall be the enthronement of justice on high for all nations to look up to, for that peace which shall make for the happiness and the prosperity of the peoples of the world.

INDEPENDENT ORDER B'NAI B'RITH.

Since the destruction of the nationality of the Jews there has been no community as numerous, as compact and as firmly united as the B'nai B'rith Order at this present day. All attempts made, and sometimes under very plausible forms, to enlist its interest and action in behalf of measures that would finally tend its disruption, have signally failed in every instance. Partly through the sagacity of its leaders, but chiefly through the intuitive watchfulness and jealous care of the masses, has a crisis been averted that would bring on calamitous results.

At the same time the friendly relations of its men have been firmly established, and a concert of action in all enterprises of a general character has been easily obtained.

What must be considered the most remarkable characteristic of this society is the absence of all dogmatical or sectarian features in its organization, banished by its declaration and faithfully kept outside of its limits during its whole existence. It is an elevating spectacle to see allied and united in the bonds of friendship and brotherly love men who represent all shades and variations of religious forms, yet all devoted to the dissemination of the principles of the same religion, and acting in perfect agreement in the selection of the means to that purpose.

What more glorious and ennobling practical demonstration can be conceived of that truth, that if men would but understand the essence of religion, the forms and dogmas would be no hindrance to their "dwelling in unity together."

Whenever an order like the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith goes on record as indorsing or recognizing any particular phase of Jewish life, then surely will begin the disintegration of the Order.—Editorial, The Jewish Spectator.

Sketches of Modern Jewish History

By Gottbard Deutsch

XVII.

From the February Revolution to the July Revolution, 1830-1848.

The Talmud (Yerushalmi Berakot, VII, fol. 13c, more elaborately in Tosefta, Berakot, VII, ed. Zuckermandl, p. 14), tells us the story of Ben Zoma who, standing on the roof of one of the colonnades, surrounding the Temple of Jerusalem, and seeing the dense crowds wending their way to Mount Moriah, exclaimed: "Blessed be He who knoweth all secrets of man's heart. In all these thousands of human beings no two could be found whose faces are absolutely alike, and as their faces are different, so are their minds."

History is both a simple and a complex thing. It is e.g. easy and correct to say that the reaction, inaugurated after Waterloo, began in 1830 to bargain with democracy until in 1848 it was compelled to surrender. We might add that the Jewish question was part of the democratic program, and that the bargaining in this particular case was done on the basis of a supposed backwardness of the Jews who "have to come up to our own level of culture before we can recognize them as our equals." This presentation would be both brief and just, but it is not adequate for one who wishes real information, no more than tabloids with the scientifically calculated calories will gratify the average appetite.

Like Ben Zoma we wonder at the marvellous variety of individual types from an attack of village rowdies on a poor peddler to the snobbish denunciation of the cultured Jew by a self-styled liberal lawyer in a parliament, from the screed of an obscure country editor to the literary star in drama and novel, from the bigoted mountaineer worked up into fever heat by the Passion sermon of a fanatic friar to the liberal Protestant theologian whose theology is actually the same as that of a broad-minded Jew—it is all the same cry of Jewish inferiority and of a benevolent inclination towards "this unfortunate race," if they would only listen to reason, and disappear.

Two German states can give us the best illustration of this development. They are the grandduchy of Baden and the kingdom of Bavaria. The first named state was geographically the nearest to France. It was therefore immediately affected by the unrest preceding the July Revolution. It also had a sort of a Duma-like pseudo-parliament. During the Napoleonic period the grandduke had given to his Jewish subjects a somewhat autonomous organization under a partly elective, partly appointive body, called the "Oberrat." This body, officially recognized as the representative of the Jews, presented on March 9, 1831, a few months after the French Revolution, a memoir to the grandduke, asking for political emancipation. The subject was referred to the "Chamber" which declared the Jews must first draw nearer to us by removing the barrier that divides them from us through their Asiatic habits, and if they have proven themselves worthy of equality to us during ten years, they shall be recognized by law as our equals. Meantime, they remain, as the edict of 1807 stipulated, "Staatsbuerger" and not "Gemeindebuerger," and therefore can not choose their place of residence outside of the places assigned to them, unless the local community votes their admission. The government informed the Oberrat of this kind promise, and suggested a synod for the Des-Asiatization of the future fellow citizens, but the latter in a very dignified manner declined to lend their aid to this process, Dec. 3, 1831, declaring that in their opinion there was no connection between religious views and political rights. The Oberrat suggested that instead of the synod a convention be called which should deliberate on the improvement of economic conditions, the system of education and the form of religious services. This the government refused to do, and so the whole matter was indefinitely postponed.

Meantime the government granted some improvements in an administrative way. The Jewish oath was somewhat modified by order of Oct. 25, 1832, the burial of Jewish bodies in coffins was enforced over the protest of the Hebra Kaddisha of Mannheim which like these societies in general was hidebound conservative, and insisted that the bodies be laid to rest on the bare ground, and the vestments of the Jewish clergy were regulated by an order of the ministry, 1844. The "Oberrat" in spite of its declaration that political rights should not be conditioned on religious reforms, consented to the abrogation of Kol Nidre, 1844, to meet the demands of the opponents of Jewish emancipation. This formula, based on religious scruples, declares that all vows made by the worshipper should be deprived of the force of solemn promises. It never was intended to mean obligations entered into with other parties but merely religious practices, such as fasting and other self-abnegations which one might take upon himself in times of trouble or as penance, yet the enemies of the Jews would interpret the formula as evasion of all obligations and as annulment of a solemn oath in court. Somewhat earlier, 1833, the government abolished the humiliating procedure of demanding that the list of stolen goods, reported to the police, be read in the synagog which was done in former times on the supposition that the Jews are the usual receivers of stolen goods. The petition for emancipation, however, presented at regular intervals in 1833, in 1837, in 1840, 1842, 1845 and 1846, was consistently rejected by the chamber, usually with the old motivation that the Jews should first abandon the religious practices which made them unworthy of citizenship. Finally the February Revolution, which, like the waves of a huge steamer caused the little grandduchy to rock very dangerously, brought the solution. Friedrich Hecker, afterwards a fugitive in the United States, introduced the motion in the chamber, March 2, 1848, the constitution, granting to the Jews full political and civic equality, was adopted, May 13, 1848, and published Feb. 20, 1849. The waves of the French statescraft were, however, felt in both directions. Just as the German brethren across the Rhine on French territory saw in the revolution a signal to mob the Jews, so the disorders were duplicated on the right bank of the river, in Muellheim, Buehl and Bruchsal, March 4-6. Two days later Hecker, Mathy, Bassermann and other liberal members of the diet introduced a resolution, protesting against the barbarous attacks "on our fellow citizens of the Mosaic Faith." It must be stated to the lasting honor of these men that they were consistent in their liberalism. Karl Mathy, the publisher, who first recognized Berthold Auerbach's talent by the publication of his village stories, when large firms like Brockhaus refused them, wrote to the Jewish poet, Ludwig Wihl, in 1845, that he considered the disabilities of the Jews the "groessten Schandfleck unserer oeffentlichen Zustaende." It is equally gratifying to record the dignified stand which Abraham Geiger, the greatest Jewish theologian of the age, took in a letter, addressed to the president of the Oberrat, a government official, in which he announces his candidacy for the rabbinate of Karlsruhe in 1837. He speaks of his liberal views, but declares also that he does not mean to admit that reforms in the religious services are a prerequisite of emancipation.

The conditions in Bavaria under the reign of the conceited autocrat, Ludwig I. (1825-1848), were not much different from those in Baden, except for the personal interest which this pseudo-poet and libertine took in the fashionable hobby of reforming the Jews and for the vacillating policy, typical of autocracy. The immediate effect of the July Revolution was a royal message to the diet (Landtagsabschied) Dec. 29, 1831, which promised a thorough revision of the legislation on the Jews. This revision, just as in Baden, remained a promise until the storm of 1848 swept the dust of centuries from the mouldy offices. Indeed when the diet passed a resolution, recommending the Jewish emancipation, the government opposed it. The latter by edict of Nov. 9, 1835, called a convention of rabbis, teachers and trustees of the various congregations to the central seats of the various provinces, where they should discuss the measures necessary for the "healing of the breaches and rifts in the Jewish religion." This convention was expected to create a synod which would be vested with the authority of decreeing religious reforms, such as to declare it permitted for a Jewish official, hitherto merely a hypothetical personality, to write on Sabbath, and issue a similar dispensation to Jewish children attending public schools. The rabbinate of Bavaria was in the majority strictly orthodox. Its dean, Rabbi Abraham Bing, of Wuerzburg (1752-1841), whose notes on the Shulhan Aruk might have been written in the seventeenth century, would never consent to the slightest deviation from tradition. The prime minister, Prince von Oettingen Wallerstein, was quite indignant at this lack of appreciation of his paternal and kindly sentiments. He proved in the diet that the Jews did not deserve equal rights because they would not even raise 3,000 florins ($1,200) for a consistory. Without such a consistory the Jews were not a legally recognized church, and an order, dated June 9, 1833, prohibited that rabbis wear a clerical robe, and another order, dated June 10, 1841, prohibited the use of an official seal. His excellency desired to modernize the rabbis, and an order of Aug. 31, 1835, admonished them to preach frequently. When the orthodox rabbis, Abraham Bing, of Wuerzburg; Moses Hochheimer, of Ansbaih, the grandfather of Rabbi Henry Hochheimer, of Baltimore, and Aaron Guggenheimer, of Kriegshaber, denounced the innocent reforms, introduced by the progressive rabbis, such as a boys' choir and the substitution of pews for the old-fashioned "Staender," the government warned them not to interfere with this process of Des-Asiatization, and thus placing a stumbling block in the way of emancipation, Dec. 24, 1834. Similar motives prompted an order, issued May 1, 1835, which prohibited the old practice of solemnizing weddings in the open air. The solicitude of the government for the culture of its Jewish subjects went even so far as to demand that every Hazan pass an examination, 1835.

As is generally the case the policy of the authorities was often vacillating. An order, issued Sept. 29, 1837, demanded that all rabbis possess knowledge of classic languages and philosophy. Shortly afterwards the same authorities who expected to assimilate the Jews to "unseren Gefuehlen und Sitten," as prince von Oettingen-Wallerstein expressed it by insisting on the secular education of the rabbis, became afraid that such men would encourage democratic principles, and so an order, issued Oct. 23, 1839, demanded the appointment of "nur den echten mosaischen Glaubenslehren und Ceremonialsatzungen treu anhaengende, nicht verderblicher Neologie huldigende Candidaten" as rabbis. This order was probably inspired by the charges brought against the progressive young rabbi of Fuerth, Isaac Loewi (1803-1873), who was bitterly opposed by the orthodox party under the leadership of the last principal of the historic Yeshibah, Wolf Hamburger (1770-1850). When Loewi in 1830 was elected rabbi, the government was on his side, and closed the Yeshibah of Hamburger, the police occasionally raiding Hamburger's house to ascertain whether he did not continue his lectures. Afterwards Loewi was placed under surveillance, probably because the government was under the impression that his activity tended to spread in his congregation such Bolshevist ideas, as freedom of press and religion. The orthodox party demanded his removal as an infidel who was seen to have pulled a doorbell, to have carried a cane on Sabbath and even to look out of the window with uncovered head. It was further claimed that he openly proclaimed his disbelief in bodily resurrection. The king was indignant and declared that he was determined to put a stop to the "verderlichen Unwesen der Neologie." It was due to this determination that a ministerial order of July 22, 1840, prohibited confirmation, while in contrast to this policy an order of Sept. 16, 1835, had compelled Jewish students in high schools to write on the Sabbath. This order, probably due to the change of policy, characterized before, was repealed May 31, 1838.

The political situation showed very little progress. Baron von Hirsch, the father of the famous philanthropist, whose father was in 1814 raised to the baronetcy, complained in a petition to the diet that he had not been allowed to cast his vote at the elections, and an order of the ministry in 1845, granted to the Jews this right. A petition of the Jews of Rhenish Bavaria (Rheinpfalz), to abolish the Napoleonic decree of 1808 which restricted all credit operations by Jews had only insofar success, as the government in the closing message to the diet, May 23, 1846, promised, as it had done in 1831, to revise the legislation on the Jews. It is significant that, while the liberal part of the Napoleonic legislation, which gave the Jews political rights, was ignored, the disabilities imposed by it with a limitation of ten years, and abrogated in France at the lapse of this period, were kept in force in German states which otherwise treated the Napoleonic administration as the work of usurpers. There were any number of other civic disabilities partly re-inforced, partly issued anew. An order, issued in 1845, prohibited dealing in cattle and grain, the main occupations of the Jews living in villages, who formed the large majority of the Jewish residents of Bavaria. In the same year the dealing in hops was prohibited. An order of 1841 prohibited the dealing in rags. The restriction of the right of residence was re-emphasized in an order, issued May 1, 1835, which prohibited the performance of marriage in places where the Jews did not possess the right of residence, and this order was repeated, July 26, 1844. Probably for the same reason an order of the ministry, issued Dec. 12, 1833, had declared contributions to the congregation compulsory. The religious institutions were to be protected by the authorities. The military commanders were directed to see to it that the Jewish soldiers recite their prayers daily, and a Jewish father who refused to have his son circumcised was compelled by the police of Munich to comply with the Jewish law, 1843. The improvement promised in 1831, is, as far as I know, only evident in one instance. The so called "Matrikel" (register of Jewish households)' was recognized in the edict of June 10, 1813. The king declared that it was his will that the number of Jews should rather be reduced than increased, and therefore a Jew who wished to marry had to petition for a special license which was to be granted only on conditions considered conducive to public good and subject to the principle of guarding against the increase of the Jewish population. Yet an order of April 9, 1832, exempted teachers in Jewish schools as useful citizens from this restriction.

What no argument on the part of the champions of the Jews accomplished and what probably bureaucratic wisdom would not have accomplished, had the Jews submitted to the guidance of prince von Oettingen-Wallerstein, was with one stroke achieved by the political upheaval of 1848 which in Bavaria was prepared independently by the old libertine, King Ludwig, and—a strange prank of history—by the discontent of the clerical party, usually the strongest support of reaction, with the king's policy. King Ludwig, then over sixty years old, and father of a family of nine children, fell an easy prey to the adventuress, Lola Montez, who in reality the daughter of an English army officer, posed as a Spanish dancer. His complete surrender to her, and her overbearing attitude that led her to meddling in the politics of the country, aroused the population, and especially the university students who were encouraged in their rebellious attitude by their professors. The clerical minister Abel was dismissed, professors and students disciplined, but a few months later the spirit of unrest, enforced by the revolution in Paris, became so strong that the king was compelled to abdicate his throne, March 20, 1848. Two weeks previously he had pursued his old policy of temporizing, promising a bill for the improvement of the condition of the Jews, but shortly after his abdication the diet on April 15, 1848, passed a law which gave to the Jews full political equality, and article 8 of the constitution of June 4, declared that political rights shall not be dependent on religious affiliations. The first diet elected on the ground of this principle, included two Jews, David Morgenstern (1814-1882) of Fuerth, and Fischel Arnheim of Baireuth (1812-1864), the latter elected from the district of Hof, which had practically no Jewish resident. King Ludwig who was so sure that he would crush all "verderbliche Neologie," survived the new order of things for fully twenty years. He died an exile in Nice, Feb. 29, 1868. By the strange inconsistency of legal formulations the restriction on Jewish marriages remained in force until 1861, while Jews were members of the legislative body of the state, and theoretically possessed civic and political equality. It was largely due to these conditions that the congregations of America received such strong influx from Bavaria. They did not need the patronizing kindness of a minister to harmonize their religious views with the cultural status of their environment.

THE DIASPORA

Monthly Review of Events in the Jewish World

By Gotthard Deutsch

By the time when this review reaches the readers peace which after five years of warfare appears like a Utopia may have become a fact and will give us the happiness of which the rabbis speak (Sifra, Lev. 26:6, quoted by Rashi) in words which might have been spoken today: "Do not say: we have enough to eat and to drink, for if there is no peace, nothing has any value." In this sense Scripture says: "I shall give peace in the land," and we also read (in the Prayerbook, based on Isaiah, 45:7.): "He maketh peace and createth all, because peace is equivalent to all blessings."

PEACE. In Israel's camp this blessing has not become realized. The representatives of the various Jewish organizations met in Paris with Israel Levi, acting grand rabbin of Paris, in the chair. Among the delegates present were Eugene See, Gaston Mayer, George Leven and Secretary Bigart for the Alliance Israelite, Lucien Wolf for the British Joint Committee, Anselmo Colombo for the Italian Union of Congregations, Blank, Haffkine, Baron Guenzburg and Tchernoff for various Russian organizations, and Rabbis Israel Levi and Dreyfus for the French congregations. America was represented by Dr. Cyrus Adler as representative of the American Jewish Committee and Mr. Marshall and Colonel Cutler in their double capacity as members of this committee and of the Jewish Congress. The French delegates and some of the Russians proposed to limit the demands of the Jews to full civic and political equality. Mr. Marshall declared that as representative of the Jewish Congress he was bound to abide by his mandate which declared the need of Jewish national rights. Some of the Russian delegates sided with him, while others took the French view. The majority of the American Congress delegates evidently considered it useless to meet with the French and English representatives and held their own meeting, attended by various delegates from Galicia, Ukraine, Russia and Rumania, all of whom stand for the program of separate rights for the Jews as a national group. Messrs. Cutler, Mack and Marshall were on the second of April received by the American Peace Delegation to whom they presented the wishes of the Jews whom they desire to see treated as national minorities like other minorities of the same character. Secretary Lansing made a sympathetic reply, and Mr. de Haas, who returned a few days later to New York, spoke in glowing terms of the splendid outlook for the Jewish question. On April 16 the Associated Press reported that the League of Nations would not contain a clause safeguarding religious liberty, and on April 28 the published text of the League of Nations proved the correctness of this report. Article 22 of this document places "other peoples, especially those of Central Africa," under the tutelage of a mandatory who "will guarantee freedom of conscience or religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals." There is a piece of probably involuntary humor in this paragraph which would impose on Poland and Rumania, if they should be chosen as mandatories of the peoples in Central Africa, the duty to grant to the Jews of such colonies freedom of religion, provided they found this compatible with the maintenance of public order and morals on which point they so far held ideas of their own.

ZION WAR ORPHANS IN JERUSALEM

The national rights of the Jews were openly advocated in a meeting called by the society "Pro-Israele" in Rome which was addressed by Dr. Arthur Rosenberg, president of the Jewish National Council of Vienna, whose presence in a country, officially still at war with his own, can only be explained by a desire on the part of the Italian government to show its sympathy with the movement. This is further evidenced by the presence of prominent politicians and a message of sympathy by the ex-Premier Luzzatti. In England the opposite is the case. Lionel de Rothschild, Lord Swaythling, Sir Philip Magnus, Claude G. Montefiore and others found it necessary to publish in the anti-semitic "Morning Post" a protest against the attitude of the Jewish Chronicle, which is sympathetic to Jewish nationalism, declaring on their part their undivided loyalty to Great Britain. The Morning Post discusses this statement editorially and arrives at the conclusion that the foreign Jews constitute a grave danger to England, a doubtful compliment of still more dubious logic, for Rothschild's and Montefiore's ancestors a hundred years ago were also foreign Jews.

While peace negotiations proceed with conservative circumspectness, as is not surprising, considering the grave and complex problems with which the powers have to deal, the Russian Jews will find their confidence in Rashi as "Doctor Synagogue" shaken. They need no one to warn them that they must not say peace is of no consequence, for we have plenty to eat and to drink. A Zionist Bulletin from Copenhagen, dated March 9, informs us that in Wilna hundreds of Jews are lying in the streets, having not enough vitality to stand on their feet and barely enough to hold out their hands for a copeck. A thousand stand in line waiting for a bowl of soup and for their daily ration of 100 grammes of bread (a little less than 4 ounces). The mortality has risen from 34 per mill in March, 1916, to 97 per mill in May, 1917, mostly due to actual starvation. It is self-evident that the same conditions prevail everywhere in Poland, Lithuania and Ukraine.

POLISH CHIVALRY. Gustav Freytag, a native of the German border, where the population is mixed of Poles and Germans, gave in his somewhat anti-semitically tinged novel, "Soll und Haben," a picture of a Polish rebellion. A member of a German family, besieged in their lodge by a Polish troop, discusses with the leader of the Poles the terms of surrender, and mentions especially his concern about the fate of the women. The Pole, throwing his head back, replies: "I am a Pole, sir." If chivalry means consideration for the helpless even among the enemy, it has either disappeared, or it does not include the Jews. An act of atrocity that might well be called Hunnish, was committed on April 5 in the city of Pinsk. A Zionist society held on that day, which was a Sabbath, a meeting with the object of raising funds for Passover relief. A few Jews who happened to pass by were assaulted by soldiers. In order to save themselves they ran into the hall. The soldiers followed them, and finding it impossible to handle the crowd, they sent for reinforcements. A whole regiment was sent to the place. All who had not succeeded in the meantime to make their escape were arrested. The colonel marched them out of the town and sentenced every second man to be shot. The Polish government, realizing the unpleasantness of the situation accepted the report that the meeting raided was planning a Bolshevist uprising, commended the colonel for his patriotic deed, and imposed upon the Jews of the town a fine of 100,000 marks. The names of thirty-five victims were transmitted by cable, and the total number is reported as fifty-six.

"Foul deeds will rise, though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes." The story of the Lemberg atrocities is now, except for the uncertainty as to the number of the victims, absolutely clear. Lemberg has approximately 50 per cent Poles, 30 per cent Jews and 20 per cent Ukranians, while the surrounding country is almost totally Ruthenian. On the first of November, 1918, the Ruthenians occupied the city, the Poles still holding one section. In this way the city became a regular battle ground. The Jews, among whom are a number who saw service at the front, including many officers, organized a troop for self-defense and offered to remain neutral. This was granted under restrictions which interfered considerably with the usefulness of the guard. Finally the Poles succeeded, on Nov. 22, to expel the Ruthenians, and then proceeded to settle their account with the Jews. The Jewish guard, which by terms of organization had been limited to 200 men, were disarmed and imprisoned, and then the Poles started a regular crusade against the Jews, crowning their acts of chivalry with the setting on fire of a synagog in which numerous Jews had sought refuge. Before applying the torch to several barrels of coal oil which they had brought into the synagog, they took the Torahs out of the ark and demanded of an old Jew to defile them in an unspeakable manner. When he refused, he was bayoneted. Finally the doors were barred and the building fired. Well dressed women, standing at a safe distance, enjoyed the spectacular scene and the shrieks of the agonizing victims.

It seems useless to report minor incidents of a similar character which come from all parts of Poland. The political leaders seem to follow the plan of heaping new atrocities upon the old ones, all of which are explained as suppressions of Bolshevist uprisings. The city of Warsaw held an election which resulted in the return of sixty-one Polish nationalists, twenty-three socialists and twenty-seven Jews. This narrow majority of the leading element which at that very likely was obtained through terrorism is considered unsafe, and the ruling party spread rumors through printed posters that the Jews had plotted to assassinate the Polish leaders, and announced that one out of every hundred Jews would be shot. Upon a plea of an American representative the posters were removed. But all attempts to publish the actual facts are suppressed by violence. When Isaac Gruenbaum, a member of the Constitutional Assembly, enumerated the acts of brutality committed by the Polish soldiers, he was dragged down from the dais and other Jewish deputies who came to his assistance were brutally beaten. All Jewish papers that mentioned the case of Pinsk were seized by the censor. The only case of an attempt to arouse public sentiment in foreign countries were reported from London, where a meeting of protest was held in which Israel Cohen, recently returned from Poland, related his experiences. Lord Parmoor, of the Privy Council, and Mr. J. D. Kiley, M. P., seconded the resolution which called for action on the part of the government. Jewish politicians and communal workers of high standing were absent, even the chief rabbi was prevented by sickness from adding to the difficulties of Mr. Balfour. We can fully appreciate the apprehensions with which the Jewish communities of Prussian Poland view their chances of becoming citizens of the Polish republic. Chief Rabbi Freimann, of Posen, and Herr Kollenscher, a prominent Jewish jurist, called on the Entente Commission, and Rabbi Kopfstein, of Beuthen, is reported to have been appointed member of the German delegation to the Versailles Conference. As a proof of the supposed solidarity of the Jews it deserves to be reported that a German weekly, "Polen," published in Vienna, in the interest of Polish propaganda, is edited by the Jews, Goldscheider and Baumfeld, the latter of whom is not yet baptized. As the supreme proof of Polish chivalry it must be mentioned that it has become impossible to obtain permission for the opening of a Jewish orphan asylum in Cracow, and that 800 Jewish orphans, threatened with expulsion from Austria, where they are now aliens, not entitled to public support, may find themselves on the street because Poland was liberated from foreign tyranny.

SLAVS OF VARIOUS COLORS. Johann Peter Hebel has in his charming collection of stories, called "Schatzkaestlein," one of which has become a household word. Two stage drivers meet on a narrow road, each carrying a Jewish passenger. Each demands that the other back up and allow him to pass. Unable to agree, the first one threatens: "If you will not back up, I shall whip your Jew," and the other retaliates with the threat: "If you whip my Jew, I shall whip yours." Ukrainians and Poles are settling their arguments in the same manner. Reports of pogroms come from Zitomir, known as the hotbed of anti-semitism in 1905, Berdyczew, said to have the largest percentage of Jews of all the towns in the former Pale, Fastow, known from a ritual murder trial which was a sequel to the Beilis case, Husiatyn and Czortkov, the last named city known in fiction as the Barnow of Karl Emil Franzos, Proskurow and some other places. The number of victims is said in some instances to have amounted to 5,000, which makes the report suspicious, especially as it came soon after the terrible atrocity of Pinsk and was issued from Polish bureaus. It is quite possible that the Polish propaganda found it useful to urge the "there are others" argument, although, on the other hand, it would be a wonder, were the Ukrainians immune against the habit of charging the Jews with responsibility for their failure to achieve their ambition. The Ukrainian government, so the latest reports tell us. offered indemnity for the victims of the Berdyczew riots, and appointed Phineas Krusny minister for Jewish affairs, in succession to Mr. Rewutzki, who had gone to Paris as member of the Ukrainian legation. The Ukrainian government repeatedly expressed its willingness to grant the Jews autonomy. Another branch of the Slav family, the Czechs, or as they are now called, the Czecho-Slovacks, fall in line with the policy of their brothers. Henry C. Alsberg, who studied conditions on the spot reports in the New York Nation of April 5 that some of the most influential members of the Czech government are anti-semites, that tax measures are so devised as to economically ruin the Jews and the Germans, and that the Czech soldiers who returned from Russia and whose bravery in fighting the Reds was presented in a lurid light by Rudolph Bukely, American Red Cross worker in Siberia, are a menace to the safety of the Jews in Czecho-Slovackia. From quite reliable sources we learn that, while there are some Jews among the leaders of the Bolsheviki, the percentage of Jews in the rank and file is below their actual percentage in the population. This is said without taking issue on the main question whether the Bolsheviki are as black as they are painted and is evidenced by the undeniable fact that Bolshevism is strong in the interior of Russia, where Jews are an insignificant fraction of the total population and that some of the Polish Jews like Nathan von Loewenstein, the ennobled son of a Lemberg preacher, are going hand in hand with the Polish aristocrats and clericals. The true lover of humanity cannot help feeling deep regret at the emphasis laid on national and political issues, when sickness and starvation are ravaging the population regardless of all differences. The report of the American Relief Commission tells horrible tales of sickness and famine. Our grandmothers read in their "Teitsch-Chumesh" with pious shudder the story of the daughter of Nicodemus ben Gorion, the wealthiest man of Jerusalem, who picked the oats that dropped to the ground where horses were fed (Ketubot, 67a). Such sights are actually seen in Poland today. In Brest Litowsk, a place known for the misery of its inhabitants even in normal times, tales of horror are reported that would require the pen of a Dante for adequate description. The houses were mostly destroyed, and the people are living in trenches. In a room, 30 by 45, there are forty patients sick with typhus. The synagogues are filled with sick and homeless people. A town in Lithuania with 4,000 inhabitants has 400 typhus patients and no physician within twenty-four miles. There will be indeed great need for constructive action.

INTERNATIONAL ANTI-SEMITISM. The most discouraging feature of the present situation is that, while in former wars the Jews were made the scapegoat for defeat, they are now bitterly attacked on both sides. In the Polish revolution of 1863 Rabbi Meisels of Warsaw was acclaimed as patriot. In Germany after the war of 1871 Bismarck, previously the head of the Junker party, drove in the same carriage with Ludwig Bamberger, but now even the victorious side is either openly anti-semitic or tolerant of anti-semitic tendencies. The Morning Post charges the Jewish committees who work for a humane treatment of their co-religionists in Poland with encouragement of Bolshevism, adding that peace will be a blunder, if it is bought at the price of justice to the Jews of Poland and Rumania. The same paper attacked Israel Zangwill for speaking in a meeting which demanded the recall of British troops from Russia. This was another proof of the pro-Bolshevik tendencies of all Jews. Zangwill in a very dignified reply protested against a policy which makes all Jews responsible for his ideas and answering the charge that he had compromised himself by taking part in this meeting, he said in his impressive style, he would rather be compromised in a good cause than be quoted verbatim in a bad one by the Times, the "degenerate organ, once the forum of Great Britain." A "British Jew" who had good cause for concealing his name, indorsed the view of the Morning Post on Zangwill, and may have derived satisfaction from another attack by the same paper on the Jews of Egypt for their siding with the Armenians and Copts in their demand for homerule. This instance shows the difficulty of the situation in the British colonies which reflects on the situation of the Jews in England. The latter is evident in many ways. The Education Committee of Middlesex County passed a resolution excluding the children of aliens from scholarships which without naming the Jews was directed against them. The resolution was rescinded in the next session on the motion of the Jewish member, Arthur Norris, but even so it shows the prevailing sentiment. The same motive is underlying the deportation of supposed Bolsheviki from England, which affects mostly Jews, many of whom declare that they have no connection with the movement. The atrocious charge that Jews caused the death of Lord Kitchener because his discretion prevented them from successful stock speculation was extensively reported in the April issue of this paper. This diabolical insinuation shows the progress of the movement. The charge of the responsibility of the Jews for Lord Kitchener's death was first made by L. J. Maxse in the "National Review" in March, 1917. It was then said that the Jewish members of the cabinet, "accustomed to talk freely of what they had picked up in Downing Street," were responsible for the leaking out of a military secret. Bad as the statement was, it at least did not charge the Jews with cold-blooded design on Kitchener's life, nor with a horrible crime for the sake of profiteering. It shows the danger of calumny, "viresque acquirit eundo."

The gravest danger lies in the new countries where chauvinism demands the earth and adjacent countries, and where diplomatic compromise which governed and will govern the terms of peace is bound to let passions loose on all sides. An Associated Press dispatch of April 17 reports the situation at Smyrna, "where Turks and Greeks are ready to spring at each other's throats," as highly critical and as typical for the whole country. Smyrna has a large and incredibly poor Jewish community. A substantial Jewish settlement is found on the island of Rhodes, where the Italians seem to be determined to remain. From Salonica we hear portentous news. The city has a large Jewish population, said to comprise two-thirds of the total. They are consequently dominating not only in commerce, but also in labor. Almost all the dock laborers are Jews. The Greeks wish to force them out and try all means to obtain this end. Cruelties are also reported from other cities recently occupied by the Greeks, as Kavalla and Seres. Owing to the still prevailing press censorship, details are not available. It sounds suspicious, however, when the Greek Publicity Bureau in Berne regales us with the story that the Greek troops upon entering Kavalla found the city so dirty that they had to draft the inhabitants to do the cleaning and that on this occasion the recalcitrants had to be disciplined. Against this we have the statement of M. S. Massah, former representative of Salonica in the Greek parliament, who lives as exile in Geneva because he told some unpleasant stories of the treatment of the Jews by their new masters, and who repeats his statement that the Greeks are using all possible means to force the Jews out of the country. The statement of Chief Rabbi Jacob Meir, of Salonica, who did the whitewashing work for the government once before in 1913, when the invading Greek troops committed atrocities against the Jews, is merely a proof that we have no Merciers in our clergy. A correspondent to the Hebrew weekly, "Hatoren," reports from Jaffa that the I. O. B. B. in Constantinople did very good work during the war, but did not receive support from the chief rabbi, Hayim Nahum, who was a tool in the hands of the young Turks, as his predecessor, Moses Ha-Levi, was in the hands of Abdul Hamid. I cannot forego on this occasion to tell a personal experience which I had with the latter in 1905. Moses Ha-Levi was the type of the oriental rabbi who might have lived in the 16th century. He is said to have been a learned Talmudist, but was unable to speak Hebrew, lacking the knowledge of modern terminology. The only language that he spoke was Judaeo-Spanish. In his conversation he asked me whether we had a kind king in America. When I explained to him in Hebrew what the American constitution was, he could not understand me. I, therefore, repeated my statements in French, which his secretary translated into Spanish. The poor man was mortified at the idea of Jews living without the protection of such a noble ruler as Abdul Hamid. "We have a gracious king", he said, throwing kisses into the air. "God bless him and give him many years of life." The source of Rabbi Moshe's enthusiasm was, as I heard afterwards, that when he [illegible] at court on a gala occ[illegible] asked him whether he [illegible] Rabbi Moshe answered that [illegible] had a job in the custom house which paid only eight dollars a week. He would like to see his salary raised to ten. The sultan ordered the secretary to take a notice of this fact, and the wish was promptly granted.

From Bulgaria an attempt to blow up the synagog at Sofia is reported. From Servia we hear that a proclamation was issued, promising the Jews of the former Austrian territory the maintenance of their former status. Both countries kept their pledge given at the Congress of Berlin faithfully, and it is hardly to be feared that their policy will change now, though in the Jugo-Slav territories, as we see in the case of Fiume, there is plenty of danger ahead for a minority placed between two contending factions. In Dalmatia I know of only two Jewish congregations, both dating from Venetian times, and Italian by nationality, Ragusa and Spalato. Both have dwindled down considerably. The latter advertised ten years ago for a rabbi, offering a salary of 600 crowns ($120.00). There may arise some difficulty on the national question between the Italian rulers and the Croatian population. In the sections acquired from Hungary there may again be a friction between the Magyar and the Jugo-Slav elements. The conditions in Rumania were impressively and authentically presented in a letter, published in the April issue of this paper. Two additional items, however, ought not to be overlooked. Premier Bratiano sent for Abe Cahan, the editor of the "Vorwaerts," at present in Paris, and told him Rumania was now willing to grant to her Jewish subjects full equality. He admitted that Rumania had broken her pledge in 1878, but then the case was different. The Jews were largely fugitives from Russia and Galicia, but meantime they have become assimilated. In addition Rumania, which forty years ago had to guard jealously her national character, will now have subjects of different nationality and will be more liberal. The statement of Bratiano, who, we must not forget, is the son of the man who engineered the trick by which the treaty of Berlin was evaded, receives a peculiar illustration through a case reported in "L'Univers Israelite." Bercu Safir, of Popautzi, district of Bottushani, applied for naturalization papers. He proved that he was born in Rumania, had fulfilled his military duty, he produced a certificate from the mayor, attesting that he was not under foreign protection, and enjoyed good reputation. A Rumanian passport proved, in addition, that the petitioner was not a foreign subject. The court denied the petition on the ground that the petitioner did not bring proof that he had never been convicted of any crime and was not guilty of a conspiracy against the safety of the Rumanian state. The burden of such a proof rests upon him, for the authorities have no time to make such investigations. In addition, the law of Jan. 13, 1919, is unconstitutional, because the constitution demands that naturalizations be treated individually by act of both houses of the legislature. This decision, which was confirmed by the Bucharest court of appeals, Jan. 22, together with the interview of Abe Cahan, proves two things. Rumania does not consider it even necessary, as in 1878, to wait until the peace is signed before she can defy the civilized world, but at the same time would like to avoid notoriety and thinks she can accomplish this by cajoling the radical Jewish labor element. At any rate, she must be sure of her ground, and as the rights of foreign Jews are not involved, it will be difficult to urge diplomatic action.

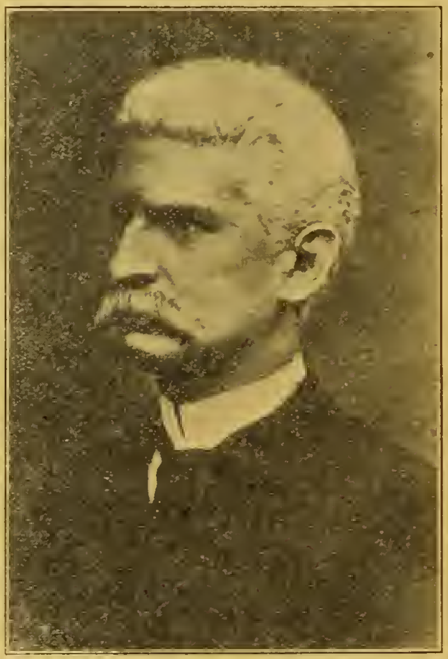
The Rumanians liked to call themselves the French of the Balkans. Maybe the French will call themselves in time the Rumanians of the west. "La Democratie Nouvelle," judging by its name, a radical paper, spoke in its issue of March 11 of the "virus juif" which permeated French public life. It subsequently apologized for the remark, and was attacked for this apology as cowardly by "La Vieille France." So the spirit of 1894, the Dreyfus case, is not dead. More significant is the fact that the Tunisian government decorated the editor of the anti-semitic paper, "Le Colon Francais" with the legion of honor, and this in view of the fact that the Jewish population there, as in Algeria, is the only tractable part of the native element.

Even Italy has some slight anti-semitic incidents. During a trial of a group of shady financiers, among whom was one Jew, the prosecuting attorney remarked with reference to the Jewish defendant, Montel, that "per abitudine e per razza" he is strongly attached to money. The president of the Jewish congregation of Turin, in which city the trial took place, wrote a letter of protest to the attorney-general, who replied that the remark was humorous and was supplemented later on by the additional remark that the Jews share this quality with all other races. The clerical organ, "Cittadino," of Genoa, came out with a strong protest against Zionism which, the paper declares, will forever remain a childish fad (oggetto di balocco) for silly Jews and idiotic and sentimental Christians. The statement is made by a Roman correspondent, who evidently reflects the sentiments of the pope, uttered at the consistory in March, and it is, therefore, significant that the author rehashes the usual arguments in favor of the ritual murder charge of which the same organ was the mouthpiece during the trial of Mendel Beilis.

It is a small matter, but shall not be ignored. Switzerland has, as it seems, alternate meatless weeks. It so happened that a meatless week coincided with the Passover holy days. The executive of the Swiss congregational union petitioned the Federal Council to transfer this meatless week or to make an exception in favor of the Jews during the first two days of the festival. Both petitions were denied.

The conditions in Bavaria seem very critical. The strong position gained by the radical element under the leadership of Kurt Eisner, to whom Erich Muehsam, Landsberg, Landau and Lewien must be added, although the last named denies ever having been a Jew, will arouse resentment in the aristocratic and clerical circles, as we can see from the assassination of Eisner by Count Arco and from the report in an Associated Press dispatch which quotes the Hungarian ex-premier, Count Karolyi, as saying he had been accused of having betrayed the republic into the hands of "robbers and Jews." This sentiment will naturally not remain confined to Bavaria, and the agrarian class of landed proprietors who in days gone by looked, as one of their members expressed it, with "growing concern upon his majesty's affiliation with a class which is neither Christian nor Germanic," have not died out in Prussia or in Mecklenburg. It remains a puzzle to an American that under these conditions the rabbis of Bavaria should have had so little political foresight as to demand the continuation of the state's subsidy for Jewish communities, the compulsory teaching of religion, etc., without seeing that in this way they are strengthening the hands of the enemies of Judaism.

The situation is full of contradictions. There are numerous signs of progressiveness in communal affairs. In Berlin a public meeting was held in which suffrage for women in congregational affairs was demanded. No one opposed it, but the chief clerk of the congregation pointed out that few women would be benefited by it, as the constitution limits the right to vote to taxpayers, and a change of the constitution would require legislative action. A small item which shows that conditions cannot be so desperate as we imagine is the report from Gailingen, a small town in Baden with a very large congregation, that a Purim festival for children with chocolate and cake was held, although the Swiss paper which reported it speaks of this treat as a long missed luxury. Oscar Cohn, member of the National Assembly, a socialist who, when he was elected to the Reischstag in 1912, said he had remained a Jew because it is not gentlemanly to sneak out of a besieged city, moved in the National Assembly in Weimar, on Feb. 28, to guarantee to the Jews in the Constitution national minority rights. While this step would indicate a despair of ever overcoming anti-semitism, there are facts to the contrary. It might pass as a sign of uniting all forces against the proposed annexation of Posen to Poland, when we read that Fritz Cantorowicz and Frau Dr. Prochownik were elected into the German "Volksrat" of the city of Posen, but there are some very significant cases of public honors bestowed on Jews. A subcommittee of the delegation to the peace conference includes Walter Sobernheim, assistant secretary of state, and as representatives of the Jews, Eugene Fuchs, the president of the Centralverein, and Richard Lichtheim, formerly representative of the German Zionists in Constantinople, thus giving to both sections of Jewry representation. Saxony, one of the most anti-semitic states of Germany, where at the elections to the Reichstag only one district returned a non-socialist to the national parliament, and he was an anti-semite, has a Jewish woman, Frau Julie Salinger, as member of the "Volkskammer" and this body elected the Jew, George Grandnauer, as premier of Saxony. The lawyer Hammerschlag was proposed by the socialist party as mayor of Magdeburg. Should he be nominated, the nomination would be tantamount to election. Poor Frederick the Great will turn in his grave when he learns these news. In his days the first Jew had settled in Magdeburg, and the king, hearing of it, gave order that the Jew "soll sich sofort aus Magdeburg paquen." The most important news comes from Neustettin, a hotbed of anti-semitism in the early days of the movement. Shortly after an incendiary speech by the anti-semitic leader, Henrici, the synagog was burned, Feb. 18, 1881. The evidence of arson was undeniable, but the jury found four Jews guilty on the testimony of witnesses who claimed the Jews had set fire to the synagog in order to prove the dangerous character of the anti-semitic movement. Upon appeal the charges were dismissed. Now, the Jewish minister of the town with three other Jews was elected to the city council, which contains four Jews among 30 members.



Baron Sonnino, Foreign Minister of Italy.

From German Austria we hear one case which is surprisingly favorable when we consider the situation of Vienna since 1895, when Karl Lueger was elected mayor of the city and re-elected in the same year over the emperor's veto. The new state passed a law which declared that only "members of the German nation" were eligible to public office. Upon the protest of the Jews the law was changed to read "citizens of German Austria" to the exclusion of members of a nationality which has established non-German states within the territory of the old empire of Austria. A vindication of the Jewish cause was the ignominous end of the clerical politician Rambousek, the right hand man of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, whose assassination gave the signal to the world war. Rambousek was found to have embezzled funds sent from foreign countries for the support of their prisoners of war, he had engaged in food adulteration for speculative purposes and had acted as spy for the enemies of the country. He escaped punishment by committing suicide. The Jewish nationalist movement is evidently considered legitimate, for the Zionist, Stricker, was elected member of the parliament over the "assimilationist," Ofner, the former representative of a Vienna district. In Hungary the Jews are said to be leaders in the Bolshevist movement, and the premier, Bela Kun, is said to be a Jew. On the other hand an Associated Press dispatch of April 30, informs us that among the hostages of the aristocratic class is also Baron Louis de Hatvani and his wife. The name is not known to the present writer, but in all likelihood Louis de Hatvani is a member of the family of leading sugar manufacturers of Arad, originally Deutsch. The two brothers, Bernhard and Joseph Deutsch, were ennobled in 1879, with the title de Hatvani. Joseph's son, Alexander, who married Bernhard's daughter, and Bernhard's three sons, Joseph, Karl and Bela, were raised to the baronetcy in 1909, and Alexander was called to the house of lords in 1903. A granddaughter of the elder Joseph was married to a Catholic, the rabbi of Arad performing the ceremony in the synagog, which created quite a sensation. One of Joseph's sons officially converted to Catholicism.

Finance Minister Klotz of France.

Of all the parts of the former Austrian empire the province of Bukowina, with its large Jewish population, presents the gravest prospects. They sent a representative, Dr. Kraemer, to Switzerland in order to obtain public sympathy for the 110,000 Jews, forming about 14 per cent of the total population. Dr. Kraemer pleads for the application of the principle of self-determination to his coreligionists who were perfectly happy under the old regime, enjoying full civic and political equality, holding important state and municipal offices, being the hotel keepers in towns and villages, and forming colonies of small landowners, all of which will be prohibited if they come under Rumanian control. It is not an auspicious sign of the times that Dr. Kraemer was not permitted to deliver his address in Paris or London.

THE WATCHMEN'S CALL The famous picture of Bendemann, the converted Jew, which shows us Jeremiah on the ruins of Jerusalem, has a strong appeal for us in these days. Jeremiah, with the expression of unspeakable sadness in his eyes, sees how the prisoners raise their hands, weighed down with heavy chains, in a threatening attitude against him, as if they would say: your message of despair lost us our freedom. Your utilitarian advice to serve the king of Babylonia that it may be well with us, to pray for the welfare of the land of our captivity, was high treason. You are an enemy of your own people. This appeal of Jeremiah, so often quoted in our apologetic literature (See Dei Rossi: Meor Enayim, Section, Imre Binah, ch. 55), is the plea of the anti-Zionists. The Zionists again may quote the same Jeremiah who calls upon his countrymen to wait for the watchmen's call: "arise and let us go up to Zion." (31, 5). The situation is not quite clear, but will possibly be by the time the reader sees this paragraph in print. France is distinctly hostile. She suffers from "Landhunger" perhaps more than any other power, and does not want to forego her traditional policy of controling the near east which was so unpleasantly felt by the Jews in the Damascus affair in 1840. Even the preface of M. Pichon, the minister of foreign affairs, contributed to Nahum Sokolow's history of Zionism, speaks merely of the right of the Jews to claim their opportunity in the same way as other native elements (indigenes), under the "collective control of the European powers." France, therefore, is not yet willing to grant to England exclusive right to exercise a protectorate in Palestine. French papers seem to show it, they give space to all unfriendly prophecies of the Syrians, the Arabs, like the chameleon, Prince Feisul, the Greek archimandrite, Vasilakis, and the French canon, Couget, who spoke in the name of Cardinal Amette of Paris, who would not commit himself. Canon Couget declares he takes more interest in the "legitimate influence of our country than in the reclamation of the Jews who have no more right to Palestine than the Romans have to France." Rather amusing is the view of Professor Silvain Levi, known to us from the interview with the committee of the peace conference on Zionism, Feb. 27, who says: French Jews are just as much Frenchmen as are the Gascons and Bretons. "Well roared, lion!" We know now what a gasconader is. More serious than the doubts of the archimandrite Vasilakis, and the eloquent silence of Cardinal Amette is the report, published in the New York Globe of Apirl 14, that on the occasion of the Arab pilgrimage to the grave of Moses, the fanatic hords were with difficulty prevented by the British army from attacking the Jews. It is certainly amusing that the pilgrimage to the grave—a practice which Oriental Jews share with the Mohammedans—of Moses should have given occasion to such an outbreak. The clericals of all Christian denominations use the subject for the expression of their hostility to the Jews. Corriere del Ticino, Schaffhauser Zeitung and Winterthurer Zeitung unite in wishing the Jews godspeed on their way to Palestine, which would rid the world of socialism and bolshevism.

Equally important as the opposition is the support which Zionism receives from some quarters, where this might be least expected. The Danish poet, Henrik Nathansen, published a Zionist pamphlet in connection with the pogroms in Poland. Nathansen is the author of a clever play, "Behind the Walls," which is a plea for intermarriage, the general acceptance of which would make Zion-

-ism as impracticable as it would be superfluous. The Vienna "Morgenzeitung" advocates a British protectorate over Palestine, pointing to England's traditional sympathy for the Jews and her success as a colonizing power. This is rather remarkable as a proof of the freedom of the press in Austria, dealing with what is technically still an enemy country. The most remarkable fact along this line is the speech made by Lord Reading at a banquet, given in his honor by the Judaeans of New York, April 22. Lord Reading said among others that all Jews should rejoice that those who suffered will find in Zion a home of their own. Among other speakers was Jacob H. Schiff, the latest and most notable convert to Zionism. A British diplomat who was entrusted with the most delicate mission of an ambassador to the United States is surely not in the habit of being carried away by sentiment, especially as his Jewish sentiment is of a rather flimsy character. We may safely say that, while a Jewish state in Palestine is by no means guaranteed, Great Britain is bent on encouraging a Jewish autonomous settlement with Jewish group rights. This is evidently not pleasing to the Zionists of the type of Asher Guenzburg (Achad Ha-Am), whose Hebrew pamphlet "On the Cross Road" sounded the key note to "Kultur-Zionism". He comes out with a statement in the press which declares the cause for which he stood hopelessly lost.

Direct reports from Palestine give us instances of a modernization which the Zionists of the sixteenth century who attempted to establish a Jewish center in Safed would never have dreamed of. Woman's suffrage and labor union movements are the leading issue. The latter has gone so far as to organize a Zizith spinners' union (Agudat Osse Ziziyoth). It is a pity that Jacob Gordin can not write a revised version of his lurid tragedy, "Gott, Mensch und Teufel", which took its theme from the misery of the Tallith weavers in Dubrowna.

More interesting is the story of a Yemenite girl who attended a suffrage meeting in Jerusalem where she heard that men and women shall from now on have equal rights and duties. Coming home, she asked her father whether it was not contrary to God's will, as expressed in the third chapter of Genesis, that men should bear children. "Se non e vero, e ben trovato". There is unfortunately a less humorous side to the picture. A letter dated from Jerusalem, Feb. 25, informs us that there are 5,000 orphans in Jerusalem, 2,000 of whom were picked up in homes where parents died of epidemic diseases or on the streets where they had been separated from parents who were deported as enemy aliens, and whose family relations are unknown. The Poale Zion Bureau in New York received a telegram from Jaffa which warns against sending people to Palestine inasmuch as unemployment is already a serious problem, intensified by the high cost of living

PERSONAL AND MISCELLANEOUS

The story of the Jerusalem fought Talmud that, while the battle of despair against Rome, Johanan ben Zakkai established a new center for Jewish spiritual life in Jabneh, has an analogy in the World Conference of Jewish Orthodox Societies in Zurich, Feb. 19-25. The convention was attended by delegates from Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Lithuania, Ukraine, Holland, Italy, Palestine, etc. The outstanding feature was the fact that the Mizrahi organization was ignored. The black orthodoxy of Germany and Hungary looks upon the Mizrahi, in spite of their orthodoxy, as traitors to the cause because they are affiliated with Zionism. Rabbi Raphael Breuer of Aschaffenburg, the son of Rabbi Solomon Breuer of Frankfurt, a.M., and grandson of Samson R. Hirsch, went so far as to declare he would be glad to see the scheme of the Zionists realized in order to rid Judaism of all outcasts (Mamzerim), as Ezra is reported in the Talmud to have taken all the Mamzerim to Palestine (Kiddushin, 69b). There were some sound projects on sanitation and truck farming in Palestine besides pleas for the maintenance of the Yeshibot in Hungary and in Lithuania, the latter represented by Rabbi Shapiro of Kovno, who told stories of the terrible atrocities committed by the Russian army in the beginning of the war, contrasted with the attitude of the Germans who permitted the re-opening of the Yeshibot. The Mizrahi organizations of Switzerland and Holland protested against the convention as unjustly assuming the title of a universal orthodox congress, and it seems that in Holland, the seat of a strong orthodoxy, Mizrahi has a large following. We are strong individualists, as we saw in the contest of various claimants to the title of chief rabbi who exhibited their photographs with Tallith and Tefillin in the New York dailies recently to impress the public with their unquestionable orthodoxy.

Cemetery in Tunis Being Cleaned for the Approaching Pilgrimage.

Modern Jewish ideals are presented in the foundation of a Jewish Commission in Petrograd, which raised (or promised to raise?) three million roubles for a Jewish theater, and will establish Jewish high schools all over Russia in addition to supporting those already in existence. J. A. Stiebel of Moscow arrived in New York with S. Schneor, the most celebrated of the younger generation of Hebrew poets next to Bialyk, to establish a Hebrew Publication Society with a capital of five million roubles. The early appearance of a Hebrew monthly, "Miklat" (Refuge), was announced. A real analogy to the optimism of Johanan ben Zakkai is the appearance of the first volume of "Germania Judaica", containing a register of references to the history of all Jewish settlements in Germany, alphabetically arranged by cities. The work is edited by Professor Marcus Brann, Graetz's successor in Breslau, and Aaron Freimann in Frankfurt, a.M. Similarly encouraging stories of the revival of interest in Hebrew come from Vienna, where Hebrew schools, courses for Hebrew speaking, a Hebrew periodical and a society of Jewish authors, scholars and artists were organized.

A reminder of the change of times is the celebration of the 80th birthday of Wilhelm Cahn, the only Jew who held a high office in the diplomatic service of Germany. He had remained in Paris during the war of 1870, as attache of the Bavarian legation and was afterwards taken into the service of the foreign office of the new German empire as "Legationsrat". We learn of the first Jewish judge in Argentina, Juan Cohen, and are informed on this occasion that Argentina had for some time a Jew as member of its parliament, Hayyim Enrique Dickman, who came to Argentina as colonist with the first Baron de Hirsch group in 1891, studied medicine, and was elected by the socialist party in 1916. He is married to a native Christian woman and keeps aloof from all Jewish interests, another proof of the difficulty of territorialism.

Heinrich Neumann, a prominent otologist, who a few years ago lectured in this country, was appointed professor extraordinarius in Vienna, and the famous oculist Julius Hirschberg of Berlin was elected president of the society for the history of medicine. Emanuel Hanaux, the celebrated French sculptor, was commissioned to replace the statue of Daniel in the cathedral of Metz by another one, because the ex-kaiser had the ambition to be presented in effigy as an interpreter instead of a dreamer of dreams. It is a pity, for the kaiser as Daniel would be a fitting illustration of this prophet's teaching "that the Most High ruleth over the kingdom of men and to whomsoever He will, He giveth it". (Dan. 4, 25). The following deaths of well known Jews have been reported: Moritz Friedlaender, known as the author of numerous works on Hellenistic literature, and formerly secretary of the Baron de Hirsch Foundation in Vienna, also active in the relief work of the pogrom victims of 1882, died in Vienna at the age of 78. Salo Adler, principal of the historic Jewish high school, Philanthropin of Frankfort, and one of the most determined anti-Zionists of Germany, died at the age of 60. Jacob Bassfreund, chief rabbi of Treves, and Meyer Appel, rabbi of Karlsruhe, both representatives of the Breslau school, died, each about 68 years of age. Moses Serussi, rabbi of Tripoli, died in very advanced age, a represenative of the now rapidly disappearing class of old-fashioned Oriental rabbinism. Solomon Carlebach, rabbi of Luebeck, died at the age of 73. He was rabbi of Luebeck since 1870, succeeding his father-in-law, Sussmann Adler, who was the first rabbi of the old Hansatown which up to 1848 had rigidly excluded the Jews. He had succeeded his father-in-law, Ephraim Joel. As Carlebach left five sons who are rabbis, the position will probably again remain in the family. Solomon Carlebach was a representative of the strictest orthodoxy. One of his latest publications dealt with the law requiring that women cover their hair, which he wished to see rigidly enforced. The city of Mantua honored the memory of one of her Jewish sons by naming a street for him and erecting a memorial tablet on the house where he was born. Adolfo Viterbi, professor of applied mathematics at the University of Pavia, was born in Mantua in 1873, entered the army as volunteer, was wounded in May, 1917, and died of the effect of his wounds, Nov. 18, 1917. The memorial tablet was unveiled on the first anniversary of his death, all dignitaries of the city taking part in the ceremony. Mantua, whose Jewish population has declined within the last century from 2,109 to 803, is, as the present rabbi, Isaiah Levi, once said, a center of anti-semitism and mixed marriages. The world of music lost the composer, Camille Erlanger, who died in Paris at the age of 5[illegible] [illegible] Zion movement one of its [illegible] leaders, Max Rosenfeld, [illegible] For the sake of closing [illegible] piece of news by way of [illegible] be stated that Nathan [illegible], of Cologne, celebrated last Purim his 102nd birthday. Judging by the exactness of German records it is to be presumed that this news is more reliable than the usual reports of a similar nature coming from some orthodox Jewish homes in our country. May it be a symbol that premature death due to human failings will come to an end

GREAT MASS MEETING IN LONDON CONDEMNS POLAND.

Lord Palmer Presides at Meeting Which Hears Israel Cohen's Detailed Report on the Polish Pogroms—British Government Asked to Interfere for Jews and National Rights Demanded.

(By International Jewish Press Bureau.)

London. A historic mass meeting was held here on the 9th of April in Queen's Hall, at which Mr. Israel Cohen gave a full report of the results of his investigations of the Polish pogroms upon Jews. Mr. Cohen made this investigation as the representative of the Zionist Organization in England. After the assembly had listened to Mr. Cohen's heart-rending report of the Polish brutalities, and after many prominent men had spoken, a resolution was adopted which condemned the Polish pogroms in the strongest terms and in which the English government was asked to assure at the Peace Conference the peaceful development of the Jews in Poland. Copies of the resolution were sent to Premier Lloyd George, to Foreign Minister Balfour and to the Peace Conference.

Lord Palmer was the chairman of the meeting. In his opening speech he declared that Poland must protect its Jews. As a new state, this should be the test of Poland's ability to keep order.

Mr. Cohen then began to tell the tale of woe which he had seen during his travels in Poland. He saw the ruins of homes and stores, and he gathered reports from 130 places where pogroms occurred. He spoke with the pogrom victims and he conversed with Polish Ministers. The majority of the pogroms consisted of robberies, although in many places there were human victims. The robberies were led by Polish civilians. The Poles regard the Jews as the enemies of Polish national development. and therefore have no conscientious scruples about robbing Jewish property. Some of the plunderings, however, were organized by military punitive expeditions.

The Jews quickly organized to defend themselves against the pogromists, but the government officials would not allow the Jewish Self-Defense Corps to function. Mr. Cohen flatly denied the assertion of the Poles that the pogroms were begun by deserters from the Austrian Army and by ex-convicts.

In regard to Lemberg, he stated that many Jews were arrested there because they had run into their homes to save their property after the pogroms had ended. Among 1,500 arrested, 60 per cent were Ukranians and 10 per cent were Jews. Many graves of the Jewish pogrom victims were opened on the excuse that weapons were hidden there. The Lemberg Jews were prohibited from making any statements to the press in regard to the pogroms. but at the same time, the Poles appointed a degenerate Luchausky, a former officer in the Austrian army, to issue an official report in regard to the pogroms.

In connection with the Warsaw pogroms, Mr. Cohen told of a squad of soldiers which occupied the office of the largest synagogue and there at night conducted orgies with prostitutes. Dr. Posnansky, the Rabbi of the synagogue, was not allowed to enter his office without a permit.

Mr. Cohen spoke with Premier Paderewski, who said that he would keep all the promises he had made in America in regard to the Jews.

In conclusion, Mr. Cohen said that it is absolutely necessary that the Polish government issue a manifesto against pogroms, that it punish the guilty ones. and indemnify the pogrom victims. It is also necessary, he said, that Poland grant Jews national rights and proportional voting rights. The Peace Conference must settle the Jewish problem in Poland; otherwise Jews will have to leave the country in masses and will become a burden upon other countries.

The other speakers included Mr. Herman Landau, Sir Adolph Tuck and the Parliament member from Whitechapel. Mr. Landau urged that the Pope be appealed to on behalf of the Polish Jews. To this the audience answered with a great cry of "No!"

OMINOUS RUMBLINGS.

The unity of the American people during the stress of the war period was certainly a thing to be proud of. The common effort put a stop to discordant elements. Not merely at the front, but also behind the lines and right here at home were differences merged that the one common purpose might be served efficiently. But now, that demobilization has set in, it would appear as if the long restrained animosities are being let loose again. The country is just now a bit hysterical about the danger of Bolshevism. It would not do to minimize the red peril. On the other hand, there is a tendency to exaggerate its proportions in this land. Certainly it ought to be made nugatory before it can possibly spread. We have faith in our institutions and in the sanity of the bulk of our nation that the poison will be thrown off before it enters our vitals. But there are sounds ominous in the air. The ancient false syllogism so often invoked against the Jew is once more resorted to. Trotzki is a Jew; he is a Bolshevist; hence all Jews are Bolshevists. The other day a Christian gentleman was invited to address a meeting of a society working under well-known church auspices. He was told to weave into his discouse a wholesale condemnation of the Jews as supporters of that dread movement. He refused. But he was heckled from the floor. He answered as any fair-minded American would: Some of the leaders of Bolshevism are Jews, but they are such as have ceased to be Jews; for, he added, the Jew who observes his religion can just as little identify himself with Bolshevism as a Catholic who is true to the tenets of his church. This fastening of Boshevism on the Jew is a calumny pure and simple. Suppose a malicious correspondent identifies Bela Kun with Bela Cohen. He slyly adds no comment. But we understand the sting. And the retort comes to our mind immediately: If Bela Cohen is a leader in Boshevist Hungary, a certain Dr. Theodore Cohn was prince bishop in Cathoic Hungary. We Jews live in the world. We identify ourselves with all the movements in the world. Some movements are good and others bad. As we contribute our quota to the good we must of necessity be represented also among the bad. The Jew who affiliates with a certain party or subscribes to a certain political creed does so as a citizen of his country, but not as a member of the Jewish body. The Jewish body, let it be understood once and for all, has no politics of its own. There is no such thing as a Jewish vote controlled by our clergy. Jews have voted for and against a certain aspirant to the highest office in the city of New York, and the result has shown that his Jewish opponents were vastly more numerous than his Jewish supporters. The proof is that the reds lump the Jews together as bourgeoisie. This lumping together is always a favorable pastime with our traducers. Unjustified as the calumny is which identifies the Jew with Bolshevism, it behooves us to take notice of it. For it is a symptom. It means that we have our enemies, and that of old standing. They are not fastidious as to the line of attack or as to the particular weapon. The Jew must be downed by hook or crook. We should expect better treatment at the hands of those who are like us a minority and like us are subject to calumny and misrepresentation. Perhaps that is the motive. You roll off the slander from your own back by fastening it on to the Jew. We, therefore, enter a resolute protest, not because there is any rhyme or reason in the accusation, but because of the ugly spirit it displays. At any rate, it is well to know who our inveterate calumniators are. Forewarned is forearmed.

THE BUSINESS OF CONGRESS.

The extra session of Congress, somewhat delayed, has at last been convened. From across the ocean the Chief Magistrate's message is delivered. There is much yet to do for him abroad, or else he would be present at the capitol in person. And of what nature is his business over there? What has he been doing? His business clearly was patriotic. He was there as the head of the American delegation. America had interests at the conference table which needed looking after. America, speaking through its far-sighted President, has a wide vision. Her own safety is part of the world's safety. There can not be tranquility in any corner when in another there is trouble. America must appreciate that she has stepped out of her isolation. She stands guardian over the destiny of mankind. Punish the enemy? That was easy. But wrongs perpetrated will not be made good by the spirit of vengeance. If Germany is not put on her feet again the world and America will be the sufferers. If an indemnity is exacted it must be more than a paper indemnity. Shall chaos be suffered to submerge order there and engulf the world in a cataclysm? Shall we all who fought here perchance go in and maintain order? Far better that we be spared this task. The peace covenant may not have turned out to the satisfaction of President Wilson himself. His presence must have been influential in infusing as much of his spirit as possibly could be done. There was much of the old spirits to be overcome, of the old rancor to be assuaged. The document is very likely a compromise. The multiplication of new states and the delimitation of new boundaries may become a source of irritation. Much remains for the League of Nations to regulate, to stabilize. Common sense will have to prevail. But what is of utmost import is that there should be a disposition to meet the other fellow half way. The half is often better than the whole. And this is precisely the spirit that should animate the present session of the Congress. The Senate will be called upon to ratify or reject the treaty. Much will be said for and against, there will be protracted debate, every opinion will be heard. But in the end Congress must know that its business at this momentous point in our national life is—patriotism. Away with all partisan divisions. Party lines should be obliterated. The American People is watching its legislators. It will not put up with obstructions that will lead nowhere. Justice must be stern. But it should be tempered with the recognition that extreme severity may become injustice. Let us, above all, be patriotic Americans. We wish the Senate to be nothing more and nothing less. That is its business; that is its duty. Let indeed the American interests receive first consideration. For it will be easily seen that the interests of America are interwoven with those of humanity. Humanity is on the brink of a precipice. America alone can save it.

THE JEWISH SOLDIER AND HIS RELIGION.

A symposium on "The Jewish Soldier and His Religion" was held on Sunday, April 6, 1919, under the auspices of London Lodge No. 663, the first B'nai B'rith Lodge of England, at the Imperial Hotel. Mr. Paul Goodman, president of the lodge, presided.

Capt. Israel Feldman, R.A.M.C., who opened the discussion, dealt with the subject on general lines, leaving it to other speakers to give the necessary Jewish application. He said that in the war the British army was a truly citizen army. It was composed of men from all levels in the social scale of the state, and its elements were made up of individuals respectively avowing many diverse types of religious beliefs. On the whole, it was fairly generally conceded that at the front the padre, as representative of organized religion, had, in the spiritual sphere, proved a failure. As an individual, he had, perhaps, justified himself, but where his personal influence had asserted itself it had been not on account of, but rather in spite of, the fact that he was primarily at the front as the representative of organized religion.

The reason why organized religion failed to exercise any direct influence was because the soldier at war came to regard himself as standing on a very high spiritual plane, and at the same time experienced great difficulty in conceiving any higher spiritual level. The daily cycle of the work of the soldier—in every sphere—was one continuous series of acts of self-sacrifice. His very work, therefore, his every act, resolved itself into a spiritual effort. Action, there, was morally its own justification, and inasmuch as in the circumstances of war, it occupied the whole of the working day, it must of necessity exclude all else. Organized religion must therefore prove a redundancy. The cry of the padre, "Look to your God," was met with the response, "We are daily, hourly, walking with our God." The padre was therefore a redundancy, more or less of an anti-climax, unnecessary, and even unwelcome. The "fear of the next world" as a doctrine was looked upon by the soldier as something unwholesome and even cowardly. The fear of death undoubtedly existed, but it was a manifestation of the active instinct of the desire to live; it was the primary biological instinct of self-preservation that was asserting itself. The soldier was "doing his bit" here in this world, and the next was remote. "Doing their bit" embraced the whole of their duty towards themselves, towards mankind and towards their God. The soldier's conscience was thus at rest. He needed no balm. All organized religions had many lessons to learn as an outcome, direct and indirect, of the experiences of the war, and he hoped his remarks might prove helpful in probing the causes of the obvious apathy on the part of the soldier at war towards organized religion, and aid in directing them on to the highway of the future.

The Rev. J. Danglow, C.F., said that he conceived the principal function of the padre to be the comrade and friend of the men. The Jewish padres worked under great difficulties. There was only one Jewish chaplain to a whole army. He was more fortunate than his colleagues as he only had a corps, but it took him six months to meet all the Jewish soldiers in that single corps, so they could infer the difficulties of dealing with a whole army. There were no transport facilities. The Jewish chaplain had to "lorry hop"; sometimes he could get a horse or a bicycle, but most often had to walk. He did not think the spiritual feelings which Captain Feldman had attributed to the soldier were generally felt. He had interrogated a Jewish soldier as to what he thought he wanted from the synagogue when he returned. He replied that the Sabbath service should be abbreviated, there should be more opportunities for the congregation to join in the service and the pulpit should deal with more topical problems.

SERBIAN MANIFESTO TO JEWS.

The Serbian manifesto to the Jews in the occupied districts of the former Austrian empire has been highly praised by our co-religionists. It was addressed to the "Jewish brethren," and contains promises that the Jews shall be permitted to live and work freely, to develop and organize themselves as a nation, and to have schools of their own, with the use of their national language.

A METHODIST TRIBUTE TO THE JEW.

A tribute to the "East Side" Americans appears in the Methodist Christian Advocate (New York), after "seeing the Jewish soldier do his duty." Good New Yorkers, this writer avers, "long ago learned to look to the Jewish element in the population for leadership in philanthropic movements of every sort." It is pointed out that the Hebrews "not only support their own special charities and hospitals with a generosity and a system which are the admiration of other groups, but their Warburgs, Strausses, Schiffs, Morgenthaus, Friedmans, Elkuses, and Marshalls (to mention but a few) are active in promoting every movement for the advancement of the community and country." Also the war revealed that "the rank and file of Gotham Jewry was not far behind these leaders in responding to the calls which the government made upon their possessions and service—buying bonds and giving their sons." The story is carried on:

"Many East-Siders volunteered at the first call and started for Yaphank, shouting, 'All I have, all I am, all is yours, Uncle Sam!' Later the Socialists, pacifists, and pro-Germans threw East-Side opinion into confusion, but local Draft Board 93, composed exclusively of Jews—'East-Side Jews,' be it said,—carried its difficult work to complete success, and provided the government with nearly eight hundred men—Cohens, Goldsteins. Levines, Rosenblums, etc.

"The 10,000 buttonhole makers and salesmen looked like anything but formidable material to hurl against the Prussian Guard, but they marched out from Camp Upton with the Seventy-seventh Division, with their chests out and heads held high, and in May they will come back from France with as proud a record as any organization that went overseas. They did their full share in the bloody struggle for the Argonne Wood; and Colonel Whittlesey's heroic 'Lost Battalion,' which held out for four days, though cut off and surrounded by the enemy, was so full of the little clothing workers that some one called it a 'Yiddish battalion.'

"These honorable things are brought out here because among the many strident and distressing epithets which have been flung about in these nervous days is that of 'East-Side Jew.' It ought not to be a term of contempt, even though Russian Bolshevism recruited its forces in that populous section and revolutionary propaganda finds fertile soil among these waifs from lands which never knew such liberties as America offers to all.

"'Hold!' said Arthur, Duke of Wellington, in the House of Lords. 'But I have seen the Irish to their duty!' America has seen the Jewish soldier do his duty. America should not forget that at a time when the Socialists and slackers were instigating the young Russian Jews of the East Side to claim exemption on the ground of alien birth, it was an all-Jewish draft board which, through its chairman, Dr. Gridansky, adopted this opinion in the case of a registrant who claimed to be classed 5 F (alien birth), though he had lived here nineteen years, and had never lifted a finger to help his native Russia when invaded:

"'Now he wants that the loyal American boy should leave here his sweetheart, his job, and his home, an inheritance to the perpetual alien, and risk life and limb so as to secure for the perpetual alien the peaceful enjoyment of that inheritance.

"'In the opinion of this board, such conditions have no precedent, and have no parallel anywhere in history and anywhere on earth. This board refuses to submit to the treatment of our country as a gipsy camp or a hotel.

"'This board refuses to recognize this registrant as an alien. There is no spot on earth where he by right belongs except America. He must stand up like a man and take his chance with the others. We classify him 1 A.'

"On last Thankskiving day, a festival peculiarly associated with those New England refugees whose priority of arrival gives them no exclusive rights in the American name, this draft board of East-Side Jews held a celebration of which no true American can read without a feeling of profound obligation to this element of the national life. From Plymouth Rock to East Broadway is by some routes a long, long trail, and few there be that find it, but the Hon. Louis Marshall's words on this occasion are proof that there is such a way and that the Jew, the East-Side Jew, may move toward the same ideals and make the same sacrifice as any other citizen, and that in the light of his service in the Great War he may read his title clear to the name American."—Literary Digest

THE THIRD PARTY

By DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

(Written for the B'nai B'rith News)

It is not so far ago when Zionism was not yet as a world movement, when a socialist Jewish party was an unknown quantity, and when Jewish intellectuals were content to slink out by the back door unobtrusively and quietly, that our internal Jewish affairs were conducted along the two party lines, in keeping with the bipartisan construction of American politics. There were the orthodox and reformers, or rather the conservatives and reformers, for orthodoxy pure and simple and unbending was negligible. Power which is founded on numerical majority rested for a while with the reformers, who waxed strong and entrenched themselves behind a school and an organization. Then with the influx of the third immigration the pendulum swayed to the conservative side; that is to say, certain leaders of German antecedents persuaded themselves that they were assuming the reins on behalf of the great mass of the newcomers, who were not quite mature to govern themselves and for the time being committed their affairs into the hands of self-appointed mandatories. There was a tacit agreement that the minority should be acceded a measure of representation, and peace seemed to be all but certain. What became meanwhile of the immigrants and their children? Look around in the reform congregations and schools and you will find in them all a sprinkling from the newcomers, and here and there the substantial majority is recruited from them. The type would seem to have made its claim good that it comported well with the character of the environment and that a specific American Judaism was building up. Congregational affiliations are not always dictated by theological considerations. Social lines are much more potent influences. Rigid orthodoxy was confined to the older generation, and was fostered by the foreign rabbi, who was not slow to apprehend the danger on the one side and to appreciate the value of organization on the other. A new school had been founded, and while it sought contact with the orthodox it announced itself as consecrated to reasonableness, which is but another word for the middle road which is neither the one nor the other. The ultra-orthodox withdrew and established their own school, but the middle party was not ready to proclaim itself as the third party, even when it was strong enough to unify its clientele. But the third party exists. No amount of camouflage will hide it from view. And the announcement of its birth long overdue comes now from an authoritative source. For that and nothing else is the burden of Professor Kaplan's recent address at a notable gathering in New York City.

We will not enter upon a discussion of all of the positions so fearlessly advanced. The sociological background may and may not be relevant. Perhaps it is just as well that a plane not quite as exalted will recommend itself. An observant student will not fail to notice that the people who constitute the membership of semi-orthodox and even orthodox congregations have by tacit consent abrogated certain restrictions. Years ago one might see in the German capital many a man with tallith and prayer book nicely wrapped boarding a car to the house of worship. Surely one cannot expect all of Jewry huddling close to the schulhof, or those who reside at a distance, forego public worship because of a scruple against using street cars. The automobile carries now the orthodox as well as the unorthodox. We shall not subscribe to that foolish contention that the breaking of an injunction, however trivial, constitutes a reformer. The hankering after forbidden food even is not confined to the temple visitor.

Now orthodoxy as represented by its leaders will and must remain unbending. Orthodoxy is a system of law, and law is not abrogated; it is at best circumvented. Perhaps that some casuist will exercise his ingenuity to legalize a breach. Meanwhile life sovereignly goes its way.

The third party will recognize life's law. It cannot accept the petrifact of orthodoxy nor the putrefact of reform. It is differentiated from orthodoxy by recognizing the lawful laxities which alone may maintain Judaism in the diaspora. It is not reform, for reform has long ceased to be a mere matter of practice; it affects principle. In its principles the third party is nearer orthodoxy. The platform of the third party will acknowledge the restoration in the home land, but at the same time safeguard the Judaism of the dispersion. It will continue to pray for the gathering of the dispersed; it may safely give up all thought of the restoration of temple and sacrificial worship. But the motive will be different. Reform broke with the hope of national resurrection. It replaced it by a diluted formula of messianic times. The third party may cling to the personal Messiah, the future teacher who will announce the new revelation. Reform cut itself away from the historical nexus. It takes all from the environment. It would be as little distinctive as possible. The third party will be orientated towards the East.

If I may use an analogy, its position will be like that of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country after its separation from the Anglican. Whether or no, there will be an established religion in Palestine, the connection with the home "church" must be spiritual only. In these days of reconstruction the third party will be called upon wisely, moderately to reconstruct the prayer book. We shall not, of course, revert to the liturgy as it existed at the beginning of the Christian era. For that we are too historical. We cannot throw overboard the accumulated yearnings of the ages. But an abbreviated prayer book it will be; and yet it will be so different from the reform ritual. But above all, its system of education will be a different one. No human soul can be saved by rehearsing a catechism. No Jewish consciousness can be built up by repeating a few formulas. The third party will not pray in "journalese." It will cultivate the ancient tongue, not merely for the sake of the ancient service, but rather to open the door to a knowledge of Jewish thought. Hebrew and Jewish literature will be intensely studied, not by the would-be rabbi, but by the whole community. The third party must not imitate the clericalism of reform. Piety must not be made into an article or specialization. The institutional synagogue or center will be the type for the future. Each such center must be an island for the cultivation of the Jewish spirit. The Christian church itself is orientated towards the East. It does not and cannot proclaim the immediate habitat to be its Jerusalem. The founder's feet did not tread the avenues of Paris or Washington. The third party will focus its eye upon the seat of the ancient deeds which is also that of the newest. But it has associations which link it to the many Jewish centers of the dispersion. It carries on the sum of all these traditions. It may not so grandiloquently address itself to the gallery, try to catch the plaudits of the outsider. It will speak to those within, to rebuild the pride and the glory that go with a unique history. The third party will apply the critical method to all the products of the Jewish pen. It may reject this or that traditional construction. But it will not forget that though Moses may not have written all of our Pentateuch, nor David all of the Psalms, nor Isaiah all that goes by his name, those various books have had a history, and that it matters much more what their total effect has been upon the Jewish mind for thousands of years than what they stood for originally. The truly historical mind does not lose itself in origins. Many will be the problems confronting the third party. But as always, the center will in the long run prevail both over the lethargy of the right and the headlong nihilism of the left.

WILL FIND SOLDIERS JOBS.

Three Jewish Organizations Form Re-Employment Bureau.

Combining their efforts and resources, the Jewish Welfare Board, the B'nai B'rith and the Young Men's Hebrew Association recently organized a re-employment bureau for returning soldiers and sailors. Former Field Secretary Brand of the B'nai B'rith was appointed employment secretary. Mr. Brand will try to find jobs for men who are able and willing to work.

A comprehensive scheme for soldier assistance has been devised by the three organizations. It provides for mental and physical readjustment as well as for the return of the men to civil occupations. Many men, it was explained, have acquired the "war habit of thinking" and are unable immediately to readapt themselves to the ordinary mental atmosphere.

To more effectually carry out this purpose the organizations have arranged for business courses, dramatic entertainments, ball games and many other forms of instruction and diversion.

The men chiefly interested in promoting these plans to assist the returned soldiers are Judge Milton Strasburger, Capt. Julius I. Peyser, Sigismond Herzog, A. A. Lustig, Gilbert Harris, I. I. Meyrowitz, Moe Offenberg and Isidore Goldstein.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

The "Survey".

In an article entitled "News From Spain" one of the Survey correspondents saw fit to mention that some of the manufacturers who are profiting at the expense of the poor people of Spain are Jews.

After bringing the matter to the attention of the editor of the Survey, a reply was received from Arthur P. Kellogg, secretary of the Survey Associates, advising that the Survey would be careful not to allow such statements to appear again in its columns.

College Professor Reprimanded by State Board of Education.

A professor of mathematics in the university of the State of Montana, acting in the capacity of assignee for some greenhouses, addressed a most scurrilous letter to a Jewish attorney in the City of New York, advising this attorney that he was collecting statistics regarding the dishonesty of Jewish people and stating that he would some day use this information against them. The administrative committee of the Anti-Defamation League, feeling that such a man should not be permitted to teach in a public institution, sent a letter of complaint to to the president of the university, who referred the matter to the State Board of Education. The following letter was received by the attorney from the secretary of the State Board of Education:

State of Montana
Department of Public Instruction
Helena, April 14, 1919.

Mr. Max Cederbaum,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I desire to express to you the sincere regrets of the State Board of Education of Montana that a member of the faculty of the State University should entertain feelings toward your race as expressed in the letter of Professor Lennes to you.

It was the action of the State Board of Education at our meeting this week that you should be informed of our very great annoyance that Professor Lennes should have assumed such a narrow attitude and should have been guilty of writing such an inconsiderate, prejudiced and uncalled-for letter. I desire also to inform you that Professor Lennes has been severely reproved by the board.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) MAY TRUMPER.
Secretary of State Board of Education.

PASS LAW AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.

The Anti-Discrimination bill recently introduced in the New Hampshire House by Representative Marshall D. Cobleigh at the request of Edward M. Chase of Manchester, acting at the suggestion of Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston, New England representative of the Anti-Defamation League of the I. O. B. B., has been passed.

The new legislation, designed to prevent discrimination against members of any race or nationality (Jews were, of course, mostly affected), at places of public accommodation, naturally met with considerable opposition from the hotel interests.

The bill, now law, imposes a fine of not less than $25 and not more than $100 or imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days upon any owner or lessor of any place of public accommodation who displays any sign or who advertises in a way intended to discriminate against the members of any religious sect, creed, class or denomination.

RECEPTION TO PRESIDENT CHARLES H. SHAPIRO.

A reception was tendered by the Metropolitan Lodges to the president of the district, Brother Charles H. Shapiro, at at the headquarters of the district, New York, Wednesday, May 7, 1919.

Among the invited guests were Bro. Hon. Irving H. Lehman, justice of the Supreme Court of New York County, Bro. Jacob Singer, Philadelphia, member of the executive committee, District No. 3, and Bros. Hon. Leonard J. Obermeier, Charles Hartman, Joshua Kantrovitz and Dr. Nathan Krass.

A large class of candidates was initiated on the occasion, the ritual being exemplified by the brilliant degree team of Horeb Lodge No. 25, New Haven, Conn.

The reception was well attended.

HERR LEVIN.

The Jewish Press in Germany denies the assertion that the Bolshevik agitator in Bavaria, Herr Levin, is a Jew. According to a statement made by Herr Levin himself, he is a member of the Greek-Orthodox Church.

JEWISH QUESTION IN ROUMANIA.

Mr. Take Jonescu, who is no[illegible] on behalf of the Roumanian go[illegible] declared to a correspondent of the "Algemeen Handelsblad" that he was strongly in favor of Zionism, but opposed to the granting of national rights to the Jews in Roumania.

When asked whether the Jews would be allowed the same privileges as the Ruthenians, Hungarians and Germans he countered by asking, "Have the Jews of Holland minority rights?" When it was pointed out that no national groups in that country, not even the Frisians had minority rights, he replied that neither would the Jews be allowed group rights in Roumania.

He continued: "The Jews ask for a Jewish State and national rights in other countries into the bargain." "Why not?" queried the interviewer. "The Hungarians, Poles and Russians are in exactly that position." "That may be" replied the Roumanian Minister, "but it would not do for the Jews in Roumania." He argued that it would not be necessary because the Roumanian Jews were now receiving complete equality of rights. There would be about 850,000 Jewish inhabitants, mostly town dwellers, in the new Roumania. They would probably constitute a fourth of the entire Roumanian urban population and in many towns would form the majority.

He added: "As regards the other national minorities, the case is quite different. These live together in a particular territory. The Jews are scattered all over the country. I am very strongly in favor of Zionism, but equally strongly against national minority rights to the Jews. At the same time I am, of course in favor of their receiving full equality of rights under the law and in reality" M. Jonescu objected to the Jews speaking Yiddish. He said, "Yiddish is too much like German. Indeed, it is German, and we don't want that."

INDEPENDENT ORDER B'NAI B'RITH.

By Dr. Mendel Silber.

The Jewish community of this city will feel a new and added stir of Jewish life and interest during the coming week through the convention of District No. 7 I. O. B. B., which will commence Sunday. It is to be hoped that every member of the community will improve the opportunity of becoming familiar with the work and worth of the most representative and most influential Jewish Order in the world—the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. It is to be hoped also that every Jew in New Orleans will affiliate himself with the Order and thereby share in its glorious aims and accomplishments.

If the present critical period in the history of our people has demonstrated anything at all, it has demonstrated the imperative need of organization. The sadly pathetic plight in which our people find themselves at the present time has intensified the feeling of kinship and the consciousness of responsibility of Jew for Jew. The many and vexing problems that confront the world's Jewry emphasize and accentuate the great good that accrues from just such an organization as the B'nai B'rith, which serves the cause of Jew and Judaism, not only locally and not only nationally, but internationally and universally. For the B'nai B'rith is not only the most representative and most influential Jewish order in the world, but it is also one whose glorious activity as champion of our people's rights, as supporter of eleemosynary and educational institutions, maintaining, as it does, schools and libraries hospitals for the sick, homes for the orphan and organized bodies for the protection of the fair name of Israel and the promotion of culture and advancement, must appeal to every thoughtful and feeling Jew the world over. A mere glance at the institutions it has founded and fostered in the various countries all over the world is sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its just and incontrovertible claims upon the unqualified and unstinting support of every Jew.

Especially here in New Orleans, where two glorious institutions of the Order—the Orphans' Home and the Touro Infirmary—attest most clearly and conspicuously to the blessed activities of B'nai B'rith, is it the duty and obligation of every Jew, regardless of opinion and mode of worship, to support heartily and to become actively affiliated with the great and glorious Order of B'nai B'rith. It is to be sincerely hoped therefore, that, as a result of the convention, New Orleans will become one of the strongest and most solid centers of B'nai B'rith in the whole country.

The annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 2 was held in the city of Louisville at the Hotel Seelbach, beginning Sunday morning, May 4, 1919.

The convention was called to order by the president, Mr. Joseph Selligman. Rabbi M. J. Merrit of Evansville, Ind., offered prayer. An address of welcome in behalf of the local lodge was made by Mr. B. S. Washer and was responded to in behalf of the Grand Lodge by Mr. Sidney G. Kusworm of Dayton.

Following this, the secretary's report on credentials was received and favorably acted upon. Roll call of delegates and past presidents was then had, also the conferring of the Grand Lodge degree. President Selligman then read his message to the convention, which was received with marked approval.

The president of the Order, Mr. Adolf Kraus of Chicago, was thereupon presented to the convention. After an ovation, all the members rising, President Kraus addressed the convention on "The Work of the Order, Both National and International". He was followed by Dr. Gotthard Deutsch, who delivered an address on the subject "Reconstruction Work of the I. O. B. B. After the War".

The convention then received a report from the secretary and treasurer and the proceedings of the General Committee. Rules were adopted for the election of delegates to the Constitution Grand Lodge. Report of the trustees of the Covenant Endowment Funds was approved and was followed by the election of the Endowment Fund trustees.

Memorial resolutions were presented to the family of late Brother Jacob Furth and the memorial address was made by Judge Samuel Rosenfeld of St. Louis. A recess was then taken for lunch.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was devoted to the reports of the Auditing Committee and reports of standing committees, such as on Propaganda, on Social Service, on the National Jewish Hospital, Denver, on the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital, Hot Springs, on the Jewish Orphan Asylum, Cleveland, on the Eduactional League, Cleveland, on Intellectual Advancement and Industrial Removal and Employment.

Monday Session.

Rabbi Louis Bernstein of St. Joseph opened the session with prayer.

Mr. Victor Abraham, member of the Executive Committee of the Order, submitted report, which was followed by a ten-minute talk on the good and welfare participated in by the following: Samuel Rosenfeld, Louis Borinstein, S. R. Zwetow, Alfred M. Cohen, Sidney G. Kusworm and A. A. Benesch. The short talks were followed by a round-table discussion.

The report of the superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland was then acted upon and was followed by the election of trustees to the Orphan Asylum.

Reports of Committees on Endowment, as well as the report of the General Committee and the secretary and treasurer, were received and acted upon.

Nomination and balloting for delegates to the Constitution Grand Lodge Convention to be held in Cleveland in May, 1920, brought the morning session to a close.

Afternoon Session.

Report of the Committee on Amendments to the Laws of the Orphan Asylum was presented by Mr. Fred Lazarus, Jr., and was adopted.

Reports of Committees on National and International Questions, on Benevolent Institutions, on General Welfare and State of the Order, on Law and on Necrology, were presented, considered and adopted.

Tuesday Session.

Dr. David Alexander of Toledo offered prayer.

Reports of Committees on Mileage and on Resolutions were received and were adopted.

The convention then took action in designating the place of the convention of the Grand Lodge in 1920, and the city of Dayton, Ohio, was selected.

Election of the officers of the District Grand Lodge, of the General Committee, and of the District Court was then had, which was followed by the installation of officers, and the announcement of standing committees, and the disposition of all unfinished business.

The result of the election was as follows: President, Sidney G. Kusworm, Dayton; First Vice-President, Alfred A. Benesch, Cleveland; Second Vice-President, Samuel Rosenfeld, St. Louis; Secretary, Victor Abraham, Cincinnati; Treasurer, William Ornstein, Cincinnati.

General Committee: Adolf Biccard, Leonard Freiberg, Lou M. Frank, E. J. Schanfarber, Henry D. Fuerst, A. B. Frey.

Representatives to the Constitution Grand Lodge: Victor Abraham, Joseph Selligman, Sidney G. Kusworm, Max Meisel, Karl M. Vetsburg, David Lefkowitz, Sol S. Kiser, Lewis J. Borinstein, M. L. Anfenger, Joseph Kornfeld, Alfred M. Cohen, David Alexander, Jacob Lorie, Barney Mahler, A. A. Benesch, Emil Mayer, Harry Simon, Joseph E. Meyers, Joseph Michaels, Joseph Stampfer, William Ornstein, E. J. Schanfarber, Phil Schier, A. Lewenthal, Harry Levison, L. U. Guggenheim, S. R. Zwetow, David E. Harlem.

Alternates to fill vacancies: Adolph Biccard, Harry Mayer, Louis Frank, Henry Sachs, Henry D. Furth, Samuel Thurman, Lewis Bernstein, Bernhard Frieberg, Samuel Rosenfeld and Harry Schloss.

Among the resolutions adopted by the Grand Lodge are the following: It was recommended to the Executive Committee of the Order to make a survey with a view of the estimate of the Order's just place among other Jewish organizations and for the purpose of giving the objects and purposes of the Order definite and practical application and harmonious co-operation with other Jewish agencies.

The General Committee of the District Grand Lodge was authorized and empowered to employ men specially qualified to conduct such matters as organization, co-ordination, propaganda and publicity as the General Committee may direct.

The Grand Lodge resolved to incorporate in its constitution an amendatory provision providing for the holding of memorial services by the Lodges once each year.

Recommendation of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland was adopted, to wit: "That District Grand Lodges Nos. 2 and 6 rescind all former action which may be in conflict with the recommendations contained in this report; that the Board of Trustees and Directors are hereby authorized and directed to proceed in accordance with laws and regulations adopted for such purpose, to erect, establish and maintain a new institution at Cherry Farm, Ohio; that if after completion of such institution at Cherry Farm, District Grand Lodge No. 6 shall in convention assembled declare that there is a need for a branch institution in the territory of District No. 6, such branch institution to be under the direct control and management of the Board of Trustees and Directors, then and in that event the Board of Trustees and Directors shall without delay proceed to finance, erect and maintain such branch institution at the place designated by District Grand Lodge No. 6".

The convention made the following general appropriations for charitable and benevolent purposes:

The work of the convention was brought to a close with the adoption of the report of the Committee on Resolutions. (Printed in another part of this issue.)

The benediction was given by Rabbi Joseph Rauch of Louisville, and thereupon the convention was declared adjourned sine die.

JEWISH DEMANDS IN BUKOWINA.

The Jewish National Council in Bukowina has submitted a memorial to the Premier demanding that Jewish secondary schools should be opened in all the towns of the province, and that a Jewish higher educational institution should be erected at Czernowitz. The council further asked that a Jew should be placed in charge of the Jewish Education Department for Bukowina, and that the National Council should have the right to co-operate with the Jewish chief of the department.

Brethren: During the past few years the question of making adequate provision for the session of the Grand Lodge, and the proper housing and entertainment of the delegates, has been one of constantly increasing difficulty, owing to the fact that the leading spirits of each community, to whom the task of providing for these sessions would naturally fall, have been properly engaged in the various patriotic activities incident to the winning of the war. Great credit is, therefore, due to the Jewish community of Louisville for stepping aside for the moment from their numerous activities to provide so handsomely for this session of the District Grand Lodge.

This being the first convention following the happy termination of the four horrible years of bloodshed and strife, it is fitting and proper that it should be the occasion for rejoicing and good will. It was, therefore, a happy coincidence that this session should be held in the native city of our President, who when extending the invitation of Louisville to the Grand Lodge impressed upon us the things which made Kentucky famous. We can now assure him that we all agree with him as to the one, and it is said that some of us could testify as to the other two.

We are deeply indebted to the Louisville Lodge No. 14, which so graciously acted as our host at this session of the District Grand Lodge, and the splendid hospitality which they displayed which made our visit so pleasant, and provided so generously for our comfort and entertainment. We trust that the presence of this convention in their midst will result in renewed zeal and in increased activities and devotion for the works and principles for which our Order stands.

Most cordially have we been welcomed by Brother Benjamin Washer, both on behalf of the city and Louisville Lodge No. 14, I. O. B. B., for which we are most grateful.

The convention was highly honored by the presence of Hon. Adolf Kraus, President of the Order. The address which he delivered, his words of encouragement, and his highly instructive remarks were an inspiration which will long remain with the delegates. It is with pleasure proper that we extend the thanks and appreciation of the Grand Lodge to him for the service which he rendered.

The convention was also honored by the presence of Dr. Gotthard Deutsch, who delivered a masterly address on the reconstruction problems facing the I. O. B. B. after the war, and the response of those present expressed more fittingly than any words of this report the appreciation and esteem with which his remarks were received.

The thanks of the convention are due to Chairman Leon Rosenbaum, of the local committee, and his efficient co-workers, and also Mrs. Louis Hirsch of the Entertainment Committee, and her gracious assistants, for the delightful and numerous entertainments which they provided for the delegates and their ladies. Their efforts have left with us a most delightful recollection of the social side of this convention.

It is with pleasure that we refer to the hospitality of the Y. M. H. A. in extending to us the use of their quarters for the various entertainments provided.

With pleasure we refer to the efficient and painstaking manner in which the Seelbach and Watterson hotels cared for us, and particularly to Mr. Will Seelbach for his assistance and courtesy for providing quarters for the convention, caring for our needs while the convention was in session.

We desire to express our appreciation to the local newspapers for the publicity which they gave the work and sessions of the convention of the Grand Lodge, and also the Jewish press throughout the district for their support and encouragement given to the cause which we represent.

Thanks are due and it is with genuine pleasure herewith extended to the retiring officers of the district for the success and effectiveness of the administration just brought to a close. Notwithstanding the discouragement and difficulties of a year begun while the country was plunged in a war, which required a concentration of all our efforts to bring to a successful close, it is to their credit that the district not only held its own, but increased its membership. It is with pleasure that we call the attention of the convention and spreading upon our records the satisfaction which this district feels in having its faithful and efficient Secretary, Brother Victor Abrahams, elected to the Executive Committee of the Order to fill the vacancy left by the death of the late lamented Brother Jacob Furth.

As an appreciation of the services of the President during the past year we recommend that the incoming General Committee be authorized to present to the retiring President, Brother Joseph Seligman, an appropriate testimonial in grateful appreciation of his zealous efforts in behalf of the Order and the exalted ideals it represents.

Resolved, That a copy of this report be sent to the B'nai B'rith News for publication, and that copies thereof be transmitted to Louisville Lodge No. 14, to the Louisville Courier-Journal, the Louisville Evening Times, the Louisville Evening Post, the Louisville Herald, and to the Israelite.

Fraternally submitted,
O. W. Silverman, Chairman,
Herbert C. Straus,
Leon Grassman.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT MANCHESTER, N. H.

New Hampshire Lodge No. 839 was instituted at Manchester, N. H., on Sunday, May 4, 1919. This is the first Lodge of the Order in that State, and its membership includes prominent men from all sections of the State.

Nearly 100 charter members were initiated by the degree team of Worcester Lodge, Worcester, Mass., and by the officers of District Grand Lodge.

Edward M. Chase, prominent in the Jewish life of the State and active in forming the Lodge, was elected first president of the Lodge. Other officers elected were J. S. Mendelson of Nashua, vice-president; I. A. Brodie of Manchester, treasurer; Ezra Feldman of Manchester, secretary; Louis H. Resnik of Manchester, monitor, and Joseph Broad of Manchester, assistant monitor; A. J. Kauffman of Concord, inside guard; Max Feldman of Manchester, outside guard; Sam Steinfeld of Claremont, A. Shapiro of Portsmouth, Meyer Alcon of Portsmouth, Louis Felsher, Saul Waisman and Dr. Charles Chirug of Manchester, trustees.

Banquet Served.

In the evening at the New Manchester House a banquet was served to members and friends, following which remarks on the aims and aspirations of the Order were made by prominent men of the city and State and by officers of the District Grand Lodge. Tributes to the splendid records of the Jews both in the recent war and in the civil and industrial life of the country were paid by the speakers, among whom were A. O. Brown, mentioned among the Republican candidates for governorship; Marshall D. Cobleigh of Nashua, Rosecrans W. Pilsbury and Maj. Frank Knox. The welcome of the city was extended by Mayor Verette.

Work of the Order Outlined.

Some of the work accomplished by the Order, in elevating the mental and moral character of citizens of Jewish faith, in remedying injustices to the Jewish people both in this country and other parts of the world, was outlined by Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, Conn., president of the District Grand Lodge; Charles Hartman of New York, member of the Executive Committee, and by Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston. Attorney Myer Saidel introduced the chairman and toastmaster of the evening, President Edward M. Chase. A brief program of music and readings by local talent variated the entertainment.

Officers who officiated in the institution of the Lodge were: President Charles H. Shapiro, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Judge A. K. Cohen of Boston; Charles Hartman, member of the Executive Committee from District No. 1; Joseph H. Ullman of New Haven, Conn.; Archibald H. Hillman of Worcester, Mass., and Secretary Bernard M. Kaplan.

The banquet was arranged under the direction of Max Feldman, Samuel Tatleman and Hyman Reingold.

A special service in honor of the instituting of the new Lodge was held in the Anshey Sfard Synagogue on Friday evening. Rev. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan of New York City was the speaker on the occasion.

JEWISH REFUGEES EXPELLED FROM PRAGUE.

The Government of Czecho-Slovakia issued an order compelling the Jewish refugees from Poland who are now in Prague to leave the city within eight days. The reason for the issuing of this order was a rumor that these refugees were manufacturing false bank-notes. Although the rumor later on, proved to be untrue, the order expelling these refugees was not rescinded.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE No. 7

. District Grand Lodge No. 7, I. O. B. B., assembled in annual convention on Sunday, April 27, 1919, at Hotel Grunewald, New Orleans, La. The convention left behind a quickened interest in things Jewish, not only on the part of the B'nai B'rith members, but also on the part of the entire Jewish community of New Orleans.

The convention was called to order by President Sol Schoenemann, who presided throughout with remarkable tact and ability. Rabbi M. Faber, of Tyler, Texas, offered the invocation, and Rabbi E. W. Leipziger, on behalf of the committee of the joint New Orleans lodges, introduced Mr. Salomon Marx, for sixty-three years a member and an indefatigable worker in the Order, who extended to the delegates a hearty welcome on behalf of the local lodges.

Mr. Marx was followed by Mayor Martin Behrman, who welcomed the delegates and vistiors in the name of the city.

Addresses of welcome were fittingly responded to on behalf of the Grand Lodge by Mr. A. B. Freyer, of Shreveport, La.

When Mr. Freyer had finished speaking, Mr. M. C. Wagner, of Houston, Texas, asked for the floor and reviewing the splendid services which President Schoenemann had rendered the Order, presented him, in the name of the Houston delegations and the community, with a chest of silverware. Mr. Schoenemann accepted the gift with fitting words of thanks and appreciation.

The business part of the first session was then taken up. The roll call was followed by the conferring of the Past President's degree.

The president thereupon read the message which was followed by the rpeort of the secretary. The convention then adjourned until Monday morning.

On Sunday one hundred and fifty delegates and visitors were dinner guests at the homes of local members. After dinner the delegates visited the Jewish institutions of the city. In the evening, the visitors joined the members of the local lodges and their friends at the Athenaeum for the cultural advancement exercises. The chief features of these, which were presided over by Mr. Joseph Hirsh, of Vicksburg, Miss., were an oration by Mr. Ben Hirsh, of Memphis, Tenn., and an essay by Major M. M. Ullman, of Birmingham, Ala.

Monday Session.

The session on Monday morning, which adjourned at an early hour in order to provide a recess during the welcome to the homecoming soldiers and sailors, was marked by liberal subscriptions to the B'nai B'rith institutions of the District, the Jewish Orphans' Home, the Touro Infirmary and the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital.

The Jewish Orphans' Home received $500.00 and a $50.00 Liberty Bond from Fort Worth. Oklahoma City donated $150.00 to each of the three institutions. San Antonio contributed $1,050. Mobile gave $500.00, with assurance of more. Nashville contributed $1,200 and promised 150 members for the next year. Pine Bluff gave $200 to the Home and $100 to the Infirmary.

The Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital fared equally well at the hands of the delegates. Its board elected Mr. Ernest R. Bernstein, of Shreveport, president of the institution. He celebrated his election by contributing $1,000, and he announced that his partner, although not of the Jewish faith, requested the privilege of contributing $500 to the hospital.

Chattanooga donated $250 to the hospital and the same amount to the home. Galveston contributed $200. All the delegates present enrolled themselves as members of the hospital.

In the afternoon the convention listened with much interest to a review of the work of the Touro Infirmary and the Jewish Orphans' Home. The Hospital served 25,000 people in the clinics and treated 2,500 in the wards last year.

These institutions received the hearty approval of the convention, and it was urged that one day be set aside each year in every community on which to campaign for members for these institutions.

The evening session on Monday, which lasted far into the night, was opened with prayer by Rabbi S. Rosinger, of Beaumont, Texas. A memorial service for members of the Order and noteworthy co-religionists who have passed away during the year, was conducted by Rabbi I. Lewinthal, of Nashville, assisted by Rabbis R. Goldstein, of Pine Bluff, Ark., and H. A. Merfield, of Greenville, Miss.

Tuesday Session.

On Tuesday morning the result of the election of delegates to the Constitution Grand Lodge convention to be held in May, 1920, in the city of Cleveland, was announced.

An invitation was then presented by Rabbi M. Newfield, of Birmingham who asked the District Grand Lodge to hold its next convention in that city. The invitation was accepted.

Much interest was aroused by a telegram read by Secretary Goldman from Adolf Kraus, Chicago, president of the Order, which contained information from Paris that a great diversity of opinion had developed among the Jewish representatives of Eastern Europe, France, England and America, and that the B'nai B'rith delegates and Messrs. Mack and Marshall, of the United States, were appointed a committee to harmonize these differences and practically had succeeded.

Among other things considered at that session, which opened with prayer by Rabbi R. Farber, of Texarkana, Tex., the report of the Jewish Orphans' Home Committee was presented by its chairman, Edgar E. Goldberg, Houston, who proudly announced that he had been an inmate of the New Orleans institution. The report was based upon personal inspections unannounced and unexpected, and it stressed the fact that the inmates are perfectly happy as well as ideally provided for. The committee recommended that all the delegates become members of the Home Association, that the district increase its contribution and that each lodge and community become active in the same cause. The adoption of the report inspired a tribute from E. R. Bernstein to the young men of the Order. The Shreveport Lodge has 260 members and out of these fifty-eight had followed the flag to the front, possible because of the influx of young men into the service. Rabbi A. Brill, Meridian, for the social service committee, in a report urged a uniform plan on the part of the national bureau, local co-operation in communal helpfulness movements, with social service committees in the communities. It proposed a change in the composition of the district committee so that there will be a chairman in each state, these state chairmen to hold conferences, the Grand Lodge to contribute $750 to cover expenses. The successful resistance of the six days' school plan was commended and the incident regarded as pointing to the importance of a civil rights committee in each community to stop infringement upon the rights of minorities at their source. The Anti-Defamation League was praised for having virtually eliminated the objectionable stage Jew.

At the afternoon session business spontaneously gave way to patriotism. Major M. M. Ullman, of Birmingham, gave a stirring and inspiring description of the American Army as it was organized for war and the magnificent manner in which the job had been accomplished. It now behooves American citizens, he concluded, to stand behind the government and pay the debts of victory. He relied upon the B'nai B'rith to show the American Jew in the forefront in performing the obligation. James L. Sibley, district vocational offices, described the government plan of rehabilitating disabled fighters. There would be 10,000 such men in this district by July, men who did not want charity but work, and he relied upon the B'nai B'rith to help them get the training and the jobs. Charles) Rosen spoke eloquently upon the meaning of the war to the Jews who had proven their loyalty to every country in which they lived, and who would never again lack in the respect of their Christian neighbors. He detailed the spirit in which Christian New Orleans had risen to the opportunity of relieving the sufferings of unjustly persecuted Jews in other lands.

When the business part of the convention was resumed, Myer C. Wagner, for the Leo N. Levi Hospital Committee, reported against the plan of admitting pay patients for the present, as it would require enlargement of the plant.

Leon A. Baer, on law and lodges, reported in favor of recasting the law so as to put into effect the reduction of committees outlined by Secretary M. M. Goldman.

S. J. Westheimer, on Old Folks' Home, recommended a committee of seven to make a survey of the need for such an institution, and of finding the means of financing the project without curtailing the gifts to existing charitable institutions. The committee is also to confer with Memphis and other communities desiring to house such an institution, and report definite decision plans to the next convention.

Nathan Goldstein, on Touro Infirmary, made a report on that institution and its work, recommending that the relations with the institution be made even stronger.

On motion of Dr. George Fox, Fort Worth, a message was sent to Adolf Kraus, head of the order, rededicating the District Grand Lodge to the fundamental principles of the Order, love for the devotion to "our country."

S. C. Eldridge, for committee on state of the district, reported conditions and institutions excellent and the endowment funds well safeguarded. The general committee system was endorsed for a trial, to be composed of the officers and state chairmen who will be responsible district deputies. The committee will meet annually in New Orleans, the Grand Lodge paying the expenses.

There was no session on Tuesday night, which had been set apart for a boat ride on the Mississippi.

Wednesday Session.

The concluding session on Wednesday was given over to unfinished business.

The session opened with prayer by Rabbi E. W. Leipziger, and the election of officers for the ensuing year engaged the attention and interest of the delegates during the greater part of the morning. Several of the officers for which there was no contest were filled by acclamation. By this process A. Leo Oberdorfer, of Birmingham, was made president, Victor H. Hexter, of Dallas, first vice-president, Myron M. Goldman, of New Orleans, secretary, Archibald A. Marx, of New Orleans, treasurer. A lively contest developed, however, for the office of second vice-president. A ballot was taken and A. B. Freyer, of Shreveport, came forth victorious. Thereupon his election was made unanimous. This over, the personnel of permanent committees was announced.

Rabbi H. A. Merfield, Greenville, Miss., for the committee on resolutions then returned thanks to officials, press and others, and to the men and women of New Orleans who had been true to the traditions of hospitality characteristic of the Jew since the days of Abraham.

Through the annual budget adopted upon the recommendation of the finance committee, Charles F. Moritz, chairman, the Convention voted to contribute $20,000 to the Jewish Orphans' Home, $7,000 to the Touro Infirmary, and $6,000 to the Levi Memorial Hospital. About $9,000 was devoted to other causes, headed by social service, which received $500.

At one o'clock the Convention closed with prayer by Dr. George Fox of Fort Worth, Texas, and the delegates and visitors departed with a deepened spirit and a more intensified appreciation of Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony.

B'NAI B'RITH TO AID JEWISH SONS OF AMERICA.

Announcement has been made by Mr. Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, Conn., President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, that the activities of the B'nai B'rith, particularly as to District No. 1 will be materially increased.

In District No. 1, comprising Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts. Rhode Island, Connecticut and the State of New York, in which it is said nearly 2,000,000 Jews reside, extensive Americanization plans are to be taken up, and in co-operation with local War Bureaus and the Jewish Welfare Board, the B'nai B'rith is to establish rehabilitation, re-employment and re-education committees.

In rural communities an endeavor will be made to bring Jewish farmers in closer contact with their city brethren; to improve and make more comfortable the limited social advantages as well as to make their home life more attractive, and to have the farm women in closer touch with city life, as this, it is believed, will make farm life sought for by the inhabitants of the metropolitan centers.

B'nai B'rith Lodges will be urged to establish forums where subjects of interest to Americans of today will be discussed by Jews and non-Jews alike and the advantages of citizenship will thus be brought home to the many newcomers and recent settlers in this part of the country.

Co-operation has been promised by distinguished men and women in all walks of life, in bringing nearer to the hearts of these new settlers not only opportunities for educational and vocational betterments, but their obligations as loyal citizens of their adopted country, the United States.

In Bridgeport, Conn., the home city of President Shapiro, the two B'nai B'rith Lodges—Abraham 89, and Horeb 711—are taking an ardent interest in these new activities.

BANQUET IN HONOR O[illegible] TURNED JEWISH SOL[illegible]

Nearly 500 Jewish re[illegible] Rapids attended a banquet he[illegible] of returned Jewish Soldiers [illegible] in the Ball Room of the Hotel Pantlind on Tuesday evening, April 22, 1919

Features of the banquet were the humorous and serious talks by the young men themselves.

Corp Jack Marks of the 63rd aero squardon carried his left arm in a sling. He is visiting friends here and lives in Louisiana.

"My pilot and I were sent up to get a fast German scout plane at Chateau Thierry," he explained to the banqueters, in response to a toast. "We'd ascended only 500 feet when a German pursuit plane dropped from behind a cloud directly on our trail. His position didn't leave us any chance for fight, and he pumped bursts of machine gun bullets into us, first exploding our tank and setting fire to our machine, and then following with further bursts. One of these struck and smashed our propeller. The next struck me three times in the right hand and wrist. I could hear them ripping through the wing of our plane, and that was the last thing I did hear until I woke up in a hospital three weeks later.

Badly Shot Up.

"There they told me I had a fractured skull, that my right hand was damaged by shrapnel after our machine fell in No Man's Land, but outside of that, that I was all right," he concluded.

Lieut. Herman Treusch, assistant judge advocate at Kelly field, San Antonio, Tex., speaking on "The Law and the Army," emphasized the difference between civilian and military legal machinery.

"The army epitomizes force," he began. "Law is the foundation of all force. Law has governed the existence of armies as well as justified their origin. In the army, when an offense is committed, the human element is the big factor, but the connections which a man may have, do not work to let him off easy."

Amusing Recital Given.

Seaman David E. Weiss, who enlisted as a first class gunner in the aviation service, gave an amusing recital of thrilling experiences in that capacity, principally shoveling coal, scrubbing floors and piling logs for six months in the Great Lakes training station.

Corp. Harry H. Krell, H. O. Igleman, Julius Amberg, Gunner's Mate G. Howard Gutmann, Arthur Siegle, Samuel Kramer, Corp. Edward Friedman, Eli Levy and Sergt. Louis Cohn gave talks on service in all branches of the army and navy, from Battle Creek to Chateau-Thierry, the Argonne forest and St. Mihiel.

G. A. Wolf was chairman, Fred S. Piowaty toastmaster and Samuel G. Braudy gave the "Welcome Home" address. The banquet was held under auspices of the Grand Rapids Jewish community. There are four gold stars in its service flag for Carl Hootkins, Sam Ziff, A. Wapner and Samuel Meisel.

HELP RETURNING SOLDIERS.

Citizen Federation and B'nai B'rith to Co-Operate on Jobs.

Co-operation of the Federation of Citizens' Associations and the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith with the office of the Board of Management of the Bureau for Returning Soldiers and Sailors of the United States Employment Service, of Washington, D. C., was assured by representatives of the two organizations at a recent meeting held in that city.

Herman A. Phillips and John A. Saul, representing the Federation, and Adolph Brand, representing the Order of B'nai B'rith, assured the Board that full co-operation will be given by their organizations in securing jobs for returning soldiers.

Mrs. Mary Wright Johnson, representing the Board in the canvas being made by the Women's Federated Council to secure positions for returning service men, said that but two local employers have refused to take back returning former employes on application.

The Bureau adopted the slogan, "Local jobs for local men," on account of the many out-of-town soldiers and sailors seeking employment in Washington, and urged that returning District service men be taken care of before men from out of the city.

NEW YORK ALDERMEN PASS PALESTINE RESOLUTION.

At the last meeting of the Board of Aldermen a resolution was passed asking that self-determination be granted to the Jews of Palestine. This resolution was proposed by Alderman Halman, socialist, of Harlem, Alderman Palitz and Alderman Curley.

DR. WISE AS AN AMERICAN

By RABBI E. N. CALISCH, Ph.D.

Cincinnati, April 3, 1919.

Dr. Wise was an American before he came to America. It was because he was an American in spirit, because his whole being was so saturated with American ideals of freedom and equality, so sick of the despotic and tyrannical atmosphere of the old world, that he forsook all the splendid opportunities that were opening up before him in his native land and undertook the then tedious and perilous passage, which the journey from Europe to America meant in 1846. Many others, it is true, had undertaken that journey, braved its dangers and endured its hardships and discomforts. But they were seeking to better their material condition. He was no fortune-hunter. His was no material goal. Materially he was well situated as Rabbi in Radnitz. He himself said (Fiftieth Anniversary sermon), "I was well satisfied with my condition materially." He was acknowledged as a young scholar of brilliant parts, before whom there was a most promising future, if he cared to follow the traditional lines of political and ecclesiastical submission.

But he was not content to follow these traditional lines. His was not the spirit of the fawning servitor. He was morbidly dissatisfied with conditions. He was bold enough to give voice to his dissatisfaction, and, even then as a youth, to oppose the arbitrary exactions of both state and church. He, however, could make but little headway against the intrenched citadels of despotism. "My ideals were far above the realities", he wrote (ibid). "I could see no prospect of improvement."

He found, in an antiquarian bookstore in the city of Prague a collection of American prints, containing a resume, by Lee of Virginia, of the debates and action of the Congress in framing the Constitution of the United States. He purchased the whole of them and read them, as he said, "With heart perhaps more than with reason. That literature made me a naturalized American in the interior of Bohemia." I hold, however, despite his own declaration, that this literature did not make him an American. He was one already. It simply expressed for him his own ideals. It crystallized for him his own thoughts and aspirations. It pointed the way to him. It urged him as the great call of his life, even as God said to Abram: "Get thee out of thy land, thy birthplace and the house of thy father. Go unto the land which I shall show thee." And he came to America.

Like many another idealist and visionary, he suffered many shocks of disappointment and disillusionment. It is not for me here to tell of his struggles, his balked hopes and bitter defeats, how he was antagonized and attacked and maligned, nor to recount his hours of heart-ache and despair. Through them all persisted that indomitable spirit that is the soul of Americanism—the spirit that recognizes that the great common sense of a free democracy will eventually prevail, that a liberty-loving people, though it may make mistakes, though it may grope for a while in error and delusion, will eventually recognize the right, will perceive and acclaim the truth, will accord justice.

Despite his sufferings and disappointments, there were many experiences during his first years in this country, those formative and historic years in Albany, that served to sustain his courage and confirm his deep-seated Americanism, Among these was his friendship with some of the greatest figures in American life during the past century, such men as Thurlow Weed, Horace Greeley, Daniel Webster, Wm. H. Seward, President Filmore, Governor Seymour, and a number of others, leaders in letters, law, statesmanship and theology. His intercourse with these men was of mutual benefit. He heartened them with his own idealism. They encouraged him and enlightened him with their practical wisdom and counsel. He was a deep student of public affairs, though no aspirant for public office. He was at one time nominated for a state senatorship, but declined the honor.

But most of all, his thorough-going Americanism was manifest in connection with his life work, in his literary and journalistic labors, for the reform in Judaism, its theology and worship, in the institutions which he founded and fathered. It is the privilege of others to speak of these things, so I will mention them only in passing. We speak today glibly of American Judaism. It is a phrase that flows smoothly from the tongue. But not all of us fully realize how much of its strength, its progress, its benefit and its hope we owe to that sturdy and courageous Americanism of Isaac M. Wise, which was exemplified so clearly in his own life, and which made possible the resolution of the chaos and disorder of Jewish conditions of the first half of the 19th century into the ordered beauty and dignity of the service of Reform Judaism as we know it today.

In each of the three great institutions, which owe their origin and life to the dynamic energy of his creative force and tireless persistence, we find the clear trace of this Americanism. For their creation and maintenance he appealed, not to office-holders and those intrenched in power, but over their heads to the people themselves. And in their organization he insisted on the American principle of democratic government. In the Union, the Conference, the College, there was to be no irresponsible authority, no despotism, lay or clerical, but the democratic rule of the people, unrestricted individual autonomy for congregations in the Union, individual judgment for rabbis and students in Conference and College. The only authority was that of a public opinion and public conscience, democratically arrived at and democratically expressed in the true American way. He had no love for secret cabal, or the devious diplomacy of whispered intrigue, whether political or ecclesiastical. With him everything was open and above board. He was not afraid of publicity.

Were he alive today his Americanism would be more than ever in evidence. And it is needed today as acutely as it ever was needed in by-gone days. For there are today schism and disruption in the house of Israel. There is rampant a reactionary agitation that is an insidious attack upon the Americanism of the Jewry of this country, in denunciation of which the voice of the master is needed to ring out as in days of yore, with all the eloquence and learning, with all the uncompromising devotion to principle, with all the sledge-hammer blows of his mighty spirit.

We speak today of the identity of Jewish and American ideals, of them both as being expressions of an unwavering confidence in a true democracy as the best expression of human progress in both spiritual and temporal affairs. We insist on the separation of church and state, declaring that they are the parallel rails of the track upon which runs the engine of civilization, and which, to prevent wreck and chaos, must run ever truly parallel and never converge. We must remember that it was Isaac M. Wise who proclaimed these ideals, who taught them and fought for them from the hour he landed in New York harbor until the hour he unbuckled his armor to seek the peace and rest of the bivouac of the heavens, amidst the undying watchfires of the eternal stars. Were it possible that he could answer some reveille of the eternal wisdom, to rise and don his armor again, none more strongly than he would insist upon the maintenance of the separation of church and state, as a condition ineluctably necessary for human progress.

As if with prophetic vision he called the prayer-book he wrote "Minhag America". It was to express not only the spiritual ideals, the hopes and aspirations, but no less so the patriotism of the American Jews.

Were he alive today no one would more strongly proclaim that Judaism above all has no political, territorial or nationalistic aspirations, that Jews are Jews by reason of religion only, that as nationalists they are Americans with their Americanism undivided and undiluted, that the altar of Judaism can be built as truly upon the soil of America as in the confines of Palestine, that its strength, its support, its hope and its future are to be found, not within the limits of any land, but in the heart and soul of world-wide Jewry.

He speaketh to us out of the silence of the grave, as Moses of old was commanded, "Speak unto the Children of Israel that they go farward." We, his disciples, his children, the heirs to the heritage of his sturdy Americanism, we will speak to the congregations of Israel, to tell them to go forward, along the paths that he has pioneered for us, on which he has blazed the trail of his own peerless leadership, on which shall tread the feet of our children and our children's children, the future generations of American Jews, loyal to the heart's core, to America as citizens unhyphenated, to God as Jews, unashamed and unafraid.

THE JEWS AND BOLSHEVISM

By RABBI SAMUEL PRICE

The question as to the position and influence of the Jewish people within the ranks of the Bolsheviki is now given serious consideration by every thinking man. An article has recently appeared in the Berkshire Evening Eagle, written by a certain M. M. Diakoff, in which the "real Russians" are exonerated and the Jews are branded as the leaders of the Bolshevik movement.

I therefore wish to state that Mr. Diakoff or anyone that makes a statement like the one above, knows very little of the actual status of the leaders of Bolshevism in Russia. He does not base his arguments upon facts and statistics, but speaks in generalities like the average uninformed Jew-hater. I shall endeavor to prove that Bolshevism is a real Russian movement, founded and promulgated by "real" Russians and practiced in Russia by Russians.

The number of Jews in the Bolshevist ranks is very insignificant; it merely serves as an imaginary wall that is being attacked by the anti-Semites and behind which the actual disturbers of the world seem to find refuge. Some fifteen years ago Nicolai Lenine, a Christian and a member of a distinguished Russian family, founded the Bolshevist movement as a radical extension to the Social Democratic party. He went to Switzerland, where he became actively engaged in spreading the Bolshevist propaganda. He issued a publication known as "Zemlya Volya" (Land and Freedom). In 1909 a Bolshevist school was established in Capri, Italy, with funds secured by Maxim Gorky. The school was organized and supported by the following men: Lenine, Maxim Gorky, Lunacharsky, Alexinsky, Boddanov and Machaliov. All of these men were Russians and members of the Greek Orthodox Church.

Lenine Head and Brains.

Bolshevism was kept alive, quietly yet energetically, during the reign of the Russian Czar, but found its opportunity for assertion at the overthrow of the Russian dynasty. Nicolai Lenine was allowed to pass through the German lines in order that he might promulgate his seditious theories unto his countrymen and thus poison their minds. So he did. Bolshevism became the ruling passion of an overwhelmingly large majority of the Russians, and Lenine was and is now, according to David R. Francis, United States ambassador to Russia, "the head and brains of the Russian Bolshevik government, while Trotzky is a mere adventurer."

It is a gross falsehood and an act of malice to brandmark the Jewish people as the Bolsheviki of Russia. It is true that a few of the leaders are apostate Jews who had escaped the wrath of the former Czar by fleeing to America, to Switzerland or to France, but have since returned to give full sway to their theories in the now liberated Russia. But why blame the entire Jewish race because of the misdeeds of a few? And even those very few are not Jews; unfortunately they were born of the Hebrew race, but they have never lived or acted as Jews. They have publicly denounced their affiliations with the Jewish people. Those few leaders, through whom the entire Jewish race is being blamed, are nothing else but Russians; they are a product of Russia, just as Bolshevism itself is a product of Russian despotism.

99 Per Cent Against Bolshevism.

Of the different groups of people that were oppressed by the former Russian Czar, the Jewish people suffered most, they were mistreated beyond description; it was therefore natural that they have espoused the cause of Socialism and of human equality, because they needed those reforms most. When the revolution broke out and the dark forces of Russian autocracy were overthrown, the Jewish people felt like a bird that had been freed from its cage. And yet it is surprisingly true that only a small number of them assumed a conservative attitude by remaining loyal to the principles of law and order.

Alexander Kerensky, former Russian premier, when interviewed by Herman Bernstein in November, 1918, made the following statement: "I am sorry to say that some of the Bolshevik chiefs are Jews, unfortunately so for the Jewish people. But, on the other hand, 99 per cent of the Russian Jews are against Bolsheviks, and during the whole of the revolution the Jewish intellectuals and the Jewish masses, of all non-Russian races, where the most faithful supporters of the revolution, with which they were closely linked, as well as with the general interests of the country."

Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, grandmother of the Russian revolution, in an interview granted to Alice Stone Blackwell, remarked thus: "The Russian revolution was the opening of the prison bars to the Jewish people. And if the Muzhiks and the oppressed groups are giving expression to their freedom by aligning themselves with the Bolsheviki, then the Jewish people surely should have done so. Yet, only a small number of them are adherents of the Bolshevik theory, while their rank and file have remained conservative and opposed to the evils of Bolshevism."

Avksantiev, the famous Russian revolutionist, who recently arrived in this country, was asked by a reporter of the "Day" if it were true that the Bolsheviki are Jews and from the New York East Side. To which he replied: "No, the Bolshevik government, consisting of about thirty people, has but four Jews in it—Trotzky, Kamenev, Stecklov and Uritzky; they were all exiles from Russia at one time or another, but only one of them, Trotzky, happened to live in New York for a short time."

Jews Law-Abiding.

The Jews are, and have always been, law-abiding citizens; they are the most loyal and patriotic citizens in this country. And when we find Jewish Socialists, anarchists and Bolsheviks in New York or in any other city, they are almost invariably "Russian" Jews. They all hail from Russia, are imbued with the Russian spirit, and are a typical product of former Russia. Their radicalism is due either to Russian ignorance, or to Russian intellectualism, or to Russian tyranny, but at any rate, it is not the Jew within them that is the Bolshevik, but it is the Russian that looms up and asserts his sinister idealism. The Jewish religion stands for law and justice, the Jewish home life stands for morality and virtue, but when the Jew abandons his religion and his people and gives himself over entirely to Russia—then he becomes a Bolshevik.

On Feb. 12 Dr. George A. Simons was called before the Overman Senate Committee to state his impressions of Russia. He accused the Jews as the leaders of the Bolsheviki and blamed it all on the East Side, but he was soon made to realize that he was not giving actual facts, but merely expressing his feelings toward the Jewish people. A. J. Sack, director of the Russian information bureau in the United States, then issued the following statement:

Leaders Mainly Russian.

"It is true that Trotzky, Kamenev and some other Bolshevist leaders are Jews, but, on the other hand, Lenine, who represents the brains and the will power behind the Bolshevist movement, the man who built it up as a practice, is a Russian nobleman by birth. Many other leaders of Bolshevism, such as Lunacharsky, Krylenko, Kolontay, Dybenko, are also Russians. Dr. Simons mentioned that Trotzky is a Jew, but he omitted to mention that Dora Kaplan, who was executed for trying to assassinate Lenine, was also Jewish. The Jewish people as a whole, not only the middle class, but also the laboring masses and their leaders, are actively fighting against Bolshevism in Russia."

The New York Tribune, in commenting upon Dr. Simons' remarks, stated editorially: "True, a boatload, with Trotzky at their head, sailed from New York, but Dr. Simons should trace the life history of the group further back. They came whence they went. The East Side is a squash court wall and bounces back what is sent against it. The East Side drinks tea and has few saloons. The young men like to talk Socialism, but they overlook few chances to rise in the world. All the middle class virtues that the Bolshevists hate are at a maximum on the East Side. Democratic institutions honestly worked are good enough for it, and sometimes, notwithstanding its patience, it grows tired of being misrepresented."

In accusing the Jews as being the leaders of the Bolsheviki, such names as Trotzky, Radeck, Malinoff, Jaffe and Luxemburg are generally mentioned, but I happen to have some information whereby I can state a few of the names of the "real Russians" who are the actual leaders of the Bolshevist movement. They are: Lenine, Tchitzerin, Krylenko, Dybenko, Kollantay, Lunacharsky, Bonchbruyezitch, Alexinsky, Bogdanov, Machaliov, Zinoviev, Swerdlov, Maria Fioderovna and Maxim Gorky. These are the "real Russian" leaders of Bolshevism in Russia, while the "real Jews" are far from being Bolsheviki; they are God-loving and law-abiding citizens in every land throughout the world.

IDYLL.

From almost every part of this, our great, beloved land,
Have men of true hearts gathered here to lend a helping hand
In all that's noble, kind and good, in all that's fair and tends
To foster and promote the work, which all the world befriends;
To teach, to learn, in search of light, benevolence to diffuse,
And by exchange of mind and thought, the young folks to enthuse,
So, that when once their peers are called, to leave this useful sphere,
The rising men perfection seek, to honor their career.
What nobler calling can we find on this terrestial star,
Than you, my friends, are following, who come from near and far,
Who know no distance, know no time, who find the greatest bliss
In answ'ring prompt, when duty calls, to bring a sacrifice.

Thus, all of you have left your homes, the East, the North, the West,
To come to Scotland's sunny clime, according to behest,
There to devote your energies to elevate mankind,
In searching how to benefit, the body and the mind.
While fickle April still holds sway, where your own dear ones dwell,
While here and there the snow lies yet on the hill, on vale and dell,
The sun looks smiling upon us—the fields and groves are green,
Upon the rolling meadows gleams the dew in wondrous sheen;
The butterflies sail lustily—amidst the branches swings
The chorus of the feathered tribe, which hymns to Nature sings;
No cloud obscures the azure dome, and when the sun goes down,
The moon and starlets glitter bright, your lofty work to crown.

Louisiana, in festive attire, as she is wont to meet,
Adorned with gems by Nature wrought, she comes our guests to greet;
Whate'er her forests, heathers, hills, her lowlands do conceal,
She offers with a generous hand, to serve the commonweal;
For thousands, millions bulbs and plants, within her empire grow,
From which the standard remedies and the empiric flow.
With flowers, herbs and roots do teem, her gardens and prairies,
They furnish wax and honey pure, through myriads of bees.
Alive with fish are lakes and streams; in subterranean vaults
Are found the richest sulphur veins, the rock and table salts.
The pine gives turpentine and tar; the oak, the woodland king,
Affords the tannin from its bark, while larks and thrushes sing.

Behold the stately forest-queens, magnolias, soon to bloom
In majesty, and evergreen, cypress and cedar loom;
Pomegranates bear demulcent seed, the orange blossoms aid
The nerves and serve to beautify the joyful bridal maid;
Persimmons, fig and pecan trees, the palms with feathered leaves,
The oleander, elder, grape the eye with joy perceives;
The holly, myrtle and the thyme, the Druid's mistletoe,
All have the useful properties, appeasing human woe.
The fleecy, snowy staple bursts forth from the cotton boll.
The Passion flow'r reminding us our passions to control;
Profusely in the rip'ning cane, the saccharine matures,
The artichoke and celery, to please the epicures.

The heliotropes, chrysanthemums, the rose, the marigold,
The larkspur and japonicas, their blossoms, leaves unfold;
Narcotic the tobacco plant, nutriciously the rice,
The okra in abundance grows, the peppers full of spice;
The luffa spins on fence and house, thrives sponges soft and long,
And berries manifold in kind on hedge and brushes throng;
The modest pansy, violets, the daisy on the lawn,
Through woods and thickets swiftly rush, the hare, the deer, the fawn.
The ladies' slipper, rosemary, lobelia, lion-tooth,
Full alkaloids and glucocides, to temper and to soothe;
The bell-shaped fuchsia, lilies all, ring silently and nod,
A magic wand and scepter-like, doth rise the golden rod.

Of love the male-fern, maiden-hair, in shady grounds do dream,
And pretty, clust'ring islands form a pearly diadem;
How placidly the landscape spreads, its treasures to disclose
Sweet pictures of tranquility, of peace and of repose.
The zephyr undulating moves large fields of tassled maize,
The wingless glow-worm light emits, at which one loves to gaze;
Sweet odors and perfumed incense. the soul to sleep do lull,
A garden-spot, a fairy-land, an Eden wonderful!
But what is Heaven's paradise, without one to impart
Its beauties—what the joys of life, without a loving heart?
Hence the Creator wisely placed his greatest masterpiece,
The noble women at our side, whose love doth never cease.

To them, who do our meeting grace, to those who're absent now,
Out heartfelt greetings we extend, and reverently bow;
And to the men who could not come, whom duties kept away
From these, our social feasts, in thoughts we homage to them pay;
In memory of those who came with each revolving year,
Who slumber now beneath the sod, we shed a silent tear.
"My County 'tis of the" we sing, all join in the refrain,
May those who guide the ship of State, in wisdom rule and reign.
May all whom you will choose to guide, and at the helm now stand
Of our renowned fraternity, its usefulness expand;
And last, not least, to Him on High, the Giver of all good,
We offer thanks and praise, and pray to keep us in good mood.

Congenial as our climate is, it stands its counterparts
Within the deep recesses of our own devoted hearts;
Hence, when you set your foot upon our hospitable shore,
We greeted you as welcome guests, to please and to adore;
And all the while you are with us, it'll be our highest aim,
To kindle, foster and to nurse pure friendship's holy flame;
But ere you from us do depart, partake of what affords —
The season, by affection served, at these, our festive boards;
And when you've reached your homes again, in joyous fond embrace
Of all those dear and near to you, reserve a little place
Within the chambers of your hearts, to us, who do regret
Your parting, as we hailed with joy, the hour when first we met!

RELIGION AND THE NEW GERMAN CONSTITUTION.

According to the text of the new German Constitution, as published in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, Article 30 declares as follows:

There shall be complete freedom in matters of belief and conscience. No one shall be compelled to disclose his religious convictions. The authorities are only entitled to inquire to what religious group a person belongs, if rights or duties are involved. The enjoyment of civil and state rights and admission to public office are independent of religious professions. The free exercise of acts in connection with Divine Service is guaranteed within the limits of public order. No one can be forced to a church act or ceremony. The freedom of association in religious groups is guaranteed. Civil and state duties may not suffer by the exercise of religious freedom.

CONDITIONS IN POLAND APPALLING.

The Committee of the Joint Distribution Committee that is now touring Poland declares that the conditions of the Jewish population in Poland is most appalling. New diseases have made their appearance among the poorer classes, especially diseases of the eye, and many have gone blind as a result of starvation. Out of the 300,000 Jews in Warsaw, 200,000 are in need of help, and the food that arrived there from America will be enough to render some help to not more than 75,000 of the worst cases.

JEWISH HOPES AT THE PEACE TABLE.

country or because we are afraid of being misunderstood, hold ourselves aloof from this eternal cry of our brethren for a regained Palestine? Should we stand apart and say to them—You are endangering us—this small group in America. Assuredly not, even if there were some danger of being misunderstood. But in fact, if there be any danger, it comes not from our thinking non-Jewish fellow citizens, but from a few of our own Jewish brethren.

The restoration of a Jewish commonwealth in Palestine was merely a fond dream, a vision, up to a year ago. It was not in the political platform of any of the governments of the world. It was the cry of the downtrodden Jew. It was the hope of the prosperous Jew who heard and did not refuse to listen to that cry. All of this is changed since Nov. 2, 1917, when the Government of Great Britain published the Balfour Declaration "that it viewed with favor the re-establishment of a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine." When the other allied nations seconded this declaration and the Pope gave it his endorsement and at last the leader of all humanity at this day, Woodrow Wilson, although he could not declare himself officially, because we were not at war with Turkey, expressed his deepest sympathy with the Zionist aims and movement, it became more than probable that at this Peace Congress, with the establishment of the League of Nations, the age-long dream of the Jew would come true. And when President Wilson stated on March 2, 1919, to the delegates from the American Jewish Congress, "I am persuaded that the Allied Nations, with the fullest concurrence of our government and people, are agreed that in Palestine should be laid the foundation of a Jewish Commonwealth," all doubts were dispelled. The Jewish people, through a nucleus of them, will be reestablished in Palestine as a Jewish Commonwealth under one of the great powers—most likely Great Britain, through whose arms Palestine has been wrested from the oppression of the Turk.

And when this national home for the Jewish people is established, what will be the relations of the American citizens of the Jewish stock, of English subjects, and of all the other Jews in the other countries of the world, to this Commonwealth? Politically, nothing. We are Americans politically, and nothing but Americans. There is no dual nationality in any political sense; there can be none. We look to Palestine for nothing. We look to America for everything. But when our brethren, descendants of our ancestors, inheritors of the same traditions, the same civilization, the same culture, shall again bring forth the highest values for civilization, as we trust and hope they will. we of the kinship will be the spreaders of that civilization among the peoples of the world. Surely there is nothing selfish about that. Surely there is nothing harmful in this for us or for our American fellow citizens. Surely in this program there is no cause for fear.

AMERICAN JUDAEANS TO REMAIN IN PALESTINE.

The demobilization of the Jewish battalions in Palestine is already well under way, and a considerable number of men have already reached England. Most of the American Judaeans have elected to stay in Palestine and will, therefore, be demobilized in that country. Arrangements have already been made for giving employment to several hundred of them, and the Palestine Commission is investigating the possibility of finding work for others. Two members of the Judaeans are to represent the men's interests on the Provisional Committee of Palestinian Jewry. Whilst on garrison duty, the men are provided with opportunity for study, and Mr. Ettinger, Director of the Agricultural Department of the Palestine Office, Zionist Organization, has undertaken to deliver a series of lectures on agriculture to them.

BIG BROTHERS AND BIG SISTERS TO MEET IN CINCINNATI IN MAY.

Third international conference of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters will be held at the Hotel Sinton May 24 to 28, at Cincinnati.

Irvin F. Westheimer, chairman of the Publicity Committee, explained that the Big Brothers and Big Sisters are not Jewish organizations, as generally believed. From 60 to 70 different bodies, representing Protestant, Catholic and Jewish religious and non-sectarian societies, will send delegates to the meeting.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CLEVELAND.

Under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, Mr. Carl W. Ackerman delivered an address to the members of the Lodge and their friends on the evening of April 30, 1919, on the subject, "The Truth About Bolshevism".

The resignation of Maurice Kahn as secretary of Cleveland Lodge has finally been accepted to take effect July 1. Mr. Kahn will continue to take an active interest in the club's meetings at the B'nai B'rith building and will continue an active member of the organization.

Cleveland Lodge has every reason to feel grateful for the splendid work performed by Brother Kahn.

On Sunday evening, April 13, 1919, the formal dedication of a Community Center of the Jewish Welfare Board located in the B'nai B'rith building took place.

The meeting was opened by Mr. P. J. Haber, president of Cleveland Lodge, who, after introductory remarks, formally presented the building to the chairman of the Welfare Branch, Rabbi Louis Wolsey. Rabbi Wolsey, in his remarks when accepting the building, spoke of the splendid efforts of those connected with the Jewish Welfare Board on behalf of the Jewish men in the service. Rabbi Wolsey introduced Major General Leonard Wood as the guest of honor.

He paid a tribute to the Jewish soldier in the war. He quoted statistics to prove that although the Jews of America are only 3 per cent of the entire population, we gave 5 per cent of the total quota to the American forces. He spoke of the splendid way in which the Jews had served America, both on the field of battle and in this country, and of his special close contact with the Jewish soldiers at Camp Funston. He said the Jewish Welfare Board as an organization, had done a great deal to keep up the morale of the men.

General Wood then told of the splendid co-operative spirit that existed between the other welfare agencies and the Jewish Welfare Board, seeing in this a new era in religious understanding.

Among other big and vital reconstruction problems set forth were these:

The floating of the Victory Loan, creation of a closer and more harmonious relation between capital and labor, and the stimulation of the national spirit. In touching on the latter subject, the general said:

"We must have a strong spirit of nationalism instead of internationalism, which means chaos. The voice of the American people must speak from a national conscience. America can be relied on to do the right thing, through its own conscience, rather than through the impulse of a group of nations.

"We must not be deaf, however, to an appeal on behalf of international humanity."

He cited the late ex-President Roosevelt's declaration that "America must not become a polygot boarding house," and followed with the assertion that one language only, the language of the Declaration of Independence and of Washington, Lincoln and Roosevelt, should be taught in the grade schools. He added, however, that foreign languages should be taught in the high schools and colleges for cultural advantages.

"There is no room in America for any man who is not 100 per cent American," General Wood said, and then he digressed to compliment the men of foreign birth, who, he said, "had renewed their vows of allegiance with blood sacrifices, as the casualty lists disclosed."

General Wood explained that as a private citizen and out of his interest in the soldiers and sailors he is organizing bureaus to care for them. He thus described the need for effective service along this line:

"Imagine, if you can, a soldier's thoughts if he is permitted to stand idle on street corners and watch the more fortunate pass by in luxury. He is apt to turn to his comrade and say, 'Bill, did we fight for this?' and 'Was it worth while?'

"We must go out after these soldiers with the vigor of the Salvation Army. Be patient with the soldiers in their fretful hours and by all means see that they go back into useful paths."

Before opening the meeting and at the conclusion, and when General Wood entered the Auditorium, the audience rose and sang "The Star Spangled Banner."

Under the auspices of Cleveland Lodge, an entertainment was given on April 28 at the B'nai B'rith building, and its features included Judge Silbert, Mr. C. P. Vitz, assistant librarian, and Professor Brown of Normal College.

RIMMON LODGE, RICHMOND, VA.

By Gaston Lichtenstein.

On Sunday evening, April 20, Rimmon Lodge No. 68 held its regular meeting. Upon invitation there were present three members who had recently returned from active service. All had held commissions, two in the army and one in the navy. Therefore an evening of pleasure was anticipated, and those who attended were not disappointed.

Charles Hutzler, the presiding officer, being absent, his place was filled by Gaston Lichtenstein, vice-president of the local organization. Edwin L. Levy, Past Grand President of District No. 5, welcomed Capt. Morton G. Thalhimer, First Lieutenant Aubrey H. Straus and Ensign Morton L. Wallerstein, each of whom in turn gave instructive talks. All three referred to the pleasant relations between Jews and non-Jews. Brother Wallerstein said that the only time he recalled any display of anti-Semitism was upon a certain occasion when it was excusable.

It happened that the destroyer which acted as protector to his vessel possessed the name Israel. Instead of being close at hand, this boat disappeared from view when it should have been protecting its big sister. A torpedo later justified the remark of a superior officer on the bridge, who, observing the ensign carefully, said: "Wallerstein, where is the Israel?" After a while the question was repeated. The junior officer could do nothing but conceal his embarrassment as much as possible.

Dr. Edward N. Calisch, who has been honored by Governor Westmoreland Davis with a place on the Virginia War History Commission, followed the talks of the officers with a few remarks on Jewish Welfare Work in the United States. He also referred to pleasant relations between those of different faiths and cited the instance of a rabbi teaching the Sh'ma and Kaddish to Catholic priests and Protestant clergymen, so that in the absence of a Jewish divine Christian ministers could give the necessary spiritual consolation. Digressing for a moment, it may be worth mention that the gifted leader of Beth Ahabah congregation, at the first quarterly meeting of representatives from all parts of Virginia, held the intent interest of the historians as he eloquently referred to Maj.-Gen. Omar Bundy, sitting a few feet distant, whose famous remark about coming to fight and not to retreat was followed by action which stopped the German rush toward Paris.

Partaking of refreshments, served in accordance with Passover regulations, closed this enjoyable evening. Chairman Simon Bowman of the entertainment committee deserves special notice for his part of the program.

FAIRMONT LODGE. FAIRMONT, W. VA.

For the first time during the history of Fairmont Lodge No. 726 of Fairmont, W. Va., it had the honor of entertaining a President of its District Grand Lodge in the person of Bro. Marcus Feuchtwanger, at the well-attended meeting held on April 28. President Feuchtwanger was accompanied by Maurice Schaffner of Erie, Pa., Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, and Mr. L. P. Stein of Wheeling, W. Va., member of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge.

More than 100 people attended the meeting. Mr. Schaffner, who is president of the board of directors of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage at Erie, Pa., gave a very interesting account of the work of that institution. Mr. Stein at some length told of how every lodge in West Virginia was making gains in membership. Aaron Winer, Clarksburg, president of Clarksburg Lodge of B'nai B'rith, responded to some remarks. Simon D. Goodman, who acted as chairman, made some suitable remarks.

Musical numbers rendered consisted of the following: Contralto solo, Mrs. B. S. Finger; piano solo, Miss Beatrice Osgood; vocal solo, Miss Isabelle Klaw. The meeting was opened by the singing of "America." D. M. Osgood was chairman of the committee of arrangements.

GIDEON LODGE, ALBANY, N. Y.

Gideon Lodge No. 140, of Albany, N. Y., gave a dinner and smoker on Wednesday, May 7, 1919, at the Adelphi Club. Mr. Myer C. Jacobs, president of the Lodge, acted as toastmaster, and called for addresses from the following: Mr. H. M. Schlessinger, Charles M. Stern and Rabbi Eli Mayer. Mr. Schlessinger gave a talk on the influence of the World War on fraternal organizations; Mr. Stern spoke on the work of the Order, and Rabbi Mayer told of his experiences in the organization.

He will leave San Francisco May 10 and return two weeks later, according to the present schedule.

On the tour he will be accompanied by Mrs. Meyer, who is a leading worker in the ladies' auxiliaries of the Order; Edgar C. Levy, Grand Orator of the District, and Mrs. Levy.

Besides visiting the lodges in Phoenix, Miami and Tucson, Ariz., the President and his party will go to Fresno, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and San Diego.

In each city elaborate arrangements now are being made for their reception and conferences will be held with the B'nai B'rith workers of each community. The Grand President and Grand Orator will attend meetings of the lodges in each city, and will counsel with their brethren, telling them of the work throughout the District and pointing out ways and means of broadening the scope of the activities already under way.

At San Bernardino Mrs. Meyer will institute Paradise Ladies' Auxiliary. She will institute the members and install the newly-elected officers. Grand President Meyer, in behalf of the general committee of the District, will present the newly instituted auxiliary with its charter.

Reports reaching here during the past week from the southern lodges are that they are initiating candidates at every meeting and that large class initiations are promised all along the line in honor of the Grand President and his party.

Leave San Francisco Friday, May 9.

Arrive in Fresno Saturday, May 10—Saturday night address Fresno Lodge.

Leave Fresno Saturday, midnight.

Resolution.

Whereas, we bow our heads in humble submission to God, who in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our belover brother, Joseph, the Son of Samuel, Herzog, who departed this life on Wednesday, the 10th day of Adar Second, 5679, March 12, 1919, at the age of 78. Therefore be it

Resolved by Argo Lodge No. 413, I. O. B. B., District No. 5, at its March meeting, that we deeply deplore his demise.

We miss the loving face,
We miss the sound judgment.
We miss the guiding spirit of Bro. Joseph Herzog, who, during his membership of over half a century in our beloved Order, never failed to be present at a meeting, unless sick or out of the city. And be it further

Resolved, that we, the members of Argo Lodge No. 413, express our most heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family of our departed brother, Joseph Herzog, and be it further

Resolved, that this resolution be engrossed upon the minutes of the lodge and that a copy be sent to each of his children, and to our official organ, The B'nai B'rith News.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Dr. Martin A. Meyer related his experiences overseas as a Red Cross worker on Monday evening, April 28, 1919, at a meeting of Unity Lodge No. 273. A large attendance was present. Whist was played following the address.

A large class of candidates was initiated into the Order on Wednesday evening, April 30, under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty of the Lodges of San Francisco. The degree team of the committee performed the ritualistic work. A dinner preceded the initiation. This dinner was in honor of Mr. Milton Meyer, President of the District Grand Lodge, and a number of members of the General Committee and of Lodges in surrounding cities were the honored guests.

Special interest is being shown in the program arranged by Ophir Lodge No. 21 on Monday evening, May 12, when Dr. Martin A. Meyer will speak on "Topics of the Day".

An initiation took place at the meeting of the Columbia Auxiliary No. 1, Daughters of the Covenant, held on the evening of April 28.

A banquet and "get-together" meeting to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Golden Gate Lodge No. 129 was held on Wednesday evening, May 7, 1919. Prominent speakers, an elaborate entertainment and a musical program were the principal features at the celebration.

Since the formation of the Committee of Fifty, representing the San Francisco Lodges, great activity has been shown under the able leadership of Brother Louis Geballe, as chairman. All the meetings have been well attended.

One of the main objects in view by the Committee of Fifty for this year is a marked increase in members. The first step towards this aim was a class initiation held on April 30, which affair was a splendid one, the work of the Committee's new degree team being an inspiration to the newly initiated candidates. As a climax a dinner was prepared for the new members.

Another plan contemplated by the Committee of Fifty is a monthly dance, which will be free to the members of the Order.

MEMORIAL SERVICES BY ST. LOUIS LODGES.

The annual Memorial Service of the B'nai B'rith Lodges of St. Louis was held on Friday evening, May 2, 1919, at the United Hebrew Temple. There was a special musical program on which extra soloists appeared.

The following was the program of exercises:

Opening Anthem—"It Is Good to Give Thanks"—U. H. T. Choir.
Sabbath Eve Service—Rabbi Thurman.
Tenor Solo—Mr. Albert Koeppe.
Introductory—Bro. Emil Mayer.
"A Pioneer Leader of Our Order—Jacob Furth"—Rabbi Samuel Sale.
Soprano Solo—"The Lord Is My Light"—by Oley Speaks—Mrs. Frank Sachs.
"Our Soldier Dead—Jerome L. Goldman"—Rabbi Samuel Thurman.
Violin Solo—Mr. Arthur Baron.
Benediction.

ATLANTIC LODGE, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Atlantic Lodge No. 494 held an enthusiastic meeting on Sunday afternoon, April 27, in the presence of a large gathering. A class of candidates were inducted into the Order by Past President Joseph W. Salus, assisted by Past President Abe Weil and Rabbi Henry M. Fisher. At the conclusion of the initiation Mr. Salus was again called on to perform another pleasant task, that of presenting a testimonial to Henry Halpern, past president of Atlantic Lodge and representative to the Grand Lodge, for services rendered during his term as president. A gold B'nai B'rith watch charm and fob, suitably inscribed, was presented.

A movement has been started by this Lodge to tender to the Jewish boys of Atlantic City and vicinity, who have returned home from service abroad and the various camps a home-coming reception and dance some time during May. Committees have been appointed to make suitable arrangements at one of the beachfront hotels.

PAST PRESIDENTS' NIGHT BY HOREB LODGE

On April 27, 1919, Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., held a Past Presidents' Night in the form of an open meeting.

Teeming with dashes of wit, commingled with the spirit of pride over the great work of humanity that Horeb Lodge has accomplished in 64 years of activity were the precious four-minute gems and messages that came from the lips of 34 living past presidents of Horeb Lodge before an enthusiastic audience that proved a record breaker for attendance.

The novel plan of calling upon all of its living past presidents, many of whom are leading and conspicuous figures in the very life of the community, proved little short of sensational, for the unusual assemblage of so many able speakers upon a single program could have only generated the remarkable dash, spirit, "pep" and "nerve" that pervaded the atmosphere.

"One thousand members for Horeb Lodge" was the standard set for membership for 1919 and with a membership of 740 at present containing the leading Jewish citizens of New Haven, and with 100 applications already presented, the goal set seems certain of accomplishment. Enthusiastic support to the victory loan and Americanization problems of the day were urged by the speakers and the giving to the United States service of 105 men by Horeb Lodge, as well as undivided support by its civilian members during the world war to all patriotic endeavors and the establishment by the B'nai B'rith of a social service department providing for delinquent children, the success of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith resulting in the prohibition of offensive literature, were reviewed by the past presidents.

RESOLUTION UPON THE DEATH OF BRO. HERMAN ELIASSOFF.

He was one of the most valuable and most loyal members of the lodge and of the Order.

Imbued with the spirit of our Order and a firm believer in its principles, he gave generously of his time and of his work through the many years of his membership, whenever called upon.

His literary contributions to the B'nai B'rith News, his addresses before lodges here and in all parts of the District were a distinguished help in the upbuilding of the District and the Order.

Nor must or can his services to Jewry at large be overlooked or forgotten.

He was a most learned man, a true scholar and a most sincerely devoted Jew.

Resolved, that these lines of appreciation and of our expression of deep sorrow be spread upon the minutes of the lodge, and that a copy of the same be transmitted to the family of the deceased brother.

ADOLPH D. WEINER, Chairman.

GILEAD LODGE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

On April 24th, 1919, Gilead Lodge 114, Milwaukee, Wis., held an unusually well-attended meeting at the Odd Fellows Hall. A class of 28 candidates was initiated by the Degree Team of the Lodge. This was the largest initiation that has taken place in the Lodge for a number of years.

The Lodge was officially visited on that occasion by Brother Julian J. Gusfield of Chicago, member of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge and by the Secretary of the Grand Lodge. The two visitors addressed the Lodge on the work of the Order, its aims and purposes.

At the close of the evening refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

SEDER SERVICE AT B'NAI B'RITH HOME AT YONKERS, N, Y.

By Max Rothchild.

The members of our noble Order have so far not been burdened much with reading matter about the Home for Aged and Infirm of District No. 1, this does not seem fair, and we will in future endeavor to supply this deficiency.

For the present we will describe the observances of the Passover holidays, including the Seder, the latter a real old-fashioned Jewish Seder, which was presided over by the superintendent, who gave the traditional Seder with all its historical ceremonies and melodies.

As guests we had our genial Governor Edwin J. Goodhart and his splendid wife and his aged mother, a lady well in the eighties, but oh, my; how lively for her age; we also had Mrs. Rosenberg and mother-in-law, neighbors of the Home.

To say that the observance, including the supper, was a success is putting it very mildly; the entire ceremonies—again "including the supper"—were voted the greatest and pleasantest ever had at the Home.

The reasons? Well, splendid friends of the Home, not many, I am sorry to say, but they are splendid, and, above all, not the least bit stingy.

One hundred and forty-five dollars given by three friends, not to the funds of the Home, no, no, but distinctly with directions to spend the money to make the holidays of our dear old brothers, their wives or widows, as the case may be, as happy and as complete as could be. Donations of 15 gallons of very fine wine put the finishing touches to the joy of the holidays.

The superintendent and his genial wife are real spendthrifts when it comes to spending money given to be spent without stint, and they feel that they can take care of very frequent donations of the same kind as mentioned above.

Nothing is or should be too much or too good for old people, who, after a lifetime's unsuccessful battle, look to our Order to have a peaceful home and a pleasant old age.

To have seen them enjoy the ceremonies and the festive board means to have seen a glimpse of the hereafter in its happiest and grandest aspects.

It is heartrending, and at the same time hightly elevating, to behold our brothers and sisters, none of them less than seventy years old, many nearing ninety and one ninety-two years old, all looking only to the grand finale of life, hardly daring to review their past life because of the sorrows and hardships they had gone through, and in this twilight of their lives able to say that they have at least some pleasures without fear of further hardships excepting the natural ones of external old age, and even these made easier by willing hands.

The writer of this has great hopes that every member of our noble Order will try to emulate our friends whose liberality has made such a beautiful and pleasant holiday possible. The year is long, life is very monotonous without the liberality of such friends.

SAAR SHOLEM LODGE, PITTSBURGH, PA.

The last meeting of Saar Sholem Lodge No. 154 was remarkable for the good attendance, as well as for the enthusiasm manifested by those present. Several new members were initiated.

Bro. L. S. Levin of Ibn Babirol Lodge delivered a very inspiring message. Brother Levin's ideal is one Pittsburgh lodge with not less than 1,000 members, with downtown headquarters as a rendezvous for the Jewish business man, every day and every hour of the day, with a paid secretary.

The time has come when B'nai B'rith must represent the foremost Jewish organization to the stranger who visits here and wishes information on Jewish conditions in Pittsburgh. The time has also come when small lodges with the narrowness of views on greater issues, with the petty politics of some of the members, who find glory only in the honors which a small lodge can bestow, have outlived their usefulness.

Every Jew must consider it an honor to be a Ben B'rith, and with earnest, zealous workers, who are willing to give up some of their time to the consolidation of the smaller lodges and the organization of one great Pittsburgh lodge with no less than 1,000 members.

The first step has been taken towards consolidation: Ibn Gabirol Lodge having come to a realization of present conditions, has asked to come into Saar Sholem Lodge. This Lodge also awake to the possibilities of organized and united effort, extended the hand of welcome.

It will be well for other lodges to follow this unselfish example, and brothers in the various lodges should agitate this issue in their lodge rooms.

CHARLESTON LODGE, W. VA.

A meeting of Charleston Lodge No. 788, of Charleston, W. Va., was held at the Y. M. H. A. club rooms on April 15. President Schwabe presided

After the business of the Lodge was transacted, President Schwabe called upon Brother Simon Galperin, who recently returned from the service of the U. S. Army. Mr. Galperin enlisted in the service of Uncle Sam in November, 1917, and has been stationed in Fort Worth, Texas, for over a year. Previous to his enlistment, Mr. Galperin was secretary of the Lodge, which office he held until his departure for Camp Johnston, Fla.

Mr. Galperin outlined the wonderful work that was done by the Jewish Welfare Board and the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Fort Worth, Texas. He said the Jews of America may be well proud of the Jewish community of Fort Worth, as the Jewish men in uniform were made to feel at home in such a manner that the boys will never forget them.

Before the Jewish Welfare Board was organized the members of Fort Worth Lodge were doing their utmost to make the Jewish men in uniform feel that Fort Worth Jewry were ready to do all in their power for the men in uniform. During the holy days and every Sunday special services were held for the soldiers who took great interest in these services and after the services the boys were all invited to dine at one of the largest hotels.

Dances were held every Saturday night at the Hebrew Institute where nearly all the Jewish soldiers participated, a number of musical programs were given by the soldiers themselves, and these occasions were always crowded with civilians as well as soldiers.

The welfare work was carried out by Dr. Geo. Fox, Dr. Blumenthal, Mr. Sol. Wolfsohn and Mrs. Louis Morris, all of whom the boys have learned to love and remember for the rest of their days.

SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD MASSACHUSETTS.

Address by Hon. Henry H. Goldfogle.

"B'nai B'rith's Contribution to America" was the subject of an address by Congressman Goldfogle of New York at a public meeting of the lodge held on Sunday evening, April 27, 1919.

Henry Lasker and Nathan Goldstein, of the lodge, Ralph Boas, director of Americanization work for the school department, and Principal Thomas H. Kenworthy of the Hooker School also attested to the work which B'nai B'rith has accomplished to promote the spirit of true Americanism in the Jews who have come to this country.

In opening his address Congressman Goldfogle spoke very highly of the work which Congressman Frederick H. Gillett has accomplished during his long term of years in congress. In discussing the work of the B'nai B'rith, the speaker stated that one of the principal objects of the Order was to promote patriotism. Primarily, he pointed out, the members of the organization are taught to give unswerving allegiance to this country, which has done more than any other nation on the face of the earth to provide that equality of opportunity which all men should have in a free nation. The wonderful advances made by the Jews as a whole in this country, the speaker stated, was evidence that the opportunity for achievement is just as open today as it was when the republic was founded.

ZACHARIAS FRANKEL LODGE NO. 242, GALVESTON, TEX.

Zacharias Frankel Lodge No. 242, Galveston, Texas, recently conducted a membership drive through a committee composed of Brothers M. Krulewich, J. Singer and S. Schornstein. Although Galveston has a limited Jewish population, they were successful in securing forty-eight applications for membership, and the committee is still at work with the expectation of increasing this amount.

The following were elected to represent this Lodge as delegates to the District Convention to be held in New Orleans, April 27:

M. Krulewich, Joseph Bonart and Jacob Singer.

The following brothers have been selected for nomination as delegates of the Seventh District to the Constitutional Grand Lodge:

Rabbi Henry Cohen, Bro. H. B. Meyer and Bro. Joseph Bonart.

The present officers of Zacharias Frankel Lodge are:

M. Krulewich, President; Jos. Bonart, Vice-President; H. S. Block, Secretary, and J. Singer, Treasurer.

HOLYOKE LODGE, HOLYOKE, MASS.

Congressman Henry M. Goldfogle of New York gave a stirring address on Americanization and made a vigorous appeal for support of the Victory Liberty Loan at a largely attended meeting held on April 30, 1919, under the auspices of Holyoke Lodge No 728 of Holyoke, Mass.

Mr. Morris Hirsch presided, and other speakers besides Congressman Goldfogle were Bro. Philip Silbert, president of Springfield Lodge, Springfield, Mass., and Bro. M. M. Slotnick.

Following the addresses, subscriptions for the Victory Loan amounting to $10,000 were received by Chairman Hirsch, the results being exceedingly gratifying. In addition to this amount Mr. Hirsch, for the Jewish Liberty Loan Committee, announced that he had received Saturday subscriptions for $6,650, making a grand total to date of $16,650.

Congressman Goldfogle spoke of the great debt that the Jew owes to America. As a nation America has always paid tribute to the greatness of the Jew and to the contributions the Jew has made to the civilized world. He referred to to the compliment that America paid to the Jew when the bronze statue of Moses, the Jewish lawgiver, was placed in the Congressional library.

America has kept its gates open to the persecuted and downtrodden of all climes. The Jew who suffered under the heel of despotism has under the Constitution of America the opportunity to live and enjoy happiness and peace as his conscience dictates. Speaking of the patriotism of the Jew, Congressman Goldfogle said that in all the wars fought the Jew in none had done his part more nobly than in the present war, where he gave valiant and courageous service against a foreign foe.

He dwelt largely on the opportunities the Jew has in this land and the reciprocal obligation he owed to the country. He pointed out the necessity of subscribing largely to the Victory Loan to pay the debt the United States owes and to help and aid in sustaining the boys in service. He told of the necessity for this money and that all should lend a helping hand, and expressed the hope that the loan quota assigned would be exceeded.

In reference to the B'nai B'rith, he told of the necessity of organized effort to carry out the great mission of the Order, unity of Israel, not for clannish purposes—such a purpose should be decried—but for the purpose of making them understand the magnificent history of the race and the duties of the Jew, not merely the exercise of religious duties, but the great duty to carry out the ideals of America.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

April 27, Mahoning Lodge No. 339, had a session that will not be soon forgotten. The meeting was surely a success in every respect. The members turned out in full force to honor the past-presidents of the Lodge. The attendance was so large that the meeting hall was taxed to full capacity. Several letters were read from past-presidents who were unable to attend either on account of illness or being too far away from the city. Twenty-five new members were added to the fraternity. A smoker followed and an all around good time was enjoyed. The young and talented daughter of J. N. Scott contributed several piano selections during the initiatory ceremonies.

A membership campaign is now being held in the city. Brother J. N. Scott, but a recent member of the Order, has already distinguished himself by securing more applications than the entire committee.

SOCIAL SERVICE PROGRAM OF THE B'NAI B'RITH OF NEW YORK.

The Social Service Committee has been very active this year. Brother Ely Rosenberg has outlined the following plan of activities for the year:

The appointment of a special committee to visit all the lodges of the district. To advocate the appointment of a chaplain for the various penal institutions in the New England States.

The advancement of the drive now being made at Monticello for the establishment of a home for consumptives.

To obtain industrial positions for the blind and deaf and dumb.

The furtherance of Big Brother work and to give weekly outings to the blind and to have a visiting committee to call on the blind to read to them and give them other enjoyment.

To have outings for the blind for the summer months and also a sick visiting committee to visit out of town members who happen to be confined in hospitals in our jurisdiction.

WINNIPEG LODGE, WINNIPEG, CANADA.

Two largely attended meetings [illegible] have put a good deal of [illegible] into the Lodge. Since [illegible] in the beginning of March the Lodge has been a veritable hive of activity. With a tenth anniversary and an ambitious building project in the air it is no wonder that we get good meetings, but the fact is that the good meetings has started the mischief and the Grand Lodge when it gets to St. Paul may expect to experience a Canadian raid. We are assembling our big guns and small ammunition (hot)airships and huge explosives, and there is likely to be a procession of tanks along the Jefferson Highway. A field hospital is also being equipped as the treasurer proposes to take the secretary along with him in his Ford. The Western Battalion intends to levy a heavy indemnity on the Grand Lodge funds, and Canadians have the reputation of knowing how to reach their offensives. The Lodge in its ten years' existence has helped on a great many movements in the community and now wishes to erect a purely B'nai B'rith institution to look after the growing need for Social Service.

A very successful dance and supper was held on April 30 at the Royal Alexandra Hotel. This was well patronized and much enjoyed. At the lodge meeting on May 1 ten new members were initiated, all of whom promise to be active workers.

The following letter was recently received from Sir Robert L. Borden, premier of Canada and representative at the Peace Conference, in reply to the memorandum sent in the name of the lodge on the question of Jewish rights.

Hotel Majestic, Paris.

My Dear Sir:

Your letter of the 21st of January was acknowledged by my secretary and for some time thereafter I was not able to give personal consideration to it by reason of the exacting demands upon my time in connection with various commissions of the conference. However, I have now had the opportunity of perusing it very attentively and I take the opportunity of saying that the representations which you have been good enough to place before me will not be overlooked or forgotten. A copy of the memorial has been submitted to the prime minister of the United Kingdom with whom I have discussed it and with whom I hope to further confer thereon in the early future.

Believe me, dear Mr. Samuel,

Faithfully yours,

(Signed) ROBERT L. BORDEN.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

A stag affair was given by Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport on Tuesday evening, May 6, 1919, at the Harmony Hall. The program included a variety of musical and vocal numbers and short talks. Among those who addressed the Lodge were Brother Lieut. Albert Simons of Hartford, Conn., recently returned from overseas service. The evening's program was brought to a close with a white face minstrel show. At the close of the evening refreshments were served and a very pleasant social hour was spent.

About two hundred members and their friends attended the social gathering given on April 22, 1919, by Harmony Lodge No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn.

The features of the program were an address by Mr. Lynn W. Wilson on "The League of Nations, Pro and Con", and a reading of poems by Dr. Louis Smirno.

The musical program included community singing led by George Greenspun, accompanied by William McAuliffe, pianist, and piano selections by Miss Adelaide Zeigler.

Fifty members of Harmony Lodge will attend Past Presidents' Night of Horeb Lodge, New Haven. Thirty-four past presidents will be present. The Bridgeport delegation will go to New Haven in automobiles.

KANSAS CITY LODGE, KANSAS CITY, MO.

A cultural meeting of Kansas City Lodge No. 184 of Kansas City, Mo., was held on Monday, April 28, 1919, at the Temple Vestry Rooms. The meeting was open to the public and was largely attended.

The following was the program:

Music—Miss Nell and Miss Helen Springer.

Address—Dr. Burris A. Jenkins.

Refreshments.

RESOLUTIONS.

Salem Lodge, Harrisburg, Pa.

April 16, 1919.

We, the undersigned committee in behalf of Salem Lodge No. 26, I. O. B. B., do hereby express to the family of the ate Abram S. Jacobson, our deepest and most profound sympathy at their loss.

Abram S. Jacobson was a member of Salem Lodge No. 26, I. O. B. B., for many years. He was greatly interested n the ideals and principles which the I. O. B. B. has promulgated and which he put into practice in his daily life.

Our departed brother was an exemplification of true "Benevolence". He was always ready to assist those in need and n distress. He gave liberally and generously and deemed it a privilege to render service.

The noble spirit of "Brotherly Love" which he displayed towards his immediate family was extended to all those with whom he came in contact.

His life was one of "Harmony". His relationship to his friends and associates was amicable and peaceful—with malice towards none, charity to all.

We mourn the loss of Abram S. Jacobson, and in token of our sorrow, we offer this tribute to his memory.

Be it Resolved, That this memorial shall be spread upon the minutes of the Lodge, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased brother and a copy be furnished to the B'nai B'rith News and The American Israelite for publication.

LOUIS J. HAAS,
AL HIRSCHLY,
HARRY LOWENGARD,
Committee.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

A "standing-room-only" meeting of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., was held on Sunday afternoon, April 13, 1919, on which occasion Brig.-Gen. Benjamin M. Holden of the United States Army delivered an address on the subject "The Record of the Jewish Race n the World War". In his address he said:

"Every one of my Hebrew assistants n the Quartermaster Department within the draft age beseeched to be transferred to the fighting line and to active service n France, and I want to express my sincere admiration for the patriotism and splendid heroism of the Jewish boys in the United States service during the war, comprising 5 per cent of the army and navy enrollment."

A reference to Judge Isaac Wolfe—recently appointed to the Superior Court bench—made by the speaker, in extolling the virtues and qualities of members of the Jewish race, was greeted with tumultuous applause.

Judge Wolfe is a past president of the Lodge.

Smoker and Entertainment.

The Entertainment Committee of Horeb Lodge arranged a splendid program on Tuesday evening, April 8. Some of the best local talent were on the program and were successful in entertaining a large number of members of the Lodge and their friends. Many out-of-town vistors from other lodges and nearby cities were present.

The House Committee of the Lodge prepared a luncheon, which was served at the close of the entertainment.

SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

At a meeting of Springfield Lodge No. 94 of Springfield, Mass., held Monday evening, April 28, a class of twenty candidates was initiated. The Prize Degree Team of Horeb Lodge of New Haven conferred a degree on the candidates.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

The lodge resolved to secure information from the Executive Committee of he Order regarding the steps that are being taken to alleviate the sufferings of he Jews in Poland.

The entertainment committee of the odge submitted report showing all plans complete for the eighth annual banquet o be held in honor of the members who have returned from the Service. The banquet is to be held at the Hotel Cooley on May 21, and Rabbi Dr. Stephen S. Wise will be the principal speaker.

SPOKANE, WASH.

Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423 of Spokane, Wash., held an unusually well attended meeting Tuesday evening, April , 1919.

A committee of six were appointed to make arrangements for a May festival.

Ida Blum Strauss Auxiliary to the Lodge held a meeting on the evening of April 17, which was followed by a dance and an entertainment.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

The Isidor Straus Lodge No. 519, of I. O. B. B., Ft. Worth, Tex., takes this means of expressing its thanks and appreciation to all those members who have so generously helped to make the recent ball a success. It especially extends its sincere thanks and deep gratitude to the chairman, Mr. H. F. Lubin, and the committee of ladies who have so energetically and indefatigably exerted their best efforts to brings about this success. The grand sum of about $750 was realized. This amount will go toward clearing up and wiping out all the obligations of the lodge, and will start the lodge with a clean slate.

In behalf of the lodge, we beg to remain.

J. WOLFFSON, President.
L. F. SHANBLUM, Secretary.

YONKERS, NEW YORK.

Yonkers Lodge No. 451 of Yonkers, N. Y., held a well attended meeting on the afternoon of April 13th, in the Jewish Home. Mr. Charles Shapiro, President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, addressed the audience on the work of the Order. He emphasized the fact that through the Order the rights and privileges of the Jew, as well as his duty toward his fellow-men have been made better known to the members.

The Lodge decided to hold a mass meeting in the near future for the purpose of drafting a resolution to be sent to the Peace Conference in Paris, requesting that the Jews in countries where they are being suppressed, be granted full and equal rights.

AKRON LODGE, AKRON, OHIO.

The B'nai B'rith lodge of Akron met at Temple Israel Wednesday evening, April 9. A class of new members was formally initiated. A committee was appointed to look after Jewish prisoners in the jail. A committee was also appointed to arrange a Mothers' Day program.

Resolutions adopted by the Cincinnati Lodge were read proposing the abolition of secrecy as a feature of the Order. A motion to concur in the Cincinnati resolution was tabled.

A hearty welcome was accorded Mr. Samuel Friedman, former president of the lodge, who has just returned from military service in France, where he was under fire during the hottest of the conflict.

ARGO LODGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

On Wednesday, March 26, 1919, Argo Lodge No. 413, of Washington, D. C., held a Lodge Mourning at the temple in memory of late Brother Joseph Herzog, the father of Sol. Herzog, president of District Lodge No. 5.

After the regular business of the lodge, El Molsi Rachamin was chanted by Brother A. Brand and the 49th Chapter Psalm was read by Brother M. Sworzan, whereupon Kadish was said; the eulogy was delivered by Brother Dr. A. Simon. The chair which the deceased brother always occupied was draped in black with an artistic tablet in Hebrew and in English, especially made for the occasion by Brother A. Brand. A lighted candle was placed over the chair. The whole ceremony was truly Jewish and very touching. The family of the deceased brother was present and was greatly touched by the ceremony.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND

On Tuesday evening, April 22, 1919, Portland Lodge No. 65 and its Auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held a Victory Rally at the B'nai B'rith building. Speeches were made by John Dougall, representing the Victory Loan Committee; D. Solis Cohen and Dr. George Rubenstein, who recently returned from service in the Jewish Welfare work. Dr. Jonah B. Wise presided.

The B'nai B'rith Club Girls were the hosts at a dancing party on the evening of April 30. This affair was not under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service, but one which the club girls planned for their personal friends. Men still in the service were admitted free, while others were charged a small admittance fee to help pay expenses.

TACOMA, WASH.

A "Hard Time Dance" was given Saturday evening, April 12, at the B'nai B'rith Clubhouse of Tacoma Lodge, Tacoma, Wash. A general good time was enjoyed by all and dainty refreshments were served by the ladies.

Destiny Auxiliary No. 14, Daughters of the Covenant, Auxiliary to Tacoma Lodge, held a business meeting on April 10, at which a number of candidates were initiated.

DACOTAH LODGE, GRAND FORKS, NORTH DAKOTA.

The B'nai B'rith of Grand Forks, N. D., permitted the Menorah Society, recently organized in the University of North Dakota, to use the Lodge Rooms as a permanent meeting place of the Society.

The following associate members of the Menorah were elected to make a state wide campaign for a Menorah fund, under the leadership of Col. Max Rabinovitch, chairman; Michael Panovitz and I. Papermaster. The latter three men have been doing very good work, and as B'nai B'rith members have taken a keen interest in the carrying on of a Menorah Society in North Dakota. At a recent meeting Dr. Stamovitz, a faculty member at the University, and Dr. Cooperman, a prominent physician of the community, addressed the residents of Grand Forks on "The Menorah Movement".

EDWARD EVERETT LODGE, NEW YORK.

By S. Priester.

Our esteemed, venerable brother, Wm. B. Ast, one of the founders of this Lodge and an active member for fifty-two years, who served this Lodge as president, trustee and this District as head of the Finance Department, was presented on the occasion of his seventy-third birthday by the congregation Kodepl Sholam, which he served for twenty-seven years most faithfully as trustee and for ten years as treasurer, with a complete set, twelve volumes, Morocco bound Jewish Encyclopedias, the presentation being made by the president of the congregation, Bro. Benjamin Blumenthal, who in eloquent words praised the manifold activities of Bro. Wm. B. Ast and expressed the feelings, respect and honor which the jubilar enjoys by every member of the congregation.

LOS ANGELES LODGE, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Los Angeles Lodge No. 487, of Los Angeles, Calif., is out with a membership prize. The goal set is 1,000 members, and every effort will be made to secure all the new members possible.

A fine program has been arranged for the meeting of the Lodge on May 13, and for a short time all the efforts of the Lodge will be concentrated in this membership campaign.

The meeting on May 13 was of unusual character, and it was the occasion of a visit of the President of the District Grand Lodge, Mr. Milton Meyer, of San Francisco, who was making an inspection tour of the southern part of the district. President Meyer was accompanied by Mr. Edgar C. Levy, the Grand Orator of the district.

JULIUS HOUSEMAN LODGE, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee of Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 of Grand Rapids, Mich., arranged a strong educational program at the meeting of the lodge, held in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanuel, on March 17, covering the operations and accomplishments of the Jew. First on the program was a report of Bro. Jacob Ely, which embraced the working of the local branches of charitable institutions. He was followed on the program by Judge Stillman, Executive Secretary of the Federation of Social Agencies, an organization under which all charitable institutions of the city act.

The meeting was well attended and addresses were received with marked approval.

FRATERNITY LODGE, NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT.

On Sunday, April 6, 1919, the officers of Fraternity Lodge No. 743 were installed by District Deputy Samuel Campner.

In a brief but interesting talk Mr. Campner impressed his hearers to the effect that the country is less prepared for peace than it was for war; that only by a concentrated effort can the question of unemployment be mitigated; that the I. O .B. B. was to assume the leadership of this as well as other weighty problems of the reconstruction period.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., held a very interesting meeting Sunday, April 27, known as Past Presidents' Night. All the living past presidents were present, 34 of them. There were four-minute talks by the past presidents.

The meeting was arranged by Brothers Joseph H. Ullman and Joseph Koletsky, the present President of the Lodge. It is the aim of Brother Koletsky and Brother Ullman to increase the membership of the Lodge this year to 1,000.

Brother William Klapp, President of Rehoboth Lodge No. 38, has arranged a series of interesting social and literary meetings. Brother Klapp is a great enthusiast and has the help and co-operation of a number of brothers.

Bro. Dr. Samuel Greenfield, President of the Mt. Sinai Lodge No. 2, addressed Rehoboth Lodge Tuesday evening, April 8, on the great possibilities of the Order. His talk was greatly appreciated.

Thanks to the efforts of Brother Ed. J. Goodhart, and the superintendent of the home, Brother Max Rothschild, Yonkers City Lodge is greatly growing in membership, and general activities. Brother Goodhart also organized a Youth's Auxiliary in conection with the Lodge, the aim of which will be to assist in the good work at the Home for the Aged in Yonkers.

Harmony Lodge No. 711 held an unusually interesting meeting Tuesday evening, May 6. About 75 new members were introduced to the Lodge. One of the honorable guests of the evening was Brother Lieut. Al Simons, surnamed "The Idol of Connecticut". His war experiences as he told them were most interesting. The Lodge was also addressed by the President of the District, Brother Charles H. Shapiro.

Yonkers City Lodge No. 451, of Yonkers, N. Y., held an interesting meeting on Tuesday, May 6, 1919. The initiation of a number of candidates preceded the open meeting. The degree team of Harmony Lodge, Bridgeport, Conn., officiated. The President of the District, Mr. Charles H. Shapiro, of Bridgeport, Conn., addressed the meeting. The musical program was successfully carried out.

Akiba Lodge No. 173 of New York gave a reception and informal dance, in honor of its members who have returned from service, on Tuesday evening, May 13, 1919.

New Hampshire Lodge No. 839 was instituted on Sunday afternoon, May 4. 1919, by the officers of District Grand Lodge No. 1.

The degree team of Springfield Lodge No. 684, of Springfield, Mass., has again been honored by District Grand Lodge No. 1, in being invited to initiate a class of 100 candidates at Manchester, N. H.. on Sunday, May 4, 1919.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Mahoning Lodge No. 339, of Youngstown, Ohio, initiated a class of 75 members at its Past Presidents' meeting, held on Sunday, April 27, 1919. Brother J. N. Scott secured 35 candidates.

At the meeting of Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., held on May 11, 1919, a class of candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge.

A well attended meeting of Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47, of St. Louis, Mo., was held on Thursday evening, April 10, 1919. The subject of discussion was "Should Secrecy in the Order Be Abolished"?

DISTRICT NO. 3.

A "get-together" meeting of New Castle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle, Pa., was held on Sunday evning, April 13, 1919. Brother Armin H. Friedman, a member of McKeesport Lodge, who was a sergeant-major of the United States Army in France, addressed the Lodge on the subject "Overseas Reminiscences".

Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, President of the District Grand Lodge, addressed the Lodge, and after the rendition of a musical program refreshments were served.

At a well attended meeting of Braddock Lodge No. 516 of Braddock, Pa., held on Sunday, April 13, 1919, Rev. Dr. Harry R. Robertson delivered an address on the subject "The Greatest Thing in the World—Character".

DISTRICT NO. 4.

At a meeting of Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420, of Butte, Mont., held on May 1, 1919, which was as usual well attended, the resolution was adopted to express thanks to the local committee that had charge of the campaign for funds for the Jewish war sufferers, and to express thanks and appreciation for the magnificent results achieved.

On Tuesday evening, April 22, Oakland Lodge No. 252, of Oakland, Calif., gave a dance at the Covenant Hall, which proved an enjoyable affair. Many of the boys who were overseas and have returned assisted in making the dance interesting.

ANOTHER JEW IN POLAND PARLIAMENT.

Another Jew has been elected a deputy in the Polish Parliament. He is Dr. Hartglass, who was chosen at a special election in the city of Sedletz, receiving 80 per cent of all the votes.

Welfare Work in a B'nai B'rith Club Branch of Jewish Welfare Board

By Joseph Leiser, Representative in Charge B'nai B'rith Club, Chillicothe, Ohio

Upon the entry of this country in the great world war the officials of the War Department realized that the perils of conflict dared not be hazarded without the greatest degree of efficiency on the part of the military arm of the service. The foe was the most formidable that ever lifted up arms. Forty years they devised and designed such engines of destruction that not merely physical bravery but skill, science, mechanical technique and the more subtle processes of mental functioning and psychic reactions were necessary to reinforce bayonets and rifle, high explosives and trench mortars, hand grenades and machine guns. Ammunition trains, motor transports, field kitchens, mess sargeant and quartermaster detachments, as well as stretcher bearers, ambulance drivers, marines, sailors and the legion of units composing a modern army organization, had to be manned by men who were not merely trained, drilled, schooled in the operation of the mechanism entrusted to them, but also upheld by an inner armament of resolution, conviction, fidelity, loyalty, devotion—all those spiritual qualities of unselfish service and sacrifice which make patriotism real and impels a soldier to recite with the last breath of consciousness: "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

The military authorities agreed that the spiritual equipment within was fully as powerful as strength of muscle and skill in target or bayonet practice. Experience of a previous war through which the nation had passed, namely the Spanish-American, exacted a greater toll of casualties from typhoid and menengitis than the battle field. And this more recent mobilizing of our soldiery on the Mexican border gave leeway to more corruption than an army in action could safely absorb and win.

Particularly the experiences on the Mexican border convinced the War Department that saloon and brothel, "bull-pen" and gambling table were foes as well as the Hun, and had to be overcome, lest the army of America meet ignominious defeat, not from want of valor but want of morale. A morale must be created to counteract the invasion of the vultures and harpies that had hitherto camped in the rear of the army. To banish the saloon or canteen without providing substitutes was small-town shortsightedness, effectively ridiculed in "Spoon River Anthology" as the average intelligence of benighted yokelry which believes the ostrich in burying his head in the ground when alarmed, sets the right standard for fanatics to follow. Though the rural pastor and the provincial spinster raved and railed against the position that saloons dared not be abolished unless proper substitutes were created the War Department legalized what is now the famous Fosdick Commission to work in conjunction with the War Department on training camp activities and as a result of this definite stand soldiers and sailors were provided huts and recreational centers; cabins and community houses wherein to spend their leisure hours. For it is the leisure time of the soldier which strengthens or undoes all the good of the drill ground.

In this wise it came to pass that the B'nai B'rith Clubs were opened, to provide for the Jewish soldier and all who cared to avail themselves of their privileges the means and conveniences of spending their leisure moments with the greatest degree of comfort and amid surroundings that were healthy, clean and upbuilding.

Conscripted and inducted into the service a soldier is instantly wrested from all those associations with which he has been in contact. His habitual contacts have been removed. His mode of occupational routine entirely altered. Of a sudden he is torn from home, and shop; from lodge, church, society and dropped into a community of men dressed alike, acting under orders, sleeping in barracks, eating in mess halls, ordered to do and act without consulting his personality, without soliciting his individual initiative. Instead of exercising a self-directing, creative impulse, the conscript is commanded what to do and what not to do. Every moment of the twenty-four hours of his army life is under regulations to which he must conform or be punished with a severity unparalleled in civilian life.

Into this existence he is flung. When his troop train drew out of the depot of his town or city, he left behind all his social relations and contacts. Hurried to a camp he stood in line probably hours in rain or sunshine; tagged and numbered not as a man but as a digit, a fragment of an army. His name and station in life mattered little. He was merely a part of an enormous machine in which he revolved without his intercession.

General Sherman said war was hell. The conscript now believes General Sherman belongs to kindergarten class. The first two weeks in camp the conscript, or rookie, verifies every epithet and circumstance attributed to war. In these two weeks he bemoans his home and his mother's cooking. He misses his clean comfortable bed. In these two weeks of privation he receives the "shots," inoculations against typhoid, small pox, pneumonia, with the attending fevers and aches of punctured arm and back.

In these first weeks he is yanked from his bunk in the early hours of morning when he would like to execute the bugler and spend the rest of his life in bed. He is forced to stand reveille and during the course of the day hike with his pack and full equipment ten or more miles when perhaps never in all his life had he done harder work than walk to his office or row a boat for his sweetheart. The first few weeks are the days that try his soul. In agony of mind and torture of body it is borne in on him that he is a soldier, that his country is at war, that he has no one to comfort him except a welfare worker and no other place to go, in the case of a Jewish soldier, than the B'nai B'rith Club.

Established by District Number Two, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, as a recreational center for soldiers regardless of creed, race and breed, of Camp Sherman, who would find here comfortable quarters to rendevouz and meet their fellow soldiers; to read, write, play piano, or the victrola, to play pool or a denaturalized card game, and above all a good strong cup of coffee and eat something in the shape of food that tasted like those delicacies mother used to make—this was their purpose.

The superintendency of the rooms was entrusted to the writer of this article. Messrs. Louis Bornstein, of Indianapolis, and Sidney G. Kusworm, of Dayton, Ohio, were the committee of the district that engaged me and did so within a few minutes after being introduced on the grounds that in addition to being a rabbi, as I was then, of the United Hebrew Congregation of Joplin, Mo., I was also a newspaper man in the employ of the Joplin Globe. The combination, they predicted, would be felicitous, since it would eliminate formality, conventionality and ministerial sanctimoniousness.

The B'nai B'rith club rooms were opened on the first Sunday in February, 1918. The first soldier to enter was Max Green, of Cleveland, and following him, Isador Zeeman, of Pittsburgh. In their wake came generals, majors, captains, lieutenants, "shave tails" sergeants and "buck" privates by the hundreds.

Three divisions have been training at Camp Sherman: 83rd, 84th and 95th. Among these the number of Jewish soldiers, so it is estimated, has been from 3,500 to 5,000. Of this number at least one-half, to be conservative, have frequented the B'nai B'rith club rooms, corner Second and Paint, in Chillicothe, Ohio.

In the first few months of its existence the B'nai B'rith was unattached to any organization. It was independent and maintained by contributions of its members in the district. The Jewish Welfare Board had a representative in camp who was quartered in a tiny office in the "Y" hut No. 72. There was very little co-operation at that time between the organizations. The entry of the B'nai B'rith was not regarded with favor by the representatives of the Jewish Welfare Board in camp. They viewed the B'nai B'rith Club as a rival business concern and never invited the superintendent of the B'nai B'rith Club to address the soldiers in camp, much less accord him any assistance for the services of the Jewish soldiers in whom both were primarily interested and in whose behalf welfare work was initiated.

It is neither the time nor place to revamp this controversy which raged for a few months and was finally adjusted by the Jewish Welfare Board absorbing the B'nai B'rith clubs throughout the country and co-ordinating them with their expanding organization. Whether it was wise for the B'nai B'rith to sink its identity in the larger organization is a moot point and need not be argued at the present juncture.

In drawing up the contract for service the officers of the B'nai B'rith stipulated as one of my functions the holding of the religious service. The Department of Synagog and School Extension loaned us leaflets and hymnals such as are used by them for summer service in our vacation resorts. Services were held frequently at first and gradually subsided as irregularities of drilling and troop movements made it impossible to depend on attendance. The few Jewish residents of Chillicothe attended these services and during New Years and the Day of Atonement the club rooms served as a synagog for the soldiers remaining in town over the holydays.

Of the rabbis who have spoken here Dr. David Phillipson, Dr. David Lefkowitz of Dayton, Dr. Isador E. Philo of Youngstown, Dr. Israel Klein of Columbus are among the best known. When unable to obtain a visiting rabbi's services an address was conducted by myself.

Our Jewish soldiers have not manifested any perceptible disregard or disrespect for their religious tradition. The trying experiences they suffered stimulated their religious inclinations and evoked from them responses of belief and allegiance that reveal the strength of Jewish spirituality and attest to its continuity.

But religious exercises were only a portion of my service. These club rooms linked the soldier to his home. It provided him with some of the normalities of existence amid the barren austerity of drill ground and barracks. Grim the business of making soldiers and it was a relief for our Jewish boys to come to this haven. Here they wrote their letters and read, here they played piano and danced when visitors from Columbus, Dayton, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Youngstown, Bellaire, Middletown and other towns and cities of the state gladdened them with their presence.

By this means the connection between home and camp was restored and a needful relief it was since many spent their days in bayonet practice thrusting sharpened weapons at the throats of makeshift foes:

"In the hectic days of warfare
  Squads of panting recruits stood,
Jabbing at these self-same bundles,
  Formed like bodies out of wood,
Stabbing at each torso swinging
  In the hurricane of war,
Till their fingers bled and festered
  From the strange new work they bore."

A recreational center, this was the chief asset of the B'nai B'rith Club. It was equipped with many soft leather upholstered rocking chairs, library tables, lounge, folding chairs, billiard table, card tables, toilet facilities and a two-burner gas stove on which gallons of coffee were brewed and often tempting dishes made when supervised by the matronly hands of the Columbus Council of Jewish Women, who, once a month, visited the club and fed and entertained swarms of our boys.

The way to a man's heart, so runs the ancient adage, is through his stomach, and the way to a soldier's undying affection is along the same route. Mess in camp was always plentiful though as often monotonous. To a generation of Jewish boys accustomed to the delicate viands only Jewish mothers know how to make, it was a gladsome change of menu to eat home-made cake and drink coffee with some pep to it.

Far be it from me to proffer my services as a chef. I have trained my hands to do a few things. I can set type, make a political speech for my candidate and party; write a poem, a sermon; make a garden, build a boat or a chicken coop; write a play, a novel, an "ad", and I can also make what was known as "Bismarck herring," but now passes under the ubiquitous label as "liberty herring". In fact so successful have my efforts been in this direction that I am compelled to confess with all deference to my vanity, that the boys liked my herring better than my sermons and some of my champions were prone to rate me among the leading speakers of the day. Partisanship, brethren, only partisanship.

Edith Cavell said in the last hours of her immortal life that war work demanded more than patriotism. In a lesser degree a rabbi engaged in war work must be more than a mere rabbi. He must also be a chef, and I have no qualms of conscience to salve in having prepared many meals for the boys which they ate and enjoyed and are alive this day in spite of it.

On Saturday afternoon and evening, on Sunday afternoon and evening and many times during the week days have squads of panting recruits drifted in the club rooms and said:

"Doc, make me something to eat."

Maybe this is not welfare work, according to the letter of the book, although there is no technique of welfare work. There is only human service. I prepared whatever their palates craved and their appetites did the rest.

A program of welfare work was, however, gradually evolved. On Saturday night dances were held in the club rooms. Chillicothe being without any population of young Jewish people, it was necessary to import our young women from neighboring cities. These came in the afternoon dragging boxes and bundles of food of various assortments. After supper was served to as many as 605 on one occasion, a dance program was rendered, each girl dancing with no more than one partner at a time.

After the armistice was signed camp morale took a sudden and desparate lurch. The incentive was blunted in all lines of work. Men began to prepare for discharge and a return to civilian life with its engagements and vocations. During war men's minds were concentrated on the business of war. Now their minds focused on the business of peace, and all the problems of re-employment, re-adjustment, re-habilitation and reconstruction. Men began to think and sought utterance for their thoughts. Accidentally and without premeditation a series of conferences were held in the club rooms Sunday evening which proved of inestimable value to all participants. Many problems were thus informally debated: Religion, economics, peace terms, nationalism, Zionism, Bolshevism and prohibition.

Many wild ungrounded theories were exposed by means of these conferences Many a man with set and preconceived notions admitted he had gained a wider and more liberal view of his place in the economy of life. My part in all these discussions was that of judge, and while several of my friends declare I have missed my calling and should have studied law, I defended my own status by presiding over these informal debates with impartiality—a just and upright judge.

My theory of welfare work was evolved from experience. I learned the work through the work. Although it became possible for me to enter class 9 of the Jewish Welfare Training Class for Welfare Workers, I learned very little in the class on the spirit and attitude of service, but a few rules of policy and a few formalities of military etiquette. I did hear, however, at that class something about the "Jews in the days of Abraham" and "that it doesn't require much learning to be a reform rabbi." But that's another story. My conception of a welfare worker is that of the big brother movement. The welfare worker is a big brother to every soldier. At least to me every Jewish soldier was my brother and so treated.

They came to the B'nai B'rith Club, as to their own home. Shortly after the club rooms were opened a Jewish soldier painted some signs for me. One was: "Don't forget to write home." Another: "Remember this is your club," and another: "You are as welcome here as at home." In this wise I tried to apply the warm hearted affection of my own dear mother who, while she was on earth, received prince and pauper on an equality of friendliness and always kept her coffee pot on the stove.

Of the events standing out most conspicuously in memory was the dinner and dance given by Cincinnati Lodge of B'nai B'rith under the management of Sidney Rosin, Harry J. Levy and Samuel Lipp. These gentlement and their chaperones escorted some sixty of Cincinnati's charming Jewish young womanhood to this city, where we served them in the B'nai B'rith Club with a five-course supper and followed it with a dance in the Elk's Hall. Another event of equal magnitude was the farewell banquet given by Jewish soldiers Nov. 22, 1918, when 165 Jewish soldiers met for the last time as members of Camp Sherman. Among our distinguished guests on that evening were Judge Harry M. Hoffheimer of Cincinnati, Hon. John Poland of Chillicothe, Col. Cussask of Camp Sherman, Major Cole and several other majors, Lieut. Israel Trachtenberg of New York and representatives of the Y. M. C. A., K. of C, Salvation Army, Red Cross and War Camp Community Service. The banquet being held on a Firday evening Samuel Pressman of the Jewish Welfare Board in Camp Sherman chanted the Kiddish and for four hours officers and men feasted, talked and were entertained. Two shows were given that evening. One by the "Y" entertainers under Henry Kirdendall's management and the other by Hart Brothers & Company, a Keith circuit team playing that week in the local Majestic Theater.

There were other events such as Mother's Day, Chillicothe Day, Home Coming Day for the 83rd and the local Company H of 166th Rainbow Division, but these were a part of the entertainment included in the general routine of service.

Reports when formally presented, tabling the number of persons received, the number of pounds of coffee or cake or butter consumed may satisfy the statistician, but fail to reveal the inner processes and surely disguise the actual benefits. Our boys were entertained and befriended. These rooms provided them a make-shift home and for this they have invariably been grateful. Few of the men now discharged have refrained from expressing their appreciation for favors shown. Some with tears in their eyes have thanked me. To be sure none ever kissed me when they left. But I felt the clasp of their hands as they bade me good-bye, promising to write, which some do and others neglect and hoping that we will meet again, which, of course, will never happen in this world. But the great achievement of welfare work does not consist in distributing prayer books and selections from scripture, invaluable and priceless as these are and important and necessary as all materials are in the function of life. The chief asset of welfare work is morale and morale is a disguised form of religion.

Welfare work means more than a nonchalant invitation, addressed to the men: "Ah, come on fellahs, we'll have a good time." Welfare work often demands severity of reprimand and men who are wrong must be told so. Many a man has come to me and stated opinions about the army that were mildly treasonable and it was my business "to bawl him out" in the lingo of camp. I have argued and reasoned with many in a vain attempt to set them right on matters of religion, politics and the army life. For example, I have always defended England against defamation on the part of some overseas men who were misled by their brief excursion in the British Isles and misunderstood and underated the British. I have set my face against any outcropping of Bolshevism, and although inclined to be socialistic I am not in sympathy with a regime for America that spells destruction to all rational industrialism. It is some consolation with me that I have corrected bias and slants of those untrained in history and unlettered in philosophy. With me it has been a firm belief that God rules the destinies of man in wisdom and love. That faith I have tried to impart to my boys.

The variety of employments of a welfare worker is endless. I have enumerated a few. As an evidence that this list is incomplete it remains for me to say that I also participated in a wedding ceremony and turned the tables by preparing breakfast for the bridal party. The menu consisted of scrambled eggs and coffee, but it was a bridal breakfast none the less.

There have been saddened duties, too. The last duty the living render the dead. I have stood beside the cot of the dying in the wee hours of morning and with a gauze mask over my mouth recited the confession of a death bed: "I acknowledge unto thee, O Lord, my God and God of my fathers, that both my cure and my death are in Thy hands. May it be Thy will to send me a perfect healing. Yet if my death be fully determined by Thee I will in love accept it at Thy hand." And while the lights of the ward were low a gallant soldier "contesting to the last, goes over life's last top." Beside him stood one he never knew in life nor saw, who united him with his fathers by means of the password—Shema Yisroel.

In a few more weeks the work is done. Demobilization is now nearing the end. Maybe the war drum will beat no longer. Maybe in the parliament of the world a covenant of peace will be established and the day of man's redemption from brutality and hatred hastened. Our Jewish boys did valiently in this war. Their record of heroism is assured. In the conflicts of civilian life they will have been prepared for service by their drill sergeants and their action in battle. A little of their courage and heroism was acquired through the ministries of welfare work in which the B'nai B'rith Club Branches of the Jewish Welfare Board contributed a definite and substantial quota.

And for a final word let this be said. Not a Jewish soldier who came to Camp Sherman but met and learned to love one of the welfare workers in camp, namely Mr. Simon Burnett Jordan. With a devotion that never spared personal comfort, ever subordinating himself for the good of his soldier boys; in sickness and in health, in every circumstance of agony and torture, heedless of quarantine and defying contagion, Mr. Jordan gave himself to his work, and won the everlasting gratitude and respect of Camp Sherman soldiers. Surely this man will be forever enshrined in the affection of the boys whom he visited when sick and fed when hungry. In doing unto those as he would be done by, he retires from welfare work with all Camp Sherman soldiers, whether of our faith or not, extolling his unselfishness and sincerity. Among the welfare workers in this camp our Jewish boys will remember him the length of their lives. They will also remember Henry Unger of Toledo, Jack Rosenbaum of Toledo, Rabbi Isador E. Philo of Youngstown, as well as Samuel Pressman of Louisville, Alexander Weinberg of Cleveland and Joseph Balaban of New York.

It is deplorable that the example and methods of welfare work cannot be continued. In another connection I have outlined the program of welfare work as it might be applied to B'nai B'rith Clubs and lodges in our larger cities. But with the last man in camp discharged the activity of the Board ceases and the Jewish people of American credited with a service of humanity towards their kindred and fellowmen in keeping with the noble tradition of benevolence and brotherly love which has been the portion of the Jews in all ages.

SYNAGOGUES AS BARRACKS.

Reports from many towns and townlets on the attitude of the Russian Bolsheviki towards the Jews emphasizes the fact that the Bolshevik commanders invariably use the synagogues as barracks for the Red Guards, whereas the churches are spared. The synagogues are as a rule desecrated by the Guards, and the furniture and fittings are destroyed.

Peter Stuyvesant and the Jews

We all remember the fourth governor of New Amsterdam from our youthful story books and histories. Especially does he live in the recollection of those who read Washington Irving's scintillating Diedrich Knickerbocker's history of New York. Peter Stuyvesant, the patron and leader of the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam, Peter the Headstrong, Irving called him out of a profound sense of humor and proportion, who governed those subject to his jurisdiction for a long number of years with a strong hand and an iron will, whose stern features look out on the reader from this page, Peter Stuyvesant bore an intimate relation to the first Jews who came to New Netherlands.

This is not the place to enlarge on the life story of Stuyvesant for this can be gleaned from Irving's immortal book and from innumerable works of reference. Nor is it needful for us to make mention of the tree planted by the doughty Dutchman, which stood even within the memory of men now living in our city, nor to the old "bouwerie" which he occupied and which laid the foundation of the fortunes of his descendants through the rapid appreciation in the nineteenth century of the value of real estate in that section of New York.

Here we shall simply tell the story of Dutch New York, for which Stuyvesant during his governorship was a synonym, in so far as it affected the Jews.

These Jews had been driven out of Pernambuco, which is in Brazil, after that city and its surrounding district had been recaptured from the Dutch conquerers by the Portuguese who founded these. The recaptors had no use for the Jews domiciled there under the beneficent sway of the Dutch and drove them forth. These Jews had, therefore, no other alternative than to wander and they had been denuded of many, if not most, of their wordly goods. They left Pernambuco on short notice and repaired to various parts of the world. Some of them, to be exact—twenty-three in number, came northward and eventually reached New Amsterdam in the autumn of the year 1654. So poor had they been rendered through the success of the Portuguese beleaguering Pernambuco that they did not possess the means to pay for their passage from Brazil to New Netherlands. They, therefore, adopted the time-worn expedient of mortgaging their scanty possessions to the master of the vessel carrying them in order to reimburse the latter for their carriage.

It was undoubtedly their thought that Peter Stuyvesant, a Dutchman, would welcome them on their arrival at New Amsterdam in the same open-handed manner as had the Dutch possessors of Pernambuco. The Dutch were famed for their hospitality to the poor and the oppressed of all the earth even then already, in the seventeenth century. But, while reputations may be acquired and lost by nations and races, stray individuals may act in such a manner as to nullify the acquired and the lost reputation. Stuyvesant was thus an exception to the Dutch practice. He was cruel, rapacious and bigoted. He hated Jews as he despised Papists. He regarded both as a blight on any well-ordered settlement.

So instead of beholding Stuyvesant stretching out his hand in welcome to them on their arrival at New Amsterdam, these poor Jews from Pernambuco discovered a stern and unrelenting tyrant with none of the traditional hospitality. Indeed, so averse to receiving them was he, that he took immediate steps to have them removed from the colony. He did not order them forth into the unknown and untracked wilderness. He did not send them about their business to the next place of settlement, for such did not exist; and it would have been savagery of the worst dye for Stuyvesant to have condemned these human beings to proscription and exile of this sort.

Stuyvesant, therefore, proceeded to acquaint his superiors in the Dutch West Indies Company in Holland, which corporation owned and administered the settlement of New Netherlands, with the situation, meanwhile aiding to the full extent of his power the master of the vessel who pressed for the payment of his passage money in securing his due. Into the devious tangle of this litigation and the judicial procedure involved thereby we need not enter here. We simply content ourselves with narrating in brief form the successive steps of Stuyvesant's representations to his Dutch superiors concerning these immigrant Jews.

Accordingly we find that he wrote accounting for the arrival of these Jews and asking for instructions as to his disposition of them. He stated that he did not want them to remain. The immigrant Jews, however, did not hesitate to secure support at home for themselves in their unenviable position at New Amsterdam. They despatched a letter to their Portuguese co-religionists at the capital of Holland. The latter immediately took up the cudgels on their behalf. They presented a memorial to the Dutch West Indies Company, setting forth their participation in its affairs, the difficulties which had beset the poor Jews from Pernambuco, etc. They concluded with a reference to the well-known Dutch principles of asylum for the persecuted.

These representations had their due effect, for Stuyvesant's superiors took action thereon. They informed the doughty governor that the Jews who had come to New Amsterdam should be permitted to reside there and carry on their trading operations from thence, subject to the proviso, nevertheless, that the poor among them should not become a burden to the company or the community but be supported by their own nation. Thus the first settlers in the United States among the Jews secured a proper legitimation of their coming hither and only guaranteed to take appropriate care of their own poor. This provision was strictly in accord with Jewish principles, for the community has from time immemorial taken proper care of its own poor and afflicted, and not suffered these to fall to the care of non-Jews.

Stuyvesant was, therefore, compelled to permit the Jews who had come to his settlement to remain there. He did not submit cheerfully to this requirement of his superiors. He harassed the local Jews as much as he legitimately could, and laid, wherever possible, obstacles in their path. For this reason he is entitled to stand out in Jewish history as a Jew-baiter, who sought by all the means at his command to increase the difficulties which surrounded poor and persecuted strangers.

One of the disabilities under which Jews labored then and there was their immunity from military service, for which, however, they had to pay taxes. Thus the immunity was in reality a grievous disability. They could not watch the city like the other non-Jewish inhabitants, simply because they were Jews.

Asser Levy was not content to rest under the afflicting disability. He determined to assert his rights to mount guard like other burghers and refused to pay the tax levied against him on this head. Stuyvesant was not disposed to acknowledge his right, or to let this be tested again by recourse to his superiors in Holland. So he laid the facts in the case before the members of his council, which wisely determined to permit Asser Levy to do what the other burghers of the city did—to mount guard without let or hindrance and no longer to be subject to an amercement for this privilege.

Thus Asser Levy stands out as the foil to the irascible and pigheaded governor. He asserted and compelled the recognition of Jewish rights. He stood his ground manfully and forced Stuyvesant to admit that residents of a town who were there of right had the same privileges and were subject to the same requirements as any others. Asser Levy thus laid one of the foundation stones of American liberty, by which all citizens of the country, regardless of race, creed or previous condition of servitude, are subject to the same rights, privileges and immunities, and must share the same burdens of all other citizens.

In 1664 the Dutch rule of New Amsterdam fell before the advancing English and the place was rechristened New York, in honor of James, Duke of York, the brother of Charles II., king of Great Britain, the new proprietor. Stuyvesant's occupation was now gone. He was no longer able to wreck his vengeance on his Jewish fellow-citizens. He retired from public office to the alluring delights of private life and in secret nursed his grievance against Jews and Papists (the latter being equally the object of his dislike) without the power to do either of them any ill.

Today the country place of Peter Stuyvesant has been long since obliterated by the march of progress and the houses of a great city. The present Stuyvesant Square commemorates it and the bones of the anti-Semitic Dutch governor repose in the wall of the venerable Protestant Episcopal Church, known as St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, not very remote from the Stuyvesant "bouwerie".—Hebrew Standard.

There is the story told by Webster of the experienced mariner, who, having been tossed about on an unknown sea by hostile winds, at the first sign of calm and sunlight, examines his compass to ascertain where he is, and how far he has been driven from his chosen course.

Perhaps unconsciously a similar motive prompted the reception and dinner tendered to the president of District No. 1, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, Charles H. Shapiro, on Saturday evening, May 17.

The whole world has been in a turmoil and upset by the sudden display of barbarism and brutality in this so-called modern era of civilization. Every institution was affected; and when right finally tirumphed over might, and the forces of justice once more began to raise their heads to the sunlight, it seemed but natural that our Order should promptly consider the work that was before it and the opportunities for service to our fellow men that awaited attention.

The Yale Club of New York Cty, situated in the "frat" district, and being admittedly one of the spacious and beautiful clubs in the Metropolis, was selected by the committee as the appropriate scene for this memorable occasion.

At present there are sixteen living Past Presidents of District Grand Lodge No. 1, each one of whom is a Ben B'rith of the highest type and whose life is a noble inspiration to the youth of the country. Each responded to the invitation to be present, five, however, being unavoidably prevented from attending.

Hon. Simon M. Roeder, President in 1884-1885.

Hon. Joshua Kantrowitz, President in 1895-896.

Hon. Adolph Hirsh, President in 1897.

Hon. Charles Hartman, President in 1905-1906.

Hon. Adam Wiener, President in 1908.

Hon. Joseph H. Ullman, President in 1911.

Hon. Joseph Silverman, President in 1913-1914.

Hon. Herman Asher, President in 1915.

Hon. Abraham K. Cohen, President in 1916.

Hon. Joseph Rosenzweig, President in 1917.

Hon. Maurice P. Davidson, President in 1918.

Col. Henry Cutler, President in 1909-1910 was in Europe as head of the Jewish Welfare Board and cabled his regrets at his absence, tendering his co-operation in the plans and work contemplated this year.

Hon. Henry M. Goldfogle, President in 1892, a member of Congress, had planned to attend, but wrote from Washington that he was detained by an important conference preceding the convening of Congress.

Hon. Joseph E. Newburger, President in 1887, justice of the Supreme Court of New York, was obliged to be absent owing to illness and wrote an inspiring letter of co-operation for the development and promotion of the Order's work.

Hon. Morris Adler, President in 1888, likewise was prevented from attendance because of illness.

Hon. Charles M. Stern, President in 1912, was detained at Albany by an urgent conference and wrote assuring the officers of his readiness to be of service and of his interest in the Order.

This was not purely a district function. Our honored President of the Order, Adolf Kraus of Chicago, came to participate in the formation of plans, thus lending a national, or rather international atmosphere to the occasion.

Hon. Samuel Fleischman, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of the Order, and Joseph G. Shapiro, past president of Harmony Lodge of Bridgeport, Conn., were also present as invited guests.

Promptly at 7:30 in the beautiful council room of the club, the Past Presidents and invited guests assembled, to partake of the dinner, which opened the program for the evening.

Precedence, priority, seniority was notable for its absence. As our esteemed Brother, Charles Hartman of the Executive Committee, well said, "We are all Past Presidents, except Charles H. Shapiro, who now wears the crown, and not knowing whom to select to place at the head of the table, it occurs to me that I'll reluctantly take it, with the President of the Order on my right and the President of the District on my left, and if you will all take one of these large cigars—the Ullman brand—and just seat yourselves around the table—we'll begin."

Simeon Ford once said that most banquets are not really enjoyed because the speakers are disturbed and troubled about their addresses and constantly think of the talk rather than food, and the listeners worry whether they should remain after eating and consternation reigns supreme

But Brother Hartman, alert and energetic, intent on the success of the occasion, provided against this. Carefully before the guests seated themselves, he informed them that no speeches were to be made, except Brother President Shapiro would outline his ideas and plans, and Brother President Kraus would be invited to offer his valuable suggestions.

Our beloved and ever-youthful Brother Simon M. Roeder, who is our oldest living Past President, arrived a few minutes after this announcement, and as Joe Shapiro left the room to meet and escort him to the council room, he observed a quantity of torn paper under the festive table. It proved to be the remains of some thirteen extemporaneous addresses.

In the happy frame of mind, caused by Brother Hartman's announcement, the dinner was relished, and enjoyed by all.

After Brother President Shapiro outlined the activities of District No. 1 and the plans he proposed to follow in building up the membership, service and work ot his district, Brother President Kraus delivered an inspiring address reviewing the achievements of the Order since his incumbency. The members present were thrilled as deed after deed was recounted, redounding to the credit of Israel, actually inaugurated at the instance of our Order. And Brother Kraus' suggestions for the work that lay before the Order were timely and good.

As Brother Hartman introduced those present—in spite of his admonition—he eloquently referred to the notable achievements during each speaker's tenure of office, thus summing up a goodly portion of the past history of the district, and finally added the opportune suggestion that the deeds and activities of the Order should be freely and broadly made known, that our labors were not to be kept secret, but acting for the promotion of the welfare of Israel's highest ideals, we would receive greater co-operation and recognition by proper propaganda.

"District No. 1 has awakened from its apparent lethargy of many years, mainly through the efforts of Bro. Charles Hartman, our district's distinguished representative on the executive committee.

Horeb Lodge of New Haven, with its membership of 800, is pointing the way toward successful effort, to be emulated by all lodges. A new spirit of activity has arisen, and it seems to me that the duty devolves upon the executive committee at this, to my mind, the most crucial moment in the existence of our Order, to "come over the top" with propaganda that will appeal to our Jewish people and make them realize that our Order has a mission to perform, that there is reason for its existence, and that we are the proper leaders in the great struggle to attain the ideals enunciated in the preamble of our Order.

Mr. President Kraus, District No. 1, looks to you and the members of the executive committee to assist us in keeping alive the activity indicated; this can be accomplished only by earnest and sincere endeavor, and by your committee creating propaganda that carries conviction, and by assisting in its promulgation."

Bro. Herman Asher in part spoke as follows:

"No loyal member of this Order can fail to glory in its history. Not for a moment can we forget the splendid fountain of enthusiasm that springs from a consideration of what the Order has accomplished. And yet, the conclusion is unescapable, that to attract members and more especially to hold them, this Order cannot stop with a reference to what it has done, but should make known what it is now doing.

Unquestionably the work that the Anti-Defamation League is carrying on, is of tremendous importance and yet, the greater part of our membership and the outside community remain in ignorance or at least without adequate information of the concrete activities of such league.

The President of the Order and the Executive Committee have been and are now actively engaged in constructive policy regarding the international work of the Order, yet, it is not brought to any public attention. Here again, at least a measure of public information can and should be given out.

My opinion, therefore, Brother Kraus and gentlemen, is that organized, scientific publicity is an immediate need of our organization. We should have, first of all, present day activity and then publicity, which shall not be ultra-conservative, but the widest possible under the circumstances. When this is attained our present memmership will be vitalized with a real and deepened enthusiasm and our recruiting efforts will find a readier response."

Brother Joseph Rosenzweig spoke in substance as follows:

"Brother Kraus has been kind enough to state that he invited honest suggestion, and, indeed, criticism so far as he was concerned. I do feel that I am voicing the sentiment of all here when I say that so far as our Order is concerned, you have done much and valuable constructive work. You have to-night imparted to us valuable and interesting information. But by way of suggestion it does seem to me that our lodges should be more thoroughly taken into our confidence as to the great work that our Order is doing.

We have been discussing very largely the efforts being made to increase our membership, and we have seen flattering results and have been given hope of still greater achievements in that direction. However, a very serious matter in this regard is how are we going to keep our members. How shall we make our lodge meetings so attractive as to call for a greater attendance and preserve the interest and active co-operationship of the brethren. It may be said that this should be the business of the lodges. It may be said that the general committee of each district should work out to this problem. But I say that above all it should be the work of the executive body of the entire Order to see and insist that this be done.

Brother Hartman has made a suggestion that I say something about the Jewish Welfare Board and the connection of the members of the I. O. B. B. therewith. My four minutes are up and I can merely say in this connection that the I. O. B. B. is justified in saying that it has been in a large measure the backbone of the Jewish Welfare Board effort. Wherever the best results have been achieved you would be sure to find the I. O. B. B. or an I. O. B. B. man in back of the work."

Brother Fleischman joined with the others present in giving expression to the high appreciation in which President Kraus was held in District No. 1 for his earnest and zealous devotion to the interests of the Order and on behalf of the causes for which it stands. He referred to the great power of the Order as an international organization and its present exceptional opportunities for great usefulness in various directions.

He stated that it had been the hope that the Russian Revolution, which had broken the shackles for centuries binding millions of our co-religionists, would result in bringing full freedom and equal rights to all our people wheresoever located, and that the millions newly emancipated would be enabled to take their rightful part in the activities of the times and contribute their energies and abilities in solving the complex problems of our advancing civilization; that, in order that this hope may be realized, it was of the highest importance that guarantees should be secured—that in new nations to be created and existing states in southeastern Europe to be re-organized full and equal religious, civil and political rights would be granted to their Jewish inhabitants for all time, without discrimination as to race or creed; that if such assurances were not obtained now the nations referred to would have the power to pass discriminatory laws against our people; that if they should exercise this power and oppress and persecute our co-religionists any appeal for relief to the other nations or to the proposed League of Nations would be met with the claim of want of power to interfere on the ground that every nation is supreme within its own boundaries, and no nation may intervene in the internal affairs of another. We would thus be confronted with the same situation prevailing while our people were suffering under Russian persecutions. We could protest again and again, but would be helpless to bring the only relief of real value, i.e.: freedom and equality. That it is the imperative duty of our Order to exert its utmost power and influence to secure the inclusion of such guarantees in the peace treaties now being formulated in Europe; that it would be the duty of the Order to oppose any treaties creating new nations or giving recognition to existing nations now denying equal rights of citizenship to our people unless such guarantees were secured either in the treaties or by some other method equally binding; that in such opposition they would have the support of all right-minded people in this country and in all other civilized lands. That a peace which gave sanction in advance to the persecution of millions of innocent people was not a righteous peace and could not endure. That pogroms were the logical consequence of laws degrading a people and setting them apart as an inferior class in the body politic. If the Jewish people in eastern and southeastern Europe be freed from discrimination and oppression and accorded full equality, the causes of friction between them and their fellow citizens will soon disappear. That America and all other nati[illegible] injuriously affected by the[illegible] in foreign lands in the pa[illegible] suffer therefrom as long as [illegible] are tolerated. It was to th[illegible] civilization to see to it that th[illegible] persecution of the Jews be now finally terminated. He urged that the Order give the subject full consideration and prompt and active attention, expressing the conviction that in its championship of right it would receive universal support.

Brother Fleischman also made reference to Palestine. He said that after peace shall have been re-established, there is no doubt but that there will be a large and continuous influx of Jews and Jewish capital into Palestine, regardless of what disposition be made of that land. What may be done by our people there will reflect upon the Jewish name and affect the status of our people in all other lands. He, therefore, urged that the Order should not be a mere spectator, but should strive for a wise solution of the many difficult questions certain to arise, and to that end should earnestly co-operate with our brethren in Palestine, aiding them in the development of the people and the country.

Bro. Judge A. K. Cohen, addressed the gathering in part as follows:

Brother President:

Your statement of what the Order has done during the last three years, as well as what it is now doing and proposes to do, is so vital that it clearly points out what I believe has been one of the shortcomings of the executive committee. You say that you believe that publicity ought to be given only when matters have been brought to a successful conclusion. I believe that in many respects this is right, but you must remember that this is not the order of the day. In these times every organization it seems rushes into the public press with statements calculated to appeal to the public and to win their sympathy and co-operation. The objects which they set forth that they are trying to accomplish are fundamentally such as appeal to the common fairness of mankind and arouse particularly in our co-religionists a tremendous response. The mass of the people does not stop to think as to whether or not the particular object may be successfully accomplished or whether it is the best way to bring about the most satisfactory results. They are interested with plans for the solution of a problem which ought to be disposed of to their satisfaction, and that is the one thing that appeals to them. You have been doing great work, but you cannot hide your light under a bushel and expect others to see it. You and your executive committee know what you have been doing, but you are the only ones that know it. You owe it to yourselves and to the general committees of the districts and to the members of the Order at large to keep them fully informed as to just what you have done, are doing and contemplate doing. This would arouse great interest in the lodges. A statement from the executive committee once every two months or so from you on these points would cause great interest and provoke discussion and much good may come of it. It would stimulate interest in the lodges; it would keep the members acquainted with what is going on, cause discussion in the lodge room, etc., all of which tends to make a lodge a live institution. I regard the Anti-Defamation League as one of the best concrete accomplishments of the Order. It has done and is doing a noble work and what is more the results of its labors, the delicate and tactful manner in which it handles the matters put up to it are not only resulting to the benefit of Jews in general, but has won much favorable recognition at the hands of Jews and non-Jews alike.

Now, Brother President, let me urge you to see that publicity is given to what has been done and is given constantly to what you are doing. Unless you do that, you permit the public to believe that the B'nai B'rith has been asleep during this unusual course of events and that other organizations have been alive to conditions and have taken steps for the benefit of their brother Jews. This is not the fact, but you cannot blame the public if it takes that view, simply because the executive committee has failed to keep the public informed of that which it is entitled to know. If you have matters that are confidential and cannot be given out, that confidence must be respected, but such as are not confidential should be given broadest publicity.

Conclusion.

The remarks of the remaining speakers pointed out the important position of our Order enabling it to further the interests of our co-religionists at the present time.

Broader activities and opportunities were discussed and when the meeting had adjourned after the wee small hours and our brethren accompanied the President of the Order to the Hotel Astor, the evening had turned into morning and the Brethren saw that the work of the day "was good" and

EARTHLY AND HEAVENLY

By Dr. Max L. Margolis

(Written for the B'nai B'rith News.)

The other day. while holding onto a strap in a crowded street car, I could not help looking into a book which a lady was reading with sustained attention. I did not get the title, but it was not a novel. In parallel columns there were printed in juxtaposition texts from the Old Testament and the New. and from one sentence below I gathered that the purpose was to contrast the points of view of the two sets of Scriptures. The Jew was not painted exactly as a bad man, but his outlook on life was evidently an inferior one, for whereas the Christian pinned his faith on things heavenly and on Heaven as a goal, the Jew concerned himself with things earthly and was satisfied with earthly blessings. The charge is an old one. For one thing there is this fallacy that the uninformed Christian disregards the blank page between the two divisions of his Bible. But that page might be covered with a literature. It goes by the name of apocryphal. The name means hidden, but the term connoted such writings as might be read in private and were withdrawn from public use in the lessons or lections of the church. The hidden writings partook of a lesser sanctity, or, as the case might be, were deemed too sacred to be perused anywhere except in the most intimate circles of the initiated. They might be termed the "journal intime" of the Almighty, a record of His secrets into which only the fewest might be admitted. In them there was much converse with angels and other intermediaries, veiled language pictures of the scenes to be enacted in the end of days, when wickedness would be rampant and redemption nearest, coming as it were in the twinkle of an eye, when you least expected it, amidst miraculous manifestations of the divine power. These writings, though they did not obtain the official sanction of the church, were read and copied eagerly and translated into various tongues, so that some of them have come down to us in secondary or tertiary documents. But whence did all this literature come? It is acknowledged as Jewish productions, fashioned long before the new faith was born. Whether the founder was of that particular sect which treasured those writings and studied them, or whether his own bent of mind led him to immerse himself in these fascinatingly mysterious revelations, it is clear that the Gospels, not to speak of the other parts of the New Testament, cannot be properly understood if you just quit the last verse of Malachi for the first of Matthew. For to understand means to view a thing in its proper setting. Between Malachi and Matthew some four or five centuries intervened. Judaism in the interval grew, developed, took on shapes, met new problems, absorbed and assimilated much that was outlandish. Take, for example, the belief in resurrection, the rising of the dead to life eternal. Without that belief the whole of the Gospels is meaningless and Christianity as historically developed unthinkable. For the founder is merely the first-fruits of the resurrection. In his case the miracle happens a little sooner —Christian mankind counts nineteen centuries since that event, when an empty grave was opened in Jerusalem —than for the rest of mankind. A miracle it is, whether it happens to one or the other. A miracle it is designated in our Prayer Book, in the second benediction of the eighteen. Has it ever occurred to any one how thoroughly Scriptural, rooted in the ideas of the Jewish Scripture, the Old Testament of Christendom, and steeped in their very language is the first, while the second is largely post-biblical? For the one has for its theme national deliverance brought to the children's children by virtue of the piety of the fathers, while in the other we are face to face with the salvation of the individual mortal as the miraculous power of the Deity raises him to life eternal out of the dust. Now we may remember that the question of the resurrection was an issue between the Pharisees and their opponents, the Sadducees. In other words, the Gospels rest on Pharisaic Judaism. It is true, the Pharisees are denounced by Jesus as hypocrites and quite terrible people. We know the dictionary meaning of the word. But then no quarrel is as bitter as among friends. The upshot of all this is simply the reminder to the Christian that his Scriptures, the New Testament, are merely part of the average Judaism of the time, and that as a matter of fact the things taught and the things narrated might readily be of the character of average Judaism. Of course, there is, even in the Gospels, an element which transcends Judaism, which indeed the guardians of the Judaism of the time in question could not possibly accept. For the tragedy which led to the handing over of Jesus to the Roman governor and because of which my daughter in a public school is dubbed by her Christian classmates a "Christ-Killer," refuses to become intelligible if the teacher, who counted just a few faithful adherents of both sexes, had not by some exaggerated phrase placed himself outside the Orthodox fold by arrogating to himself a position of equality with God the Father. And yet few know how elastic Judaism was then, and how tolerant up to a certain point. A Gamaliel looked mildly upon those enthusiasts who called themselves Nazarenes, followers of the Nazarene. Still later, Rabbi Eliezer was much taken with their teachings. We do not have to descend to later-day Kabbalah, to the Zohar, the Bible of the Kabbalists, to see how much which is near-Christianity may be tolerated in Judaism. And the hidden writings of which I spoke above, are really the beginnings of the Kabbalah. Man would peer behind the veil. All of us like the mysterious, even when bordering on puerilities. To know how the world was made and how it will end, how the souls were fashioned and how they will return to their bodies, is of absorbing interest. The Jew knows himself a citizen of heaven quite as much as the Christian. Let parallel texts be adduced from the hidden writings, and for that matter from the rich lore in Talmud and Midrash, and the contrast between the Jewish mental attitude and the Christian would fall to the ground. I wonder whether a popular work of this kind might not be prepared by us Jews, just for self-defense. Perhaps that then much of the wall that is artificially built up between Jew and Christian will crumble away. Not that I believe that Gentile antipathy to the Jew rests solely on ancient misunderstandings. But a good deal of it does. And who would not live in peace with his neighbors?

Still the contrast exists, if the leap is made from Malachi to Matthew. It is significant that our Jewish Scriptures, that is, the Old Testament in the Jewish order, ends not with Malachi, which is somewhere in the middle, but with Chronicles, and the last word in our Bible is "let him go up", go up, return to Palestine, the very thing that is on the lips and on the minds of Jewry today as breathlessly we wait for the message, this time from Paris instead of from the court of Cyrus at Babylon, that will open up the land to Jewish settlement and to the creation of a Jewish home. But turn from any page of the Old Testament to the New, and the contrast will be then the contrast between an earlier phase of our faith and a later one. It is not a question of superior or inferior, for that depends upon the point of view, and in a sense modern religion is much nearer to the faith of the Scriptures than to that of latter-day Judaism in which the Gospels had their origin. There is even a tendency nowadays to overestimate the social side of religion, and to regard individual religion, which centers in the question of what is going to happen to me, as a sort of self-pampering and self-cult. Undoubtedly in the days of the prophets the man in the streets of Jerusalem was quite as much interested in his own fate as his latter-day descendant. Very likely people then also believed in ghosts and maladies due to "possession" and in healings, and so forth. But the folk religion is submerged. It is sovereignly brushed aside. The plane is indeed a higher one. The individual is lifted above himself and taught to merge his salvation in that of his kind. The species counts, be it the nation or humankind. Man's days are few in number, but Israel lives forever. And a nation to thrive, aye, mankind to prosper, even spiritually, must have a material basis, expressed in earthly blessings. But are the blessings in the Scriptures so earthly? Yes, the land is to be fruitful, enjoy rich harvests when the rain comes in due season, above all, enjoy peace. The land must have governors, judges, ministers at the sanctuary. It must have just laws. But that is not all. The Scriptures address themselves to a sinful people, or rather, the word of prophet and psalmist evokes in it the consciousness of sin. It stirs to self-searching, to penitence. It will have nothing short of single-hearted devotion, the love of God, which is the true expression of monotheism. It then pictures to the penitent people an outlook into a regenerated order of society with universal peace among nations, when war is no more. It is the Gospel of the poor. For under the reign of justice there can be no longer any poverty. The sovereignties as they exist are of man's making. There is but One Sovereign. The Kingdom of God on earth, the Kingdom of God brought down from its heavenly store, that is the hope and outlook of the Jewish Scriptures. For the living, not for the dead. For a real world, not a ghostly one. But as an ideal it is supramundane. The Kingdom of God means an order when God's sovereignty is acknowledged, not by lip protestation, or by reciting a creed, or declaiming a prayer, but by deeds, by a government built on justice and peace and love. Reverently the Jew spoke of God as Heaven, and of the Kingdom of God as the Kingdom of Heaven. But he did not mean anything transcending the earth. The new earth and the new heaven are figures of speech. What is meant is a new order of things on earth, which is God's, who made it and founded it upon the waters. And He made man to live upon the earth. And slowly, through His prophets and teachers and great and farsighted statesmen, He educates them, away from savagery and preying upon each other, to the ultimate reign of justice when proper relations shall obtain between men and men, and between one class of men and another. This hope we call the Messianic. For, in the language of Maimonides, which is the language of Scriptures, the King the Messiah will usher in that reign of justice and security and the higher spiritual unfoldment, for which all teachers and all churches in the past have paved the way. The highest expression of man's faith and of Judaism is not in the second. but in the first benediction. And Christians repeat after their master, Thy Kingdom come. Come from heaven, if you please, to earth, speedily in our days, as we say in the Kaddish prayer.

CERTAIN JEWISH PROBLEM IS TO BE SOLVED BY PEACE CONFERENCE.

Judge Mack, Envoy to Paris of Zionists, American Jewish Congress, Returns With Assurances That Jewish Minorities in East Europe Will Receive Civil, Religious and Political Guarantees.

JEWISH COMMONWEALTH TO BE FOUNDED.

Says Zionist Aspirations Are to Be Gratified and Calls on All Jews to Join in Historic Task.

Assurances that the Peace Conference will solve the Jewish problem in East Europe, and at the same time gratify the aspiration for the establishment in Palestine of a National Jewish Homeland, are contained in a statement issued by Judge Julian W. Mack, President of the Zionist Organization of America, who returned from Europe yesterday. Judge Mack, who was sent to Europe by the American Jewish Congress, of which he is chairman, was in Paris elected head of a committee comprising all the democratically chosen Jewish delegations to the Peace Conference. This committee, through Mr. Louis Marshall and Judge Mack, presented to the "Big Four" a memorandum setting forth Jewish conditions in Poland and Roumania, and the demands of the Jewish people for civil, political and religious rights as national minorities in the new and enlarged states to be created by the Peace Treaties.

"When I left Paris on May 18, our government, as well as some of the associated powers, was investigating the terrible pogroms which have been taking place not only in Poland, but in other countries in the East. Authentic information confirms all that was reported at the great mass-meeting here in New York May 21. Denials are worse than useless; they only emphasize the facts and the intentional suppression of the truth. The Pinsk affair was worse than the ordinary pogrom; a military commander whom Henry Brailsford, the distinguished English publicist, had aptly characterized a month before this event, as utterly unreliable and anti-semitic executed thirty-seven young men without any trial on the mere and ungrounded suspicion that they were Bolshevists. Since my departure, Mr. Louis Marshall has presented the whole story of this and other outrages in a personal interview to President Wilson, who has the pogrom situation under serious consideration in all of its aspects.

"These frightful atrocities but emphasize the need of international protection of those minorities in the new and enlarged states of Eastern Europe which, to quote the phrase of the proposed peace treaty, "differ from the majority in race, language, or religion." The delegation sent by the American Jewish Congress to Paris was charged with the duty of endeavoring to secure for the national minorities in those states equal and equitable rights for every individual within the state, justly entitled thereto, regardless of race or religion. For the Jews, individually and collectively, no more but no less was asked than for the others.

"The delegation has worked in thorough co-operation and unison with similar delegation from Eastern Jewry; a common platform was adopted: because of the preponderating influence of President Wilson in Councils of Conference, the burden of securing the adoption of the program in the treaty, fell primarily upon the American delegates. To the ability and tireless energy of Louis Marshall, above all others, is due the results that will be perpetuated in the several peace treaties. I am confident that these will secure:

"First: full and complete emancipation, equality and citizenship for the Jew without the possibility of misinterpretation and evasion such as characterized Roumania's dealings under the treaty of Berlin; citizenship will be conferred en bloc, in and by the treaty itself.

"Second: a guarantee for all citizens of those equal civil, religious and political rights that are fundamental in every enlightened state.

"Third: protection of the minority groups' rights in the use of their language, in the establishment and maintenance of their schools and their other religious and social institutions, with equitable or proportionate sharing in the public funds devoted to such purposes.

"Fourth: the international character of these obligations will be recognized, and jurisdiction for their enforcement and protection will be conferred upon the League of Nations.

"The other important task with which the delegation was charged was that of aiding to realize the Balfour Declaration, favoring the creation in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people. The Zionist World Organization had this matter so well in hand and American Jewry had been so well represented in the formation of the proposals by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and Mr. Jacob de Haas, whose work has been most ably continued by Felix Frankfurter and others, that the delegation as a whole could devote itself primarily to East European problems.

"Zionist leaders, Dr. Chaim Weizman and Messrs Sokolow and Ushishkin, had presented the proposals in respect to Palestine before the arrival of the American Congress Delegation; they were most favorably received; and as they aimed to carry out the declaration endorsed not only by the other Allied Nations, but most sympathetically and warmly approved by President Wilson, there is no doubt of their eventual adoption. Under Great Britain, acting as mandatory of the League of Nations, the foundations will be laid in Palestine for the national Jewish homeland, and for the eventual creation there of an autonomous commonwealth. Every opportunity will there be given for a nucleus of the Jewish people to re-establish itself and to develop for the benefit of all mankind the latent capacities of the Jewish people. There will be no dearth of pioneers eager to lead in this great establishment, but immigration must be gradual; hand in hand must go the preparation of the land for the people.

The creation of this Jewish homeland will, of course, be carried out without prejudice to the rights of the non-Jewish communities, nor will it have an effect upon the political status of Jews, citizens of other lands. But upon the Jews of every land will devolve the privilege and the obligation of aiding their kindred in race and faith to make Palestine again the land "flowing with milk and honey," capable of supporting a population of several millions. Once the question of Palestine's destiny is settled, as it will be at the Peace Conference, it is to be hoped that every Jew, whatever his attitude may have been as to the desirability of the Zionist aims, will be proud to join in this historic task.

RUMANIAN POLITICS.

A Rumanian correspondent informs us that immediately after the signing of peace a new cabinet will be formed in Rumania. It will be headed by M. Maniu and M. Take Jonescu, both of them philo-Jews, and that a favorable solution of the Jewish question was to be expected from such a cabinet.

Sketches of Modern Jewish History

By Gotthard Deutsch

XVIII.

From the July Revolution (1830) to the February Revolution.

The development of slow bargaining with reaction until its final surrender in 1848 took in Prussia a turn considerably different from that of the South German states. In the latter the policy was based on the principle of strengthening the internal administration of Jewish affairs by public authority in the hope of thus encouraging the liberal element and of undermining by its aid the solidarity of Judaism. In Prussia just the opposite policy was adopted. The cohesion of the Jews was to be weakened by withholding from their communal organs all recognition by the state and by discouraging all attempts at harmonizing Jewish traditions with the requirements of the changed conditions of life.

The object is plain. All movements which we call reform are an endeavor to maintain Judaism. The public recognition of Judaism as a church in whose existence the state takes an interest tends to make the Jew socially respectable. Both objects must be discouraged, for Prussian officialdom, as Councillor Staegeman said in 1819 on the occasion of the Hep-Hep riots, wants Judaism to disappear and was sure that this would be the case within fifty years, were it not for the narrow policy of the free cities. While in Baden an "Oberrat" in Wuertemberg a "Kirchenrat" was created, while in the small Turingian states "Landrabbiners" were salaried by the state, a Prussian edict of April 24, 1821, declared that rabbis are not ministers in the sense of the law, and King Frederick William III. expressed his indignation in three orders, issued Feb. 24, 1822, against some officials who had attended a confirmation in Landsberg, A. W., then a novelty, for having "violated common decency and Christian morals."

Junkerdom was openly unsympathetic to the Jews, but it was efficient and honest. The Hep-Hep movement with its rowdy acts was kept from Prussia, and the law, issued in 1812, which guaranteed to the Jews full civic equality and gave them municipal franchise, remained in force with one exception. Sections 7 and 8, which opened to the Jews teaching positions in the universities, were abrogated by a royal order of Aug. 18, 1822. The reason was that Eduard Gans (1798-1839) applied for admission as lecturer on Roman law, and the king apprehending a repetition of such an inconvenient reminder of Prussian laws being treated as scraps of paper, made short work of it and repealed the provision.

The personal element plays naturally an important part in a state with strong monarchial institutions. Frederick William III. (1797-1840) was a narrow minded autocrat who might have made a very good registry clerk in a county office. His son and successor, Frederick William IV. (1840-1861) was a brilliant man, witty, well-read, with a good knowledge of the Bible, a romanticist, very fond of hearing himself talk in public, in this respect quite different from his father, and the exact prototype of his grand-nephew, the late kaiser. The change of rulers in the midst of this period is a matter of considerable importance in the history of the Jews of Prussia. In the main ideas of government the two kings held the same principles. The state was to be Christian, monarchial and aristocratic, supported by strong paternalism, regulating all public activities by bureaucratic supervision. In such a state the Jews could be but a tolerated class though official legislation had abrogated the term of "Schutzjuden" and its most oppressive restriction. The most obvious working of this principle was the exclusion of the Jews from public office and especially from military authority. During the "Wars of Liberation," 1813-1815, a few Jews had reached the rank of officers. Whether by accident or by force of circumstances, only one remained in active service after the war. Meno Burg, 1789-1853, had entered the army as volunteer and distinguished himself by his mathematical talent in the artillery so that he attracted the attention of Prince August, his commanding general, a cousin of the king, who urged his promotion to the captaincy. Fredrick William III. was inclined to grant the promotion, but remarked—these are his own words in a letter dated Dec. 6, 1830—that since Lieutenant Burg is such an excellent officer, he surely must be convinced of the superiority of Christianity over Judaism. Burg was not, and the king finally yielded. Burg rose to the rank of major, being the only Jew who—up to the beginning of the world war—rose to such rank in the Prussian army.

The same reactionary principle was constantly being enacted in all rulings on public offices. The edict of 1812 gave to the Jews municipal franchise. This remained in force, but a revised law on municipal administration, March 17, 1831, declared that a Jew could not be mayor. The liberal legislation of Stein and Hardenberg had still maintained some of the prerogatives of the squires, as their right to appoint the judges of the courts of the first instance. A Jew by the law of 1812 could be a landed estate owner but could not exercise any judicial function, as the minister of the interior declared in an order of April 25, 1831. While military service was compulsory since 1812, an order of the ministry, issued April 17, 1832, excluded the Jewish recruit from serving in the royal guards, probably because the Junkers who formed the officer's staff of this elite corps considered it beneath their dignity to drill Jewish recruits. A royal order of April 29, 1835, excluded Jews from the position of "schiedsmann". The law provided that in order to protect the poor from against excessive cost of litigation honorary arbitrators should be appointed to whom minor cases of assault and civil suits concerning small amounts should be assigned. A Jew was to be excluded from such a position, for in this as in the other cases quoted the medieval principle, dating back to the Roman Emperor Theodosius (380), should prevail that a Jew should not have authority over a Christian. Partly for this reason, but probably more from the viewpoint of the Christian state teaching positions in public schools were denied to Jews. The minister of education ordered Aug. 30, 1836, that candidates for a teacher's certificate in secondary schools should be informed before taking their examination that they cannot be admitted to the required year of practice teaching, and of course are not eligible for a regular position. This order remained in force until 1870, though with the modification that the candidate should be admitted to practice teaching. The guiding idea was that the schools must be Christian, and even within Christianity denominational.

There was one tangible improvement during this period of reaction in the case of the Jews, living in the province of Posen, the part of Poland annexed to Prussia. Here the principle that the existing laws should remain in force pending a revision of the whole legislation on the Jews, could not be carried out. It was too reactionary even for Prussian officials, and its remnants of old Polish anarchy could not be harmonized with the Prussian sense of order. A new law, issued June 1, 1833, established a distinction between naturalized and tolerated Jews. All those who possessed secular education, practiced a mechanical trade, engaged in agriculture or in professions belonged to the first-class and enjoyed the privileges of the Jews of old Prussia, all others were tolerated. The latter were not subject to military service but had the privilege to serve as volunteers. There were numerous difficulties to be settled. Some cities had from Polish times special privileges which allowed them to keep all Jews out. Such a city was Bromberg. The king gave in such cases contradictory orders and harmonized them usually by a compromise which confirmed the status quo but declared the law should be enforced in future. More important was the regulation of the congregational finances. Most Polish congregations were overburdened with debts. The kings, puppets in the hands of the nobility, and the Catholic clergy were in the habit of awarding gifts of money to these two classes as a sign of their grace. The cheapest way was to make the Jews foot the bill. If the king had e.g. the desire to show his kindness to the abbot of a monastery or to the provost of a cathedral, he ordered the local Jewish community to pay him the sum of 10,000 florins. Inasmuch as even Jews could not always raise any sum that was imposed upon them, the abbot accepted a note with the stipulation of an annual interest, and when, as often was the case, even the interest payments could not be met, another note with higher interest obligations was written. The Jews, supposed to be financial geniuses and past masters in exploitations were mercilessly exploited by their Polish masters, from whom they had learned the habit of shiftlessness. The Prussian administration created order by arranging the financial affairs of every community. But with the new law, allowing to the naturalized Jews freedom of movement, and this element being the most progressive and prosperous, there was a grave apprehension felt for the remaining class, and an order, issued May 20, 1837, imposed upon any Jew who left the province a settlement equal to the capitalization of his dues or twelve and a half times the amount that he had paid per annum during the last six years.

The legal improvement in the condition of the Jews of the Polish provinces and especially the reward held out to those who acquired secular education and engaged in constructive work, doing what the statesmen in South German states called "drawing near to us in manners and sentiments," would indicate the desire of Prussia to assist in the assimilation of the Jews. Yet this was not fully the case. An order of the king amended the naturalization law to the effect that in adopting both given and family names the Jews should not select such that differed from those in use previously. This order, published Dec. 22, 1833, an improvement on one issued previously, which prohibited the assumption of "Christian" names, created again a great deal of confusion, and soon lapsed into oblivion. The only possible reason which we can find for such an order was the king's desire to prevent the camouflage of a Witkowski into a Maximilian Harden. Similar was the motive for the royal order of 1836 which prohibited the use of the euphemism "mosaisch" for "juedisch" in official documents. While recently some obscure individual in this country started a movement looking towards substituting the name Jew by another one that would smell sweeter, it is fair to assume that the great majority of the Jews of today see no reason for apologizing for their being Jews. In 1836 some felt differently, and Joel Wolf Meyer, a leading member of the Berlin congregation, whose son, Councillor Siegmund Meyer (1830-1903), was also for years president of the Berlin congregation, complained in a personal letter to the king of this insult, pointing to the advantage which the Prussian state had derived from his industrial establishments and to the patriotism of the Jews in general. The king found it advisable to send a courteous reply. He had not intended an insult to the Jews, but merely insisted on the use of the only legal term in official life in order to avoid confusion. It was something which Frederick the Great would not have done, but the true intentions of Frederick William III are revealed in a letter which Alexander von Humboldt wrote a few weeks later, Sept. 12, 1836, to Frau von Wolzogen, the well known authoress and sister-in-law of Friedrich Schiller, that he was deeply depressed by the state of political affairs, and especially by the unfairness (Haerten) in the attitude towards "our fellow citizens of the Mosaic faith". He intimates that this is a small matter, but in strong contradiction with the ideals of his youth.

Such sentiments were rather exceptional for a man of Humboldt's class, who by education and environment belonged to the aristocratic and bureaucratic caste which controlled Prussian affairs. Encouraged by the aversion of the king to "our Mosaic fellow citizens", some ambitious petty officials addressed official communications to Jewish citizens in eighteenth century style, writing to "the Jewish merchant, Abraham, etc". Abraham Muhr (1789-1847), a sort of old-fashioned "shtadlan", protested against this studied insult, and the minister von Muehler, the very same reactionary who ordered that every candidate for a teacher's certificate be warned that he could never expect an appointment, issued this time (Oct. 13, 1836) a circular to all subordinate officials that such an address was improper. It is amusing to learn that nearly fifty years later in the adolescent stage of modern antisemitism, in 1882, military authorities had to be informed that to address a communication to a Jew as "the Jewish soldier" was contrary to a law of 1836. It was simply a tradition. The conceit of his own superiority was bred in the Prussian official. The people in his eyes consisted of groups arranged in grades, the military and bureaucratic class forming the highest stratum with his majesty crowning the edifice. We can see it in such typical instances as that of privy councillor, Karl Streckfuss (1778-1844), a poet of merit, and especially prominent as translator of Italian poetry into German. One would imagine that a man who translated Dante and Ariosto into German verse had emancipated himself from the narrow prejudice of a Prussian official. Yet Streckfuss wrote in 1833 a pamphlet on the Jews in the state of Prussia which opposed the granting of political rights to the Jews on the ground of the stale argument that their religious prejudices, the strict Sabbath observance, the belief in the coming of the Messiah and their low ritualistic conception of religion make them unfit for citizenship. The arguments of this author were met by vigorous refutations on the part of Gabriel Riesser, the statesman, and Isaac M. Jost, the historian, which did not prevent their repetition in a modified form ten years later.

It is a subject of contention today, whether antisemitism is fundamentally religious prejudice, or whether the latter is merely the moral pretense that even the most depraved need as a cover of their wickedness, just as Nicholas I and Alexander II, the persecutors of the Jews and oppressors of Roman Catholicism, drew their swords in defense of religious liberty, and as their worthy successor, Nicholas II, whose tottering throne had for decades been upheld solely by Cossacks, entered the war to make an end of militarism. It may be that all that pietistic talk about the Christian fundaments of morality and social order was a conscious or unconscious pretense, but it was carried out consistently. The minister ruled in an order of Dec. 28, 1833, that Christians can not convert to Judaism without the consent of the ecclesiastic authorities, and the king in an order of Dec. 21, 1834, prohibited such conversion altogether. It was but consistent that the king declared that the exemption from certain taxes granted to churches did not apply to synagogues, Dec. 8, 1839. One should imagine that if the synagogue is not a church it could not possess any privileges, but the minister of public worship ruled in 1840 that on the ground of Frederick II "General Reglement of 1750" Jewish services may not be held outside of the synagogue. This decision was provoked by an attempt to establish a reform service in a hall which was against the principle promulgated by Frederick William III in his cabinet's order of Dec. 9, 1823, that Jewish services must be held in the traditional manner.

The king died June 7, 1840. Shortly before his death a little incident occurred which demonstrated the absolute need of a revision of the legal status of the Jews. A widow in Posen married a Jew of Berlin. Her first husband belonged to the class of "tolerated" Jews who did not possess the privilege of freedom of residence. By her second marriage the widow acquired this right, but the police of Berlin ruled that this right did not extend to her child, a little girl, of her first marriage, and ordered the girl to leave Berlin. The minister upon appeal righted this barbarity in an order of May 26.

When the new king came to the throne, his reputation as a man of progressive ideas kindled hopes for an improvement. He said indeed to a committee of the Berlin congregation that waited on him, July 17: "I am not a believer in the blind prejudices of former centuries", but upon his coronation in Koenigsberg the representatives of the Jewish congregation who were admitted were not sworn like the other "states". The king, fond of speechmaking, as already stated, stepped forward after receiving the homage of his faithful subjects, and announced in the words of Joshua (24, 15), "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord". The congregation of Berlin soon learned that the king intended to maintain the manner in which the house of Hohenzollern served the Lord. They asked for the royal confirmation of the chief rabbi to be elected, but the minister informed them, Nov. 3, 1840, that this could not be done, as the "hoechstseliger" king had in his order of Feb. 14, 1823, declared that rabbis are not ministers of religion in the sense of the law.

JEWS FURNISHED 5 PER CENT OF WAR FORCES.

The American Jewish War Records Committee estimates that 200,000 Jews saw service with the American army or navy—or 5 per cent of the war forces. What a splendid showing this is can be realized when it is understood the proportion of Jews in the United States to the total population is only about 3 per cent. Four hundred citations for bravery already have been listed. The largest centers of Jewish population, of course, supply the greatest number of Jews to the service. New York state and city supplied more than one-third of all those listed up to the present time—the total for the state standing now at 26,866, of which 22,210 were from New York City.

THE DIASPORA

Monthly Review of Events in the Jewish World

By Gotthard Deutsch

At this moment when every day, and even every hour, may overthrow all that we consider an established fact, it is an exceedingly risky undertaking to record the reports received under the still abnormal conditions of mail and telegraph service. The writer is reminded of the fine story told of Moses in the Midrash (Tanhuma, Num. 3, 15, ed. Buber, p. 17): When God ordered Moses to count all the Levites, Moses remonstrated, saying: "How can I do this task singlehandedly?" But God said: "You do your part and I shall do mine." The chronicler of Israel's tribulations at this critical hour will have to assign to the Almighty the main part of the task.

THE CRY OF OUR BROTHER'S BLOOD.

The war of Thirty Years created the phase of Bohemian villages for unknown places. This war seems destined to substitute "towns in Poland" for the same idea. Besides better known cities, like Tarnopol, Lemberg, Warsaw, Lublin, we hear of Kolbuszow, Rzeszow, Selez, Rushony, etc. It is always the same monotonous story of murder and pillage. The details are so horrible that it seems cruel to inflict them on the reader who is bound to become callous when he reads the same story of bestiality over again, even if it were with some variations, as that in Rushony, thirteen Jews, going to synagogue, were arrested as Bolsheviki on the testimony of a Catholic priest, stood against the wall and executed. Meir Simhah Kohen, rabbi of Dwinsk, a man of 66, an old-fashioned Polish rabbi who lived the life of a recluse, devoted to study and religious practice, was shot dead in the street, probably as a matter of sport.

Aghion School, Alexandria.

The story of Wilna and Lida is more individualistic. Wilna is the capital of Lithuania, but the Poles claim it, for the wreckage business in territories is now booming. They took the city on April 18 and went for the Jews. What would Polish victories be, if they were not drunk in Jewish blood? The details are unknown. They were probably exaggerated in the first reports, as always is the case. Some reports spoke of 2,200 killed and of 10,000 exiled. Another report reduced the number of killed to 200 and the exiled to 3,000. The latest reports state the Hebra Kaddisha buried 55 victims, all of them children at the ages of 10 to 12 and old people from 58 to 72. It is known, however, that the Poles buried numerous victims on the wayside where they happened to fall on their march from Lida to Wilna. They believe in economy. One, Meir Steinman, was compelled to dig his own grave before he was shot, but occasionally they value inspiration higher than economy, and so the body of Lena Wasserman, a young girl, was left unburied for four days, and the soldiers, passing by and viewing it, spat on the corpse to draw inspiration for new acts of heroism. The Yiddish writer, A. Weiter, was shot dead, and two other writers, Jafeh and Niger, were exiled, but afterwards liberated on the intercession of English consular officers. Publicity was to be prevented, but for the death of Weiter the convenient excuse was given that the soldiers had been fired upon from his house. The wanton murder of 35—some say 56—Jews in Pinsk by a major of the regular army can no more be denied, but publicity is still to be prevented, and General Listowski, who sent a commission to the place to make a show of investigation, would not issue passports to newspapermen. Lemberg and Warsaw had also some new samples of Polish chivalry May 4 and 12, but details are still missing. Dr. Tobias Ashkenazi, vice-mayor of Lemberg, when Galicia was still under the Hapsburgs, was threatened with violence because he gave information on the above-mentioned chivalry to foreign commissions and newspapermen which his fellow-citizens declare a treacherous act, inasmuch as pogroms are a strictly internal Polish affair. The time-honored list of Jewish atrocities was increased by General Listowski, who may claim patent rights on his story that the soldiers were provoked by the fact that the Jews purposely sent to the camps prostitutes afflicted with contagious diseases. Innocent little sports like pulling tufts of hair out of the beards of Jews passing through the street, though occasionally a piece of skin goes along, cannot be taken so seriously, nor would one wonder at the discharge of 600 railroad men who were taken into the service during the German administration. "Svuj ksvemu", or something like it, is the Polish version of fair play for everybody.

THE MALIGNED WOLF.

An old lawyer's advice in Latin reads: Si fecisti nega. A popular story, told in different versions, lets a woman who is asked by her neighbor to return to her a pot which she had loaned from her, reply: "First of all, I never took any pot from you; secondly, I returned it long ago, and, thirdly, it was broken when you gave it to me". Polish papers, published in this country, declared when the first news of the atrocities in Pinsk became known in their horrid details that the pogroms never took place. They are a German invention. Paderewski, who was reported to have issued a warning against the recurrence of these outrages, said upon his arrival in Paris, May 27, the same thing. Yiddish papers report that Polish official and semi-official organs admitted the facts, and some of them, especially of the clerical color, explain the animosity by the fact that the all powerful Jews are responsible for the loss of Danzig to Poland. We are on more solid ground when we hear Lieutenant Constantine de Wolski, a member of the staff of the Polish Commander-General Haller, at present in Washington, declare that the Jews are as happy in Poland now as they can be, and that large numbers of Russian Jews are anxiously waiting for the opportunity to immigrate into the new republic. He also pays a high tribute to their patriotism and especially to their great military ability and their prominence in the army medical staff. A statement made by Moraczewski, the former premier, that outbreaks in small towns cannot be prevented owing to the lack of organization in the new government, seems to confirm the facts, while the absolute denial of any pogroms by Paderewski and his proposal, announced in an Associated Press dispatch of June 1, to have an investigation commission appointed by President Wilson, leaves nothing reasonable to be desired.

THE ETHICS OF THE FATHERS.

One of our old rabbis (Abot, 1, 8) enjoins upon us to consider the defendant as innocent while he is on trial. So we are bound to wait for the findings of such a commission, which, we may rest assured, will be so composed as to remove all suspicion of partiality. We cannot conceal, however, the suspicion which comes from the important fact that the interpellation introduced in the House of Common May 28 by Colonel Wedgewood on the occupation of Wilna by the Polish army and on the atrocities perpetrated on the Jews on this occasion, was left unanswered by Mr. Harmsworth, the assistant Secretary of Foreign Affairs, as to the second part. The resolution introduced into the American House of Representatives by Members Goldfogle and La Guardia, and in the Senate by Mr. Calder of New York, might have been based on mere newspaper reports, and as evidence in a court would have no more force than the subsequent denial of John F. Smolski, the head of the National Polish Department of America. On the other hand, the announcement of the debate in the British Parliament, of a protest sent by the Swedish peace party and of an inquiry sent by Assistant Secretary of State Polk to Mr. Hugh Gibson, United States minister to Poland, coupled with the threat of withdrawing American economic assistance, would rather prove that the atrocities cannot be entirely a German invention, and the pleas of difficulties in communication advanced by Paderewski would rather support the other side. It took exactly ten days before the press reported the first news of the butchery of Pinsk, and we cannot believe that the names of the thirty-five victims transmitted by cable are fictitious—but we are willing to wait.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

The stand taken by Paderewski is a strong endorsement of democratic methods. Had it not been for the impression created on the American public by the imposing mass meetings, held in New York and Chicago May 21, in Boston and other large Jewish centers later, and finally in Paris, May 25, Paderewski's offer would not have been made. Even the voices of men of such international prominence as Charles E. Hughes, the late candidate for the Presidency of the United States; of Charles Eliot and Jacob H. Schiff would not have had the same effect had they not been carried by the sounding board of the masses to the press, which was stung to the quick by Mr. Schiff's charge that it suppressed the facts as inconvenient. Action to prevent further outrages will, of course, not suffice to alleviate the terrible misery in the old pale of which a correspondence, published in the Vienna "Neue Zeit" of March 1, gives a vivid description. The writer made a visit to Lemberg, and, while evidently prejudiced in favor of Germany, as seen from the humorous remark that he saw one of these soldiers who chopped off the hands of children in Belgium eat hard-boiled eggs in a railroad car and throw the shells, carefully wrapped in paper, out of the window, which contrasted favorably with the filth in the Polish cars, he presents facts which speak for themselves. The city of Lemberg was bombarded daily from Dec. 29, 1918, to Feb. 15. 1919.

Schloss-Str.

Presburg, Now the Center of Hot Fight—Ghetto After the Fire of May 17, 1913.

It has no waterworks, no electricity, no gas and no coal oil; the price of a kilo of sugar is 50 crowns (nominally $10.00); of a pound of bread, 30 crowns; an order of roast beef in a restaurant, 8 crowns, and each roll separately, 80 hellers (16 cents). The main line between Vienna and Lemberg is interrupted from Oderberg to Cracow. He saw numerous refugees at the former station, to whom transportation was refused in utter despair. Some women threw themselves in front of the engine. Water in Lemberg can be had only from a few public wells, and to use it for drinking means typhus. In the smaller towns conditions are, if possible, worse. A relief worker entering a house found a woman in bed unable to sit up, begging for a piece of bread. In another bed was her mother, who had been dead for two days, without anyone coming to remove the body. One should imagine that there is enough misery without pogroms.

THE "ROSHE" AND HIS NEIGHBOR.

Since Mr. Geo. Creel, the head of our department of public information, once frankly declared that when he heard the name Ukraine mentioned for the first time, he thought it meant a piece of music, the average reader of this journal will not feel insulted when the situation of this country is explained to him. The Ukraine, meaning literally border territory, is geographically not exactly defined. It includes broadly speaking eastern Galicia, southwestern Russia, especially the governments of Podolia and Volhynia, and some sections of Russian Poland, as the eastern section of the government of Lublin. The people speak a Slavic dialect called Little Russian, and their religion is Greek Orthodox, a large section recognizing the Pope as their head. They are therefore linguistically and religiously nearer to the "Great Russians" than to the Poles, against whom they repeatedly rebelled. The Jews were in such cases the star sufferers, and the annals of 1648-1655, when the Ukranian general, Bogdan Chmielnicki, joined the Cossacks in a rebellion against Poland, are red with the blood of the Jews and show a remarkable resemblance to the present condition. It is not likely that the Ruthenians, as the Ukranians are usually called, have any particular love for the Jews, and their antagonism would politically be rather natural, for the intelligent Jew, formerly the mainstay of the Germanizing tendencies of Austria, supported since 1873, when the new electoral law for the Reichsrat was passed, the Polish party. But the few educated leaders of the Ruthenians, differing in this respect from the Poles, value the assistance of the Jews in commerce and industry, knowing the backwardness of the masses of their own people and the hard economic fight which they would have to wage against their Polish and Russian neighbors if independence should be granted to them. The Czar's government with its brutality has alienated these people, who otherwise might have been attracted to their Great Russian cousins. It persecuted the "Uniats" as heretics, and just before the outbreak of the war in 1914 prohibited the celebration of the centenary of the leading Ruthenian poet, Shevtchenko.

The situation of the Jews in the Ukraine therefore is clear. The few responsible heads of the government are favorable to them, granting them not merely full political equality, but even group rights. Dr. Sergius Zarchi is the legal adviser of the Ruthenian delegation to the Paris Peace Conference; Rewutzki was his predecessor; Dr. Max Goldfarb is mayor of Berdyczew. In the antisemitic Kiew, where five years ago a Jew, coming for treatment at the university clinic, had to hide under the straw of a stable when the police raided his lodging house, streets were named for the Yiddish poets, Sholem Alechem, Perez and Mendele Mocher Seforim.

The story has unfortunately a reverse side. The stories of the pogrom of Proskurov rival with the darkest deeds of Chmelnicki's "heroes". Children were killed in schools, and soldiers carried the twitching little bodies on their bayonets through the streets. In a home for the aged, inmates were terribly mutilated, their ears and noses being cut off before they were finally dispatched. In a hospital women patients were first raped and afterwards killed. In Berdyczew the Ukranian commander, Asilko, said to a committee of Jews who asked for protection that he had promised his soldiers a "good time" and could not go back on his word. Similar stories come from Homel, Bialystok, Dubno, Zhitomir, Yelizawetgrad, Kovel and Kholm. The latter city is mentioned because the Czar's government in its despotic desire of Russianizing all subjects of the "white daddy" had proposed to tear this section of the government of Lublin away from Poland because of its preponderately Ruthenian population. There is, however, one power that does not discriminate between allies and entente, between Red and White, Great and Little Russians, Old Testament believers—an old Polish euphemism for Jews—and Christians, Greek and Roman Catholics, Uniats and Schismatics—it is old Thanatos. From Stanislav, which is the temporary headquarters of the Ukranian government, the report comes that 25 per cent. of the population are stricken with typhus; tuberculosis, rickets and similar diseases find easy victims among a physically debilitated population, while doctors and medicines are rarely obtainable.

THE SONS OF ELIAB.

The Talmudic adage: "Woe unto the Rasha, woe unto his neighbor" (Negaim, 12, 8, and repeatedly in the Midrash), is applied to Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab of the tribe of Reuben. They were originally good people, the Midrash says, but being located near the Korah clan (Num. 2, 10 and 3, 29), they were spoiled by their neighbors. The Ruthenians, who never had a real chance, a plea that must be denied to the Poles, may claim this with regard to the Roumanians, their southern neighbors. The commanding general of the Roumanian army issued a circular to all priests and teachers denouncing the Jews as revolutionary agitators who are responsible for Roumania's inability to realize her just ambition. Colonel Aprescu said to a Jew of Jassy: "We shall solve the Jewish question easily. The Jewish soldiers we will dispatch, as we did in the war, and the civilians we shall treat so that they shall envy the dead." The Roumanian journal, "L'Orient", contains an article which quotes an officer, named Chitzulesco, as having appealed to the priests to clean the cross of Jesus from the blood of Judas, the enemy of mankind. A copy of the paper which reached Paris had some passages deleted by the censor, a proof that many worse things are being said which Messrs. Bratiano and Jonescu think would better be postponed until the peace treaty is signed, because the latter, as Colonel House told the Roumanian delegation on May 28, must contain a clause guaranteeing equality to the Jews. Chief Rabbi Gaster of London wrote to an American society of Roumanian Jews that the sufferings of the Roumanian Jews have of late surpassed anything which even their own history of blood and tears ever has known. We are a little puzzled by an announcement of a meeting, held in the home of the well-known New York philanthropist, Adolph Lewisohn, which made plans for a rousing reception to be given to the Queen of Roumania, "befitting her generosity" and other qualities with which Providence usually enjoys German princesses, destined to rule over nations of whose existence they had no idea before the shadchens of the respective privy councils arranged the details in the settlement needed for the perpetuation of snobocracy. The leader of the movement is a Mr. James M. Beck. Mr. Lewisohn, who recently celebrated his 70th birthday, could hardly be ignorant of the courageous act of Sir Marcus Samuel, who as Lord Mayor of London refused to take part in a reception given to Roumanian statesmen visiting London. Nor is it likely that an enlightened philanthropist in our sociological days should believe that driblets of alms, no matter how large their size, could make good what a corrupt government and diabolical fanaticism have ruined. We would also like to know something about this Mr. Beck. The name does not sound as Wallachian as would Beckiano and Beckuscu. There was, and probably still is, a rabbi, Dr. M. Beck, in Bucharest. Who knows?

ONE LAMB AMONG SEVENTY WOLVES.

The Talmudic allegory of Israel's position has its deep meaning in our days. Since the days of Oliver Cromwell we looked upon England as the traditional friend of the Jews. The official England is not hostile even now, but noticeably unsympathetic. The public opinion is becoming bitterly hostile. The front rank is occupied by the "Morning Post", and the latest attempt of Lionel de Rothschild and nine other very prominent Jews to make the paper distinguish between Jews and Jews was not successful. The declaration, published in the "Morning Post" of April 23, in which the ten protested against what they termed a pro-Bolshevik attitude of the Jewish press, and the disavowal of this step, coupled with a condemnation of Bolshevism by the Board of Deputies, did not have the expected effect. "Morning Post" in its issue of May 5 reiterated its original accusation and criticized the Board of Deputies for its attitude against truly patriotic Jews. Colonel Wedgwood, whose firm stand in the question of the Polish pogroms with the half-hearted answer of the Assistant Secretary Harmsworth, has been noted before, protested against the arbitrary expulsion of Russian Jews as Bolsheviki without either giving them the right of counsel or furnishing them with protection against the reactionaries in their homes. Brailsford, whose articles on the Russian situation have attracted considerable attention in this country, criticizes Mr. Harmsworth very sharp[illegible] "Times", the organ of Lord [illegible] Mr. Harmsworth's brother, [illegible] antisemitism so far as to hold [illegible] responsible for the general strike in Canada. We know that the Jewish population in Winnipeg and other western sections of the Dominion where the strike movement is so strong cannot be a decisive factor, and we certainly know that in the London police force, which threatens to go on strike as soon as the peace treaty shall have been signed, there are very few, if any, Jews. It is therefore evident that czarism, defeated at home, has been resurrected on the soil of free England. Aksakov's Ignatiev's and the whole Muscovite gang's policy of 1881 to hold Jews responsible for every evil is being translated into English.

ANTISEMITISM'S HOMELAND.

From London it is reported that the reactionary party under the leadership of an imperial aid named Schnellenburg, posted placards all over Berlin, calling for revenge on the Jews. The report comes via England and can for the present not be examined, the mail with Germany being still interrupted and connection with neutral countries being still under British censorship. The report has, however, all chances of probability. It is also reported that Prof. Jaffe, former Bavarian minister under the revolutionary government, was arrested in a Berlin hotel and 170,000 marks in bills which he had in his grip were seized. The party strife in Bavaria, which is largely clerical, seems to have assumed a crusade aspect. Rabbi Seligmann Meyer, of Ratisbon, the editor of a paper representing the strictest orthodoxy, always fond of the clerical doggerel style, writes:

> Jude oder Christ—
> Wer gottesglauebig ist,
> Er eile herbei—
> Zur baierischen Volkspartei.

A notable departure from tradition is the appointment of a special Jewish commission attached to the German Peace Delegation. In this commission all Jewish "Richtungen" are represented, the liberals by Councillor Eugene Fuchs, the president of the Centralverein of German Citizens Professing the Jewish Religion; the Zionists by Richard Lichtheim; the orthodox—who in Germany are anti-Zionists—by Rabbi Pincus Kohn, of Schweinfurt—a rather peculiar diocese for an orthodox rabbi; the illustrious etcher, Hermann Struck, for the pro-Zionist orthodox, and Walter Sobernheim, undersecretary for Jewish affairs in the Foreign Office. It is the irony of history that Germany, which under Prussian leadership always opposed the recognition of Judaism as a church, should be the only state to give the Jews official representation on this historic occasion. The program of these gentlemen is practically identical with that of the American Jewish Congress. Noticing appointments it is worth while calling attention to the reported appointment of Richard Witting as president of the National Bank of Germany. Witting is the brother—not as the Associated Press had it, the brother-in-law—of Maximilian Harding. The maiden name of both gentlemen was Witkowski. Witting was previously Oberbuergermeister of the city of Posen.

ASHKENAZ, RIPHATH AND TOGARMAH.

The rabbis, probably guided by the similarity of the sound, explain Gomer, one of Japhet's sons, as "Germania" (Gen. Rabba) and the latter's sons as "Germanikia" (German tribes), although later usage identified only Ashkenaz, Gomer's oldest son, with Germany. The Germanikia show still traces of common descent. The "Aargauer Zeitung", a clerical organ, is naturally bitterly provoked at the Bolshevist triumph in Hungary. The loss of the country founded by St. Stephen and placed under the special protection of the Holy Virgin is resented bitterly by clericalism. Therefore Budapest becomes Judapest, a term invented, if we are not mistaken, by the late Lueger, the antisemitic mayor of Vienna, and terrible stories of "Christenverfolgung" are circulated. Speaking of Switzerland, justice requires to correct a statement in last month's review to the effect that the food office of Zurich allowed to the Jews additional food rations for Passover, although the meatless week remained in force.

A cable, sent by Herman Bernstein, will create a painful impression among those who like to think of Holland as the country of William the Silent, the noble champion of religious freedom. Mr. Bernstein reports that the ambassador of Holland at Petrograd sent a dispatch to his government, dated Sept

Asher Guenzburg, Achad Ha-Am.

6, 1918, in which he declares Bolshevism a greater danger to the world than the continuation of the war, and the danger is greater because its propagators are Jews who are cosmopolitan and whose object is to destroy the existing order for the sake of advancing their own interests. Therefore a collective action of all governments is necessary. This dispatch was sent to Mr. Balfour, who had it published in the last "White Book." He certainly will do more harm by this act than the preface to Mr. Sokolow's—by the way, really masterly—work on Zionism can do good.

THE MIRE OF YAVAN.

In 1648 one of the fugitives from the Ukranian massacres, Nota Hanover, succeeded in making his escape to Moravia, where he, like many other fellow-sufferers, found a haven of refuge in the town of Ungarisch Brod, but by a strange fate was killed almost forty years later (1683) in a pogrom by Hungarian marauders who had deserted from the imperial army during the war with Turkey. This Nota Hanover wrote a description of his sufferings under the title "Yavan Mezullah", borrowed from Psalm 69, 3, using the word "yavan" in the still common applicasion of "Russian", especially Russian soldier, which some explain as taken from the frequent Russian name Ivan, while others see in it a reference to the Greek (the real meaning of Yavan-Ion) Catholic religion. A story which may be true has it that a Russian censor demanded that the word be changed in the Bible texts for Ishmael. Whatever it may be, Nota Hanover could write his book over again, and the recognition of Admiral Kolchak by the allied powers, although, as is reported, with the understanding that no massacres of Jews must occur, may add another chapter to it. Frazier Hunt, the correspondent of the Chicago "Tribune", in a letter which appeared May 25, predicted it, and what we hear about Kolchak from the most reliable sources seems to confirm it. Kerensky, who certainly is bitterly hostile to the Bolshevist government, declares Lenine to be the lesser evil, and as to the Jews, it was Kolchak who began his career with the public announcement of the story that a band of eighteen murderers, fourteen of whom were Jews, killed the czar. We may depend on it that if his recognition leads to the establishment of his authority, we will hear the stories of the cruel murder of the Czar's family which is intended to brand the Bolsheviki as Jewish, as is evident from such remarks as that Lenine is the only genuine Russian among them. The reactionary party is undoubtedly trying to regain its power through the medium of the Allies, and especially of England. The recognition of Kolchak with the proviso that he should not discredit his mandatories by following the policy indicated in Omsk is a clear enough proof. It is not the only one. Baron Heyking, Russian consul general in London under the Czar, who in 1913 declared that the Russian Jews have a sect which practices ritual murder, that Beilis was guilty, and that the story that he was a victim of the old Muscovite policy to stir up prejudice against the Jews to turn the attention of the masses away from the crimes of czarism, was an invention of the Jews for the sake of discrediting Russian justice—this same Baron Heyking now comes out with a public statement that he never was an antisemite. This belated apology can only be interpreted as an attempt to conciliate British public opinion with the prospect of re-establishing autocracy in Russia.

Tomb of Rachel.

BIRDS OF VARIOUS FEATHERS.

The Galician Jews who, as long as they were Austrian subjects, had the privilege of seeking a refuge in Vienna, are now facing the calamitous choice between throwing themselves into the furnace of pogroms or being kicked as vagabonds from place to place. The Socialists of Vienna City Council voted with their enemies, the clericals, officially called Christian Socialists, to expel them. The organ of the clericals and of the late Archduke Franz Ferdinand, the "Reichspost", claims that Vienna has now 400,000 Jews and predicts that it will soon have 1,000,000, repeating Pharoah's claim of self-defense against the prospect of seeing the natives crowded out. The New York "Nation" of May 24 probably gives a correct picture of conditions when it reports that all Jews think of emigrating. The situation, as indicated in the peace treaty, just submitted to the Austrian delegates, is fraught with grave dangers. The friction between the various nationalities, subjected to their hereditary enemies, the Germans in Bohemia and Moravia to the Czechs, the Magyars to the Slovaks, Servians and Roumanians, the Ruthenians to the Poles and Roumanians, etc., will react on the Jews. It is already reported that the Czechs promised the Jews autonomy if they would not support the Germans, but how they are to do it in solidly German districts like Reichenberg or Karlsbad, where their German neighbors were never too friendly to them, is another question. Rumors are already flying thick with charges of all kinds, appeals to boycott and assaults by the Slovaks, who in the same manner inaugurated their fight for liberty in 1848. Similar may be the conditions in the new Greece. We hear of a protest of Albania against the annexation of Avlona. A historic recollection dating back to 1515, may make the situation clear. A Venetian sailor, stricken with the plague, begged to be buried in the Jewish cemetery because the fanatic Greek-Catholic population would throw his body to the wild beasts. Even in the Dodekanesus, as the Sporadic Islands are now called, there is a Jewish population of 2,500 souls, as we learned when on April 3, 1881, twenty-seven Jews were killed in an earthquake in Chios. Smyrna has a large Jewish population, living in incredible misery. All these places have a mixed population with strongly emphasized religious and racial differences, especially Albania, and the old formula of American citizenship with condemnation of national group rights, as promulgated at the council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregation in Boston, May 19-22, will not do any good to the Jews of Monastir, living in a city with Albanians, Greeks, Bulgarians, Turks and Roumanians, divided into Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics and Mohammedans, always ready to jump at each others' throats.

PEACE, PEACE AND NO PEACE.

The situation in Paris, dragging for nearly five months, and with little prospect for an adjustment that any of the parties concerned will consider a definite solution, is closely resembling the situation of the Peace of Westfalia in 1648, the fatal year of Jewish massacres. The prospect of serious labor troubles, which, as the "Times" says with regard to the case of Winnipeg, will be charged to the Jews and the starvation in enemy countries, illustrated by German statistics, showing an increase in 1918 of 293,627 deaths over those of 1913, and by a report from Switzerland, where 500 Jewish children from Vienna sent for recuperation were all found to be undersized and below the normal weight, affect the Jews directly as part of the general population and will affect them indirectly, as every crisis did, whether in Persia at the overthrow of the Parthian yoke, 225, or at the Mongol invasion in the 13th century, or after Russia's defeat in the Japanese War of 1905. So far the peace treaty with Austria was the first document to pronounce the principle of protection of religious and national minorities with recognition in educational institutions and in courts of law, which is practically what is termed group rights in a country which, as far as the autochthonous population is concerned, is solidly German. It cannot admit of any doubt that the treaties with Roumania, Poland, Jugo-Slavia, Checho-Slovakia and other new states will contain the same clause, but the important question will be to find a tribunal that shall watch over its execution. The sharp antagonism between the warring factions, even between those who, like Poles and Czechs, are technically allies, does not presage an inclination towards mutual good will. It is illustrated by a small incident. Some Jewish members of the German peace delegation attended Sabbath services in Versailles. They were assigned separate seats on a sort of sinners' bench and otherwise ignored. In 1878, seven years after the Franco-German War, Cremieux was received with enthusiastic honors in Berlin, and Graetz, attending a conference called by The Alliance Israelite in Paris, was called to the Torah as the first, regardless of the privileges of the Kohens, as he told me personally at that time with a certain pride, quoting the Talmudic precedent (Geschichte, IV, 211, 3 ed.). When will such a mutual understanding be restored?

Monument to the Ukrainian Rebel, General Chinelnicki.

AKIBA'S OPTIMISM.

When sixty years after the destruction of Jerusalem a new attempt was made to regain Israel's independence, R. Akiba greeted the rebellion as the beginning of the Messianic era, but one, Johanan Bar Torata, said to him: "Akiba, grass will grow from thy jawbones, and the Messiah will not have arrived". (Lam. Rabba, 2. 2.) It is reported in the Yiddish press that Secretary Daniels declared the attiude of the anti-Zionists injurious to the Jewish cause.

Type of Jew, Smyrna.

The denunciations by the orthodox rabbis who were recently assembled in a world congress in Zurich of all anti-Zionists as traitors to the Jewish people will not silence the Bar Toratatas of our days, especially since the orthodox cut off the Mizrahi from their fellowship, as the latter again who held the convention of their American branch, May 25-27, in Cincinnati, broke off their relation with the general Zionist body, represented in the Federation of American Zionists. These internal dissensions are bound to weaken the cause. The future of Palestine is, as far as official promulgations give us a right to judge, undecided. While Zionist organs persist in presenting the establishment of an autonomous Jewish commonwealth as a fact, the London "Daily Telegraph" limits these prospects to an equality of rights, referring to the hostility of the natives. This statement is corroborated by Marion Weinstein, correspondent of the New York "Globe", who just returned from Palestine, and by letters from members of the Jewish legion, published in the anti-Zionistic "Vorwaerts", and finally by reliable private information received from Palestine by the present writer. One of these letters reports that the legion was called on Passover eve to quell a riot in Cairo, and had reason to change the traditional Passover doxology to "Leshonoh Habo-oh be-America". A statement which is one of fact and not of subjective opinion, is to the effect that the British troops were warned not to accept fruit from the Bedouins or to drink water from the public wells because the Bedouins are suspected of plots to poison the British army of occupation. We learn, however, that the new city council of Jerusalem has thirty members, representing all shades of opinion, among them a member of I. O. B. B. Further progress is reported from Jaffa, where for the benefit of the Jewish colonists in the vicinity a veterinary hospital was established, and from Jerusalem, where the museum of the Bezalel art and craft school was reopened. The Palestine "News", a Hebrew weekly, reports with enthusiasm the arrival of the commission of the American Federation of Zionists with Dr. Harry Friedenwald at the head, assigning with Oriental generosity to Mr. Robert Szold, a member of the commission, the title of attorney general of the United States. Baron James A. de Rothschild, the son of Baron Edmond, the veteran patron of Palestinian colonization, announced an annual subsidy of £2.000 for the support of a Hebrew stage during the next three years. It is worth while awaiting the attitude of the rabbinate to this innovation, which probably will be that of the Talmud that to the Jew the synagogue and the Beth Hamidrash must take the place of theater and the circus (Megillah, 6a, Abodah Zarah, 18b). The most pessimistic note on the prospects of Zionism is struck by Asher Guenzburg, the idol of the "Kultur-Zionists", who declares, we are going through the birth throes of the Messianic age, but cannot look for the Messiah.

PERSONAL NOTES. The number of knighted Jews of England has been increased by the knighting of Albert Lucas, a well-known philanthropist, and of Israel Gollancz, the noted Shakespearean scholar. Honors of this kind are usually conferred on Jews prominent in finance. Israel Gollancz is the son of a hazan who came to London from Prussian Poland and the brother of Dr. Herman Gollancz, one of the most scholarly representatives of the London rabbinate. Honors of importance in public life are the election of John L. Cohen, speaker of the legislature of New South Wales, to a prominent position on the bench, and of Herbert Samuel, the first Jew who was a member of a British cabinet, as special commissioner for the reconstruction of Belgian industries.

The Hungarian government honored in an unusual manner the memory of a Jewish martyr for the cause of his country. The Jewish officer, Fellner, a young mechanic elected under the soviet system, had vouched for the loyalty of his troops, and when the latter refused to obey orders, he shot himself in front of his command. The government ordered the whole army to wear crepe in his honor.

OBITUARY. The death of the famous agriculturist, Aaron Aaronsohn, well known in this country, which he visited several times, in an airship accident will spread mourning in all circles, especially at this time, when his untimely end at the age of 42 will be felt most keenly as a loss to the development of Palestine, where he made the discovery of the original wheat and where his great ability and his devotion to the country would have been of inestimable value to the development of the country.

Albert Antebi, formerly the principal of the technical school maintained by the Alliance Israelite in Jerusalem, died in Constantinople. He was a grandson of Rabbi Jacob Antebi, one of the martyrs of the Damascus ritual murder affair of 1840 (Graetz: Geschichte, XI, 516, has falsely Anteri) and represented, like Chief Rabbi Nahum, the element which believed in the regeneration of Turkey under French tutelage in spite of the fate of his grandfather, who was a victim of this policy.

The death of the Yiddish poet, A. Weiter (pseudonym for Aaron Dinishevsky), who was murdered by Polish bands in Wilna at the age of 37, has been noticed in connection with the chronicle of Polish pogroms.

The world of music lost Imre Kiralfy, a composer and opera manager, who died in Norwich, England, April 28. He was born in Budapest in 1845.

In the financial aristocracy we notice the death of Lady Ellen Swaythling, the widow of the staunch defender of British orthodoxy, Lord Samuel Swaythling (who died in 1911), formerly Samuel Montagu. As mother of Mr. Edwin S. Montagu and sister of Sir Benjamin Cohen, she was connected with families prominent in public life. She died March 15 in her 75th year. Baroness Adriana de Menasce, widow of the financier, Baron Jacques de Menasce and Joseph Isaac Aghion, who died in Alexandria, Egypt, in February, mean a loss to the local community whose philanthropic institutions owe much to the two families.

Yiddish papers report the death of Salvatore Barzilai, the irredentist and Socialist member of the Italian cabinet during the war. Salvatore Barzilai, of whom the German antisemites made a Jacob Burzel, was not a camouflaged name, but its bearer was born in Trieste as the son of the chief clerk of the Trieste Jewish Congregation, Giuseppe Brazilai, well known as a member of the Italian Haskalah, which had in Trieste prominent representatives in S. D. Luzzatto, S. V. Zelman, Moise Tedeschi, and in former years Dr. Benzion Frizzi. The name Salvatore is found frequently among Italian Jews as a correct translation of Joshua. Salvatore Barzilai was elected member of the Italian Chamber in 1890 and was a leader in radical politics. Of his position to Judaism nothing is known.

Czernowitz, Now to Be Rumanian Jewish Temple.

The Christian theological world of America lost Bishop David H. Greer, of New York (May 19), whose noble participation in the agitation for the abrogation of the Russian treaty shall not be forgotten, and Prof. Crawford H. Toy (May 12), one of the leading representatives of liberal Old Testament studies.

MISCELLANEOUS. Many will be surprised to learn that the Berlin Jewish community received a legacy of 350,000 marks from Alexis Latte for the building of homes for the poor to be equally divided between Jews and Christians. Lewis Richardson, of Port Elizabeth, donated a farm of 9,000 acres for the settlement of returned soldiers on the land, in addition to an offer of keeping forty soldiers on other farms during their recuperation. The Anglo-Jewish community proposes to transfer the Jews' College to Oxford or Cambridge on a larger scale as a war memorial, a fitting expression of the idea that the ways of the Torah are ways of peace.

Prof. A. S. Yahuda, of Madrid, while on a visit in London, gave some interesting news on the Jews of Spain which are far from enthusiastic. The total number of Jews in Spain is about 1,000, and the only settlement of any consequence is that of Barcelona.

We learn that Gustav Bauer, whose election to the Cortes in 1910 created a sensation, is dead. It is not stated whether he died as a Jew. His family, we learned at that time, was Catholic, and he was a nephew of the famous abbe, Bernard Bauer, the confessor of Empress Eugenia, who, after the collapse of the empire, became an infidel.

The Swiss Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals continues its agitation, probably in view of the impending revision of the constitution, at which the Jews hope to obtain the repeal of the amendment prohibiting Shehitah, which was carried by a referendum vote in 1893. Some opponents propose a compromise by introducing the administration of anaesthetics before shehitah, [illegible] not seem to be contrary to [illegible]. It is very questionable whether the present attitude of extreme orthodoxy, fearful of any compromise in the few ritualistic practices, still observed, will be favorable to any such concession. Judging by an analogy which recently created quite a stir in the Italian rabbinate, such a concession is rather unlikely.

The scarcity of olive oil suggested to some "reformers" the idea of using electricity instead of the—in Italy—customary olive oil for the perpetual light in the synagogues. The conservatives are absolutely opposed to it. The strange thing is that in the orthodox synagogs of northern Europe and America gas and electricity have been used for years without any objection in place of the formerly used vegetable oil. Olive oil was always an unknown luxury to them. The stranger thing is that the practice of a perpetual lamp, though quite general, is not found in rabbinic literature previous to the eighteenth century. The bickerings on these questions, and not the least the solicitude for the animals in the stockyards, especially with regard to shehitah, which is acknowledgedly a humane mode of killing, reminds us of the sigh of the prophet Hosea (13. 2) about those who slaughter human beings and worship calves.

THE B'NAI B'RITH.

The B'nai B'rith, with its many thousands of members, is doing a vast amount of good in American Israel. Since its inauguration, over three-quarters of a century ago, it has always aimed to do philanthropic and educational work. At the time of its inception there was a large Jewish immigration from Germany, who were driven from that country by the unbearable conditions existing there.

The Order aimed to establish a feeling of brotherhood among these newcomers, many of whom were poor in this world's goods, but rich in that spirit of determination so essential to the upbuilding of new institutions. The organization established orphanages, homes for the aged, hospitals and educational institutions. Its activities are not only confined to this country, but across the seas. During the war it has aimed to do its share. The members have never stood aloof when their services have been requested. It is through the efforts of the B'nai B'rith that such measures as the Anti-Defamation League and other similar movements have been effected. The B'nai B'rith has done much toward securing the rights of our co-religionists, and nothing conducing to the promotion of their welfare has been neglected.

The Jews of America owe a great deal of gratitude to the B'nai B'rith for the great good it has accomplished in their behalf.—(Jewish Review).

RELIGION FOR THE SOLDIER.

There is nothing like inventing tasks. As old King Solomon said, God made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions. Our nation raised an army in an incredibly short period and sent them across the sea; they have acquitted themselves splendidly, just helping in deciding the world war and in crushing the most formidable military machine, and now they are slowly returning to their homes. There will be problems enough for readjustment. Soldiering is arduous and fraught with danger to limb and life; but nevertheless is of the nature of a diversion. We would in no way withhold the credit and admiration which is due these fighting sons of ours. But we must not overdo this hero business. After all the soldier does his simple duty. And the man who stays behind has done his share quite as willingly. It would seem that both the country and the young men themselves will be best served by a quiet and unobtrusive resumption of industrial or other occupations. No soldier must presume upon his having served in the army to want something better than that to which his particular fitness entitles him. If it is patriotic to go to fight the enemy, it is just as patriotic to be mustered out of the camp and into the factory or office. But there are some among us who have too much leisure, and they use it to think out complications which have no reality and problems which do not exist. It is quite true that the boy who was taken out of his snug home with its conventionalities had perforce to buckle to the hard realities. He saw death-dealing machines and often encountered the grim reaper himself. The sterner aspect of life and duty came home to him. He was in a mood for communing with Him in whose hands are the souls of human beings. He got religion, as the phrase goes. Now he is coming home to his church or synagogue where, it is true, a conventional veneer obscures and submerges the depth of emotion. It is maintained by the pastors that somehow along with other things religion must needs be reconstructed, refashioned to suit the deeper emotions of our home-coming soldiers. To which we reply, Why a specific religion just for them? Religion is one and the same for soldier and civilian. War begets heroism, enthusiasm and sometimes hysteria. Once we are back in the ranks of civil life, we had better accustom ourselves to the humdrum domesticity of every-day life. Some churches have all along been serving up the emotional brand of religion. And some synagogues, too. But in the main religion may be deep, but nevertheless sane. Maudlin sentimentality is often a cover for a multitude of sins. It is a species of a cult of self, not the true worship of the self-transcending reality. Yes, the individual soul is valuable. Religion must minister to it. But by far more important are its ministrations to the body in which the individual stands as a member. The community counts for more than the individual. The Jewish soldier should realize that he is returning to his own. Certainly he is returning an American, if he left an American. But the cult of the nation cannot replace the religious attachment to the historic community of a definite faith. We have no reason to believe that the Jewish soldier has been weaned away from Judaism. But of this we are certain: when once he is back, he must take up his place in the ranks of his people. Give him Judaism. He asks for nothing more. Teach him the story of the Jew. Let him know of the trials and tribulations of his brethren. Let him in short link his destiny to that of the household of Israel. Aye, let him return to the lodge. For there as in the synagogue he will meet the bearers of the common heritage. Association with ordinary fellow Jews makes for the right kind of Judaism more than all the revised prayers you could possibly declaim.

BETWEEN THE UPPER AND NETHER MILLSTONE.

The fate of our brethren in eastern Europe is one to cause alarm. It shows how utterly defenseless they are. While the war lasted and there was an eastern front a libelous mistrust on the part of wicked czardom caused them to be uprooted from their homes and to be transplanted into the interior to eke out a livelihood as well as they might. The revolution seemed to promise better times. But the turn which affairs took in the sequel has once more plunged eastern Jewry into a state which comes pretty near to wholesale extermination. They seem to be destined to be crushed between the upper and nether millstone, between Bolshevism and the forces arrayed against that tyranny of the proletariat. The Bolsheviki look upon the Jew as bourgeois, and the presence of renegade Jews in the councils of the proletariats is seized upon by the antagonists as a ground for wreaking vengeance upon an unfortunate people. The Poles and Ukrainians fight for the possession of Galicia; the Poles and Lithuanians for the northeastern slice; between them both the Jew is given over to massacre. We do not begrudge the Poles their good fortune. For it is nothing but that which has won for them their political rehabilitation. It is indeed their due. They had been robbed of it. Nevertheless, it is perfectly clear that it is not as much the love for the Poles as the fear of Germany that has brought about the recreation of the buffer state on the east. The Poles would deck themselves in the mantle of western civilization. We remember the aping of Gallic refinement on the part of the upper nobility. But the people at large are uncouth and in their savagery not much different from their Slav brothers further east. The Poles are numerously represented in this country. We have no quarrel with them. They know what Americanism means. They know what the American Jew is, and he has become that through the boon of security and freedom. Out of the taxes of the whole American people the Poles in their own country are succored. The good will of the American Jew ought to be an asset. We, as Americans, glory in the wisdom and the true liberalism of our President who from the first espoused the cause of Poland. But he is concerned in the pacification of the whole world, of nations as well as of minorities lodged in nations. We have his word that in the constitutions of the new states there shall be guaranteed the freedom of worship and the safety of racial groups. But, it is fair to ask, will paper guarantees mean in the case of Poland more than they have meant in other lands only too well known? If the Poles persist in maintaining an attitude of hostility, if, when the eyes of the world are not upon them, they murder and pillage, how can we acquiesce in a mere statute? Whatever else certain sections of Jewry may aspire to, we are all united that the gravest problem lies in the east and southeast of Europe. There new states are being created and new boundaries fixed. By a stroke of the pen whole aggregates of Jews change masters like pawns in a game. They would stand in the way of no race legitimately struggling for self-determination and self-expression. Shall the Jew alone be denied the most elementary rights of security and of equality before the law of the land? The League of Nations will be created. But it would be expecting too much of it that it should exercise a sort of super-sovereignty. And yet the Jew must have a way to find redress at the seat of the League. For in the wake of political discrimination there will come economic misery, the boycott for instance. There must ensue a peace of races as well as a peace of nations. Otherwise the outlook for the bulk of Jewry will be sad to contemplate. There is no more serious business for our delegations at Paris than to stand guard over the destiny of eastern Jewry. On that point we stand united.

AARON AARONSOHN.

Aaron Aaronsohn, the noted botanist who was killed in an aeroplane accident near Boulogne while flying from London to Paris on Thursday, April 15, was a Roumanian by birth. As a child of five he was taken by his parents to Palestine, whither they went with a group of their neighbors to form a Jewish farming settlement at Zichron Jacob in Samaria. The boy received the traditional Jewish education in Bible and Talmud, the knowledge of which later stood him in good stead in developing his far-seeing agricultural and reclamation plans. From early youth he assisted his father on the farm, and at the age of eighteen, Baron Edmund de Rothschild granted him the opportunity of pursuing agronomic studies at French institutions. On his return to Palestine, equipped with all that modern science can bestow, he threw himself eagerly into the study of Palestinian agricultural problems from a broadly scientific point of view. He brought to bear upon them varied information, geological, botanical, mineralogical, and meteorological; above all, he was interested in geography, physical and human. Those who had the privilege of listening to his sparkling exposition of the effect of environment on men, will never forget his eloquence and the vividness of his illustrations.

While pursuing his studies and observations, he trudged afoot over the whole area of Palestine and again and again covered it on horseback. He knew the country as few others have known it, and what he saw was transmuted into scientific knowledge, because he saw it with eyes that had been sharpened in Anatolia, in the Damascus region, in Algiers and Tunis, and all parts of the United States, especially in California. His intensive study of ancient and modern writings led him to the conclusion that the salvation of Palestinian husbandry lay in the application of the principles of dry farming to the Palestinian soil. In fact, he considered modern dry farming as a revival of a system known in ancient times, but lost in the course of the centuries. To the long use of this system he attributed those qualities of the soil that produced the succulent fruits and vegetables in the East. For this reason he maintained that a slavish adherence to dry farming principles as elaborated in the American West should be detrimental to the agricultural development of Palestine.

To him it seemed important not to displace the Arab husbandman, who, in spite of his primitive methods of husbandry, had an inherited intimacy with his native soil which was as valuable as the knowledge gained through modern science. Conversant as he was with the history of Israel, he realized that the aridity of the Palestinian soil was of comparatively recent origin and was not due to actual barrenness. If the Vale of Sharon had been populous in Roman times, then the sand dunes now encroaching upon its fertile plains were caused by conditions arising in historical times. It only requires study of the conditions to remove or counteract their detrimental influence. If Biblical and postbiblical literature spoke of wooded hills, then a forestation in modern Palestine was a close possibility and the terraced hillsides pointed to ways of cultivation abandoned but not necessarily to be disregarded. In the course of the years he gathered a vast and valuable library, and a bontanical and general scientific collection which promised to be the nucleus of a real museum. Unfortunately all his collections and his scientific notes and memoranda became the unvalued loot of the Turkish armies in their marches up and down the country during the war.

He became widely known to the scientific world through his discovery of the so-called wild wheat, the prototype of our cultivated wheat. Several German and Austrian botanists had discovered intimations of the presence of this wild wheat in Palestine, but none had been able to prove that it grew there. The problem was put up to Aaronsohn as the native scientist with the widest experience with the Palestinian flora. Disappointed again and again he persisted until he succeeded in finding it on the slopes of Mt. Hermon. The story of the discovery reads like a romance. In reality it was logical that he, with his systematic long pursued and varied investigation, should have found it. The period of discovery was followed by a long period of patient experimentation. The problem before him was to fertilize the wild wheat with various species of the cultivated wheat, in order on the one hand to eliminate the brittleness of the wild wheat and the degenerate qualities of the cultivated wheat, while preserving the ability of the wild wheat to flourish in a climate of small rainfall. His experiments if successful would have quadrupled the wheat producing area of the world. They were followed with the intensest interest by the Department of Agriculture of the United States which duplicated them in a measure in some of the experiment stations of our western states in which irrigation has been resorted to to make available great stretches of semi-arid land. The new cultivated wheat might have flourished in these same stretches without irrigation. That was the hope of the discoverer, and the investigations of the Department of Agriculture on the subject encouraged rather than discouraged his hope. Not only did the American Department of Agriculture follow his experiments and give space to them in its own stations, but it gave to Mr. Aaronsohn every encouragement possible. One of its bulletins was devoted partly to the discovery of wild wheat, and partly to Mr. Aaronsohn's description of legumonous and other commercial plants of Palestine which he proved would be of great value for introduction into the United States. A number of his suggestions were followed out by the Department of Agirculture, and one of its specialists made a trip to Palestine to study on the spot the plants described by Mr. Aaronsohn. A second bulletin was devoted to the results of the experiments on wild wheat reached in one of the Arizona experiment stations.

Mr. Aaronsohn was enabled to carry on his experiments with wneat, sesame, barley, citrus plants, fodder plants, mulberry trees and fruit trees in general through the establishment of the Jewish Agricultural Experiment Station in Haifa, Palestine, by a group of American Jews interested in both of his experiments on wild wheat and in the development of Palestinian husbandry. Just as his experiments were reaching their termination and beginning to become available to the farmers of Palestine, both the Jewish and the Arabic, the war broke out and the results of his labors were swept away. It is not yet known definitely whether the experiment farms were left intact by the Turkish forces as they swept across the Haifa sector. Scattered leaves of his scientific note books were found in the shops of Damascus used as wrapping paper. He remained at the station as long as it was possible for him to carry on his work. Finally the moment came when he realized that questions of even greater import required his attention elsewhere. But not before he had rendered signal service to the Turkish government and to his beloved Palestine by managing a remarkable campaign against the locust invaders of the summer of 1915, he left the country, and after remarkable vicissitudes reached London, where he offered his services to the Intelligence Department of the British government. His knowledge of every stick and stone in Palestine put him in a position to give information obtainable from no other. It is said that his representations had considerable influence in bringing about the invasion of Palestine by the English expeditionary forces. When the Palestinian campaign was finally decided upon and prosecuted with vigor, it was his knowledge of the terraine that helped to win the day for the English forces. In particular, his assistance was of value beyond words in that he knew the water resources of the wild uninhabited sand country through which the English army had to pass, and in respect to the Turkish army and Turkish tactics, it has been reported that he was looked upon by the English military leaders as the sole and undisputed authority.

In all these war activities his course was determined wholly by his Jewish patriotism, as in his scientific activities, his pride arose from the fact that he was adding lustre to the Jewish name in the Jewish land. It was a matter of course that he should then become the agricultural expert of the Zionist Commission when the British government designated such a commission. His friends knew that his brain seethed with plans, great and far reaching plans for the future Jewish state on the side of its physical development as well as on the side of its political development.

An enumeration of Aaronsohn's interests, activities, and patriotic hopes by no means can give a picture of his personality—vivid, varied, versatile, buoyant, full of animal spirits, strong, courageous, undaunted and alert. His information was wide, his interests infinite, his wit sparkling, his literary sense exquisite. He was a linguist with the power to acquire the racy idiom in every language that became his own. Whether he spoke English, or French, or Hebrew, or German he expressed himself as one to manor-born. His physique comported with his intellectual and spiritual qualities—ruddy, strong, imposing. His eyes were blue but they flashed fire and his blond hair and ruddy complexion bespoke virility. Taken all in all—every inch a man.

NEW ENGLISH PARTY MALIGNS JEWS.

An anti-Bolshevist meeting, recently held in London, at which Prof. Milyukoy was to be the chief speaker, was turned into an anti-semitic propaganda by several of the British speakers. Lord Amthill, who was the chairman of the meeting, launched into a harangue against the Jews, making them responsible for all industrial troubles in England recently. He pointed out that the leader of the Glasgow strikes was a Jewish tailor by the name of Shinvel, that in Belfast the troubles began by Simon Grinspan, another Jewish agitator, and he warned England against its Jewish agitators. The same sentiment was expressed also by General Crost, who sneeringly remarked that England at last decided to deport 250 Bolshevist, while the country is teeming with these agitators. Prof. Milyukov in his address made no attempt to deny the accusation against the Jews, although previously he took occasion many times to say that the Jews were not responsible for the spread of Bolshevism in Russia. Another Russian, Polovtzov, also spoke in vehement terms about the dangers of Bolshevism, but did not take the trouble to remove the damaging impression against the Jews left by previous speakers. The meeting resolved to organize a new national party, which shall have as its aim the fight against Bolshevism in England. It is asserted that this party may be regarded as the first anti-semitic organization in England, since anti-semitism will be the guiding motive of its activities.

B'NAI B'RITH PROTEST TO PRESIDENT WILSON.

Mr. Adolf Kraus, President of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and Mr. Julius Rosenwald, Vice-Chairman of the American Jewish Commitee, have sent the following cablegram to President Wilson:

Chicago, May 24, 1919.

His Excellency, Woodrow Wilson,
President of the United States of America, Paris:

John F. Smulski published his cablegram to you, therefore this reply.

Mr. Smulski, on behalf of American citizens of Polish blood and origin, says concerning the charge that his countrymen are murdering Jews, "We know these stories are false, for the men against whom the crimes are being charged are our brothers and fathers."

This is merely his statement; he offers no evidence. On the other hand, we have in our possession names of numerous victims, of those who have been massacred.

Reliable reports have reached us of hundreds of Jews killed and burned alive in Poland, thousands wounded, and hundreds of thousands pillaged and their homes ruined. It is feared that a war of extermination is planned.

Lord Parmoor of the English House of Lords, on April 11, 1919, in addressing a meeting in London, commenting on the Jewish massacres in Poland, said in regard to them: "A blot on the face of civilization"; "A question that concerns not only the Jews but the whole civilized world"; "Outrages against which all civilized mankind should immediately protest".

American citizens, irrespective of religion, who stand aghast at the brutality directed against Polish Jews, have no desire for vengeance. They wish all the people of Poland and Rumania happiness and prosperity. They ask merely that the butchery of Jews be stopped and that justice be accorded to them in those lands in which it is denied them in precisely the same manner and to the same extent that it is accorded their neighbors.

ADOLF KRAUS,
JULIUS ROSENWALD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Responsible representatives of the various life insurance companies may render valuable service to the dependents of American soldiers and sailors by giving information regarding the activities of the Bureau of Wark Risk Insurance to those dependents. The following suggestions are made by the Bureau, with a view to facilitating correspondence between these dependents and the Bureau.

A large number of men having similar names, it is absolutely necessary to give identifying facts when corresponding, to enable the Bureau to locate the records. (A striking example is that the records of the Bureau show over 1,200 Smiths whose first initial is E.) The following should always be stated:

When Corresponding as to Allotments and Allowances.

Full name of enlisted man.
Present address.
His allotment number or Army Serial Number.
Date of enlistment.
Rank and Organization November, 1917, or at enlistment if subsequent thereto.
Full name of allottee.
Relationship to enlisted man.
Address.

When Corresponding as to Compensation.

Full name of enlisted man.
Present address.
His Army Serial Number.
Date of enlistment.
Rank and Organization.
Date of death or discharge from service.
Full name of beneficiary.
Address.

When Corresponding as to Insurance.

Full name of insured.
Present address.
His Army Serial Number.
Rank and Organization when insured.
Insurance Certificate Number.
Date of birth.
Date of discharge.
Full name of beneficiary.
Address.

Letters concerning the payment or non-payment of the allotment or allowance, compensation, or insurance, should be addressed to the Accounting Division of the Bureau.

Letters concerning compensation or insurance claims due to death or disability should be addressed to the Compensation and Insurance Claims Division of the Bureau.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

Offensive Vaudeville Acts

Several complaints were received because of the acts of Shaw & Bernard, Willie Smith and Reeves, who appeared in the Marcus Loew Circuit. Upon complaint to the New York office, the following reply was received.

MARCUS LOEW ENTERPRISES
Executive Offices 1493-1505 Broadway,
New York.

May 20, 1919.

Mr. L. Edw. Lashman, Secy.,
Administrative Committee,
Anti-Defamation League,
1228 Tribune Bldg.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

I shall personally see the acts of Shaw & Bernard, Willie Smith and Reeves, and if there is anything objectionable, or anything detrimental to the Jewish race in their dialogue, I will either discontinue playing them on our circuit, or make them cut out the objectionable material.

Very truly yours,
JMS/DR (Signed) Jos. M. Schenck.

New Hampshire Anti-Discrimination Bill.

An act to prevent discrimination at places of public accommodation.

Section 1. No person shall directly or indirectly issue or cause to be issued any circular, publication, advertisement, or posting of notices intended or calculated to discriminate against any religious sect, class or nationality or against any members thereof, as such, in the matter of board, lodging, or accommodation, privilege or convenience offered to the general public at public places of accommodation.

Section 2. A place of public accommodation, within the meaning of this act, shall be deemed to include any inn, tavern, or hotel, whether conducted for entertainment, the housing or lodging of transient guests or for the benefit, use or accommodation of those seeking health, recreation or rest, any restaurant, eating house, public conveyance on land or water, bathhouse, barber shop, theater, and music or other public hall.

Section 3. Violation of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten dollars ($10) nor more than one hundred dollars ($100), or by confinement of not less than thirty nor more than ninety days.

Approved March 6, 1919.

Letter to Jewish Press.

The following letter was sent to the Jewish press throughout the country in the hope that it will put an end to the attempt on the part of individuals to handle matters of a defamatory nature against the Jews:

May 21, 1919.

To the Editor:

Although the important work of the Anti-Defamation League of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is well known to the readers of the Jewish press, there still are many worthy and well-meaning persons who take it upon themselves to act personally in cases of defamation against the Jews. By so doing they often act too hastily, not giving the situation due thought and not always understanding the policies of the organization or institution to whom they address their complaints. It must be manifest to all that such action can result either in the duplication of the action already taken by the Anti-Defamation League—which is often the case—or in giving the offender an erroneous viewpoint of the Jew and his contentions. In the former case it cannot but cause annoyance on the part of the willing or unwilling offender, and in the latter it only serves to mislead him further. In either case the valuable work which for the past five years the Anti-Defamation League has accomplished in putting an end to unfair discrimination against the Jews on the part of editors, authors, actors, theater owners, film producers, etc., will be duplicated and the efficiency of the League will be impaired.

Being convinced that such procedure on the part of individuals is but a zealous and sincere attempt at correcting the evil, and being certain that only by concerted action after due deliberation and investigation by a body representing all the classes of Jewish people, can results be accomplished, we wish once more to call the attention of all the readers of your paper to the need of their valuable assistance and co-operation with the League by referring to it without delay all matters of a defamatory nature not purely local in scope.

The office of the Ant[illegible] League is at 1228 Tribune [illegible]cago, Ill. All correspon[illegible] promptly acknowledged [illegible] be sent to each complainant advising of the action taken by the Committee and of the results accomplished. The 1918 report of the Anti-Defamation League, which outlines the principles of the League, lists the action taken by the League in many typical cases, and gives the replies of the offenders, may be had without charge by applying to the above address.

Yours very truly,
Philip Stein, Chairman,
L. Edw. Lashman, Secretary.

Polish Daily News Attacks Jews.

In an issue of the Polish Daily News, published in Detroit, appeared an editorial attacking the Jewish people. The matter was taken up by Mr. Milton M. Alexander, Chairman of the Detroit Anti-Defamation Committee. As a result of Mr. Alexander's activities, the following communication was received by the Administrative Committee signed by each of the six stockholders of the company:

In the last edition of the "Jewish Chronicle" we have noticed a reprint of our editorial from December 20 of anti-semitic contents. Furthermore, we notice that you also take active part in said matter, and therefore, with full confidence, we refer to you in said matter and declare:

That we, the undersigned stockholders and publishers of Dziennik Polski, declare that the editorial in our edition of December 20 and anti-semitic contents was inserted without our knowledge, as, in other words, our managing editor, Mr. Kowalski, abused our confidence and will discharge him as soon as we are able to secure some one in his place.

Furthermore, as publishers of Dziennik Polski we declare that we do not agree with the tendency of the said editorial.

The publishers since having sent this letter made good their promise of displacing the editor who had written the offending editorial. The new editor of the paper expressed himself in decided disagreement of the former editor and gave his assurance that the Polish Daily News under his administration would maintain at all times the policy of justice and consideration for the Jews both in America and in Poland.

WILSON PLEDGES SAFEGUARDS TO JEWS.

Safeguards against religious discriminations in new states created as the result of the great war have been decided upon by the Paris Peace Conference.

This was disclosed in a cablegram from President Wilson to Secretary Tumulty in response to a message protesting against the reported massacres of Jews in Poland and elsewhere in Eastern Europe.

Secretary Tumulty made public this telegram, which he sent to Rabbi Wise:

"The President requests me to assure you that the safeguards against religious discrimination which the President says he has so much at heart, will be embodied in the new arrangements by which the new states will be set up."

COMMUNICATED.

Toronto Lodge No. 836.

Toronto, Can., May 27, 1919.

Mr. Alex. B. Seelenfreund,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

We are very pleased to receive your letter in reply to our telegram relative to the appointment of Senator Kahn.

On reading the editorial by Brother Kraus, we find we were under a misapprehension as to the nature of the appointment. Since the credentials given him referred only to his investigation into the economic conditions in Europe our protest was ill advised and we beg to withdraw it.

We want to assure you of our deep appreciation for the work of Brother Kraus in behalf of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and we shall always deem it a pirvilege to be able to cooperate with him.

We remain yours very truly,

TYPHUS AT KOVNO.

A message from Chief Rabbi Shapiro of Kovno states that a serious epidemic of typhus was raging among the Jewish population, and that all the hospitals are overcrowded.

EILI EILI LOMO ASOVTONI

By James Gibbons Huneker

"How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" I couldn't help recalling these words of the Psalmist, these and the opening, "By the rivers of Babylon," in which is compressed the immemorial melancholy of an enslaved race, when I heard Sophie Braslau intone with her luscious contralto a touching Hebrew lament, "Eili Eili Lomo Asovtoni?" at a concert last winter. Naturally I believed the melody to be the echo of some tribal chant sung in the days of the Babylonian captivity, and perhaps before that in the days of the prehistoric Sumerians and the epic of Gilgamesh. Others have made the same error. Judge of my surprise when in a copy of the American Jewish News I read that the composer of "Eli, Eli" is living, that his name is Jacob Kopel Sandler, that he wrote the music for a historical drama, "Die B'ne Moishe" ("The Sons of Moses"), which deals with the Chinese Jews. Mr. Sandler had written the song for Sophie Carp, a Yiddish actress and singer.

The "Sons of Moses" was a failure, and a new piece, "Brocha, the Jewish King of Poland," was prepared. (Not alluding to Pan Dmowski.) It was produced at the Windsor Theater in the Bowery. The song, not the play, was a success. Then the music drifted into queer company, for music is a living organism and wanders when it is not controlled. Finally Sophie Braslau got hold of it, and the composer, who was directing a choir in a Bronx synagogue, was astounded to hear of the acclamations of a Metropolitan Opera House Sunday night audience. His daughter had listened to "Eili Eili" and brought home the good news. After troublesome preliminaries "Meyer Beer," the pen name of the musical editor of the American Jewish News, was able to prove beyond peradventure of a doubt the artistic parentage of the song, and Jacob Sandler is in a fair way of being idolized in his community, as he should be.

"Eili Eili lomo asovtoni?" may be found in Psalm 22, the first line of the second verse in Hebrew. In the English version the words of David are in the first verse: "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" And in St. Mark's gospel we read: "And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying 'Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?' which is, being interpreted: 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'" (Chapter 15, verse 84). The exegetists and apologists, as well as sciolists, have made of this immortal phrase a bone of theological contention. Schmiedel, who with Harnack believes the words to have been uttered by our Savior, nevertheless points out various details which prefigure the same things in the crucifix—the just man hanging on the stake, the perforated hands and feet, the mocking crowd, the soldiers gambling for the clothes, everything takes place as described in the Psalm. Lublinski (in "Dogma," page 93) and Arthur Drews (in "The Historicity of Jesus," page 150), demur at the orthodox Christian conclusions of Harnack and Schmiedel.

A beloved master, the late Solomon Schecter, disposed of the question in his usual open style. "The world is big enough," he has said to me, "for both Jehovah and Jesus, for two such grand faiths as the Hebrew and the Christian." But he saw Christianity only in its historical sequence, and not as a continuator of Judaism; rather, a branching away from the main trunk. If it had not been for Constantine, the world might be worshiping Mithra today, was the erudite and worthy man's belief. Enveloped in the mists of the first two centuries of Christianity seems to have had a narrow escape for the doctrines of Mithraism. That Salomon Reinach practically admits in his "Orpheus," a most significant study of comparative religions from the pen of this French savant.

Once upon a time I played the organ in a "shool," a reformed, not an orthodox, synagogue; played indifferently well. But my acquaintance with the Jewish liturgy dates back to my boyhood in Philadelphia, where I studied Hebrew, in company with Latin. The reason? My mother fondly hoped that I might become a priest—the very though of which makes me shudder now. The religious in me found vent in music and my love of change was gratified by playing the Hebrew service on Shabbas (Saturday) and the Roman Catholic on our Sabbath.

I have always entertained a peculiar admiration for the Jews and Judaism. It began with the study of Semitic literature of the Talmud, above all of Hebrew poetry, the most sublime in our language, as Matthew Arnold asserts in his comparative estimate of Greek and Hebraic cultures. My dearest friends have been, still are, of that race. Prejudice, social or political, against the Jew I not only detest, but I have never been able to comprehend. My early playmates were Jewish boys and girls. I have stood under the "Choopah" (marriage canopy) and have seen many a Bar-Mitzvah; even sat "Shivah" for the dead father of intimate friends. From Rafael Joseffy to Georg Brandes; from the brilliant Hungarian virtuoso that was Joseffy—whose father, a learned rabbi, I visited at Budapest—in Pest-Ofen—in 1903, when he was eighty-four, an orientalist, a linguist with twenty-six languages, ancient and modern, at the tip of his tongue—to Professor Brandes, the Danish scholar, an intellectual giant, and a critic in the direct line of Sainte-Beuve and Taine—both men I knew and loved.

Whther the Jew has attained the summits as a creator in the Seven Arts I cannot speak authoritatively, although the Old Testament furnishes abundant evidences that he has in poetry. Disraeli (Beaconsfield), who liked to tease Gladstone by calling him "Frohstein" and pointing to his rugged Jewish prophet's features, has written of his race most eloquently. I should like to quote a passage in its entirety, but time and space forbid. But an excerpt I permit myself the luxury of reproduction: "The ear, the voice, the fancy teeming with combinations, the inspiration fervid with picture and emotion, that came from Caucasus, and which we have preserved unpolluted, have endowed us with almost the exclusive privilege of music; that science of harmonious sounds which the ancients recognize as most divine and deified in the person of their most beautiful creation. . . ." He goes on: "There is not a company of singers, not an orchestra in a single capital, that is not crowded with our children under feigned names which they adopt to conciliate the dark aversion which your posterity will some day disclaim with shame and disgust. . . ."

Lord Beaconsfield mentions Rossini, Meyerbeer, Mendelssohn as Jewish composers, and Pasta and Grisi among the singers. Probably he had not heard Rossini's witticism uttered on his deathbed: "For heaven's sake, don't bury me in the Jewish cemetery!" Nor did Beaconsfield look far enough ahead when he wrote "dark aversion"—which is wonderful. Today the boot is on the other leg. It may be Gentiles who will be forced to change their names to Jewish. I could easily sign myself "Shamus Hanuchah" leaving out the "lichts"—or pattern after the name Paderewski jokingly wrote on his photograph—"For Jacob Hunekerstein."

And I am ashamed to confess that I know Jews who themselves are ashamed of having been born Jews. Incredible! In Vienna I have seen St. Stefan's cathedral crowded at 11 o'clock high mass by most fervent worshippers, the majority of whom seemed Semitic, which prompted me to propound the riddle: When is a Jew not a Jew? Answer: When he is a Roman Catholic in Vienna But you never can tell. As Joseffy used to say when some musician with a nose like the Ten Commandments was introduced, as, for example, M. Fontaine, "He means Brunen, or, in Hebrew, Pischa. He is not a Jew, but his grandmother wore a 'scheitel'" (the wig still worn by orthodox Jewish women). The truth is that among the virtuosi, singers, actors, the Jew holds first place.

Liszt and Paganini are the exceptions, and Paganini could easily pass in an east-side crowd as Jehudah. As to the Wagner controversy, not started by Nietzsche, but by Rossini and Meyerbeer, who referred to Wagner as Jewish, that was settled by O. G. Sonneck in his little book, "Was Wagner a Jew?" but only after I had introduced to the columns of the New York "Times" Sunday Magazine in 1913 a book by Otto Bournot entitled "Ludwig Geyer". Geyer was, as you may remember, the stepfather of Richard Wagner. Bournot had access to the Baireuth archives and delved into the newspapers of Geyer's days. August Bottiger's "Necrology" had hitherto been the chief source. Mary Burrell's "Life of Wagner" was the first to give the true spelling of the name of Wagner's mother, which was Bertz, which may be Jewish or German, as you like.

In 1896 I attended the Wagner festival at Baireuth. Between performances I tramped the Franconian hills. My toes hurt me. Looking for a corn cutter, I found one not far from the Wagner house. The old chap seated me in the doorway, probably to get better light, and as he crouched over my feet in the street I asked him if he had known Richard Wagner. "Know Wagner?" he irascibly replied. "He passed my shop every day. Many the times I cut his corns. O, no! not here, over yonder!"—he jerked his head in the direction of Wahnfried. I inquired what kind of a looking man was Wagner. "He was a little bowlegged Jew, and he always wore a long cloak to hide his crooked legs." Enfin! the truth from the mouth of babes. This beats Nietzsche and his "Vulture" Geyer.

Not religion, not nationality, but race, counts in the individual. Wagner looked like a Jew. And there are many red-haired Jews with pug noses and light blue eyes. Renan in "Le Judaisme" has shown us how non-Jewish elements were in the course of time incorporated within the race. The Chazars of eastern Europe are Jews only a thousand years old. Dr. Brandes in a confession of his views on the subject has said—in "The Journal for Jewish History and Literature," published at Stockholm ("Tiedscript for Judisk Historia") and quoted by Bernard G. Richards in a capital study of Brandes —"from the fifteenth to the sixteenth year of my life I regarded Judaism purely as a religion."

But when he was abused as a Jew then Georg Brandes felt himself a genuine Jew. Many a man has found himself in a similar position. Atavistic impulses, submerged in subconsciousness, may explain why certain men, Gentiles, scholars, by nature noncombatants, have left their peaceful study, jeopardized their lives, ruined their reputations to battle for an obscure Jew—Dreyfus. Zola, of Greek-Levantine origin, perhaps Italian and Jew, was one of those valiant souls who fought for the truth. Anatole France, born Thibault, another. Count Thibault at the time of the Dreyfus uproar challenged the great writer who signs himself Anatole France to prove his right to that distinguished Roman Catholic name. That the gentle Anatole is the very spit and spawn of a Jew so far as appearance goes; that since Heine (baptized a Christian) no such union of mocking irony and tender, poetic emotion can be noted in the work of any writer, are alike valueless as testimony. Nevertheless many believe in this Hebraic strain, just as they feel it in the subtley of Cardinal Newman's writing—he was of Dutch stock—and in the humor of Charles Lamb. Both Englishmen are accredited with the "precious quintessence," as Du Maurier would say.

I have had to stand a lot of good natured fun poked at me for my Jewish propensity. I can stand it, as I have a solid substratum of history for my speculations. Some years ago the Contemporary Review printed an article entitled "The Jew in Music," with this motto from Oscar Wilde's "Salome": "The Jews believe only in what they cannot see." The writer's name was signed A. E. Keeton. Not even the assertion that Beethoven was a Belgian is half so iconoclastic as some of the assumptions made in this study. "When Mozart first appeared as a prodigy before the future queen of France, Marie Antoinette, she announced that 'a genius must not be a Jew.'" The original name, Ozart, was changed. Mozard was baptized! which anecdote makes the scalp to freeze, though not because of its verisimilitude. Beethoven and Rubinstein looked alike; ergo! But then they didn't.

Once upon a time I wrote a Jewish story, "The Shofar Blew at Sunset." Maggie Cline liked it; so did Israel Zangwill. I preserve a letter from Mr. Zangwill telling me of his liking. The story appeared in Mlle. New York, now defunct. It was afterward translated into Yiddish, though it did not give general satisfaction in either camp, Jewish or Christian. It revealed in the cantillations and employed as leading motive the shofar or ram's horn blown in the synagogues on Yom Kippur or the Day of Atonement. The scroll of the Torah also appeared. But these liturgical references didn't offend; it was my surprising denunciation of Jewish materialism in New York that was the rock of offense. I say surprising, for what is a Christian born doing in another field and finding fault? I'm sure I can't say why, unless that in writing the tale I unconsciously dramatized myself as a reproaching voice. There was much in my strictures of that son of Hanan who prowled through the streets of the Holy City in the year A. D. 62, crying aloud, "Woe, woe upon Jerusalem!"

I remember that I predicted because of the luxury of the American Jew the lofty Jewish idealism might be submerged in a flood of indifference and disbelief. Prosperity would prove the snag. In the heart of the Jew is the true Zion, not in success nor in some faraway land. Naturally that didn't please the Zionists. One professional Jewish publication, no longer in existence, said that I preached like a rabbi (reb) but thought like a goi. The word "chutzpah" was also used. Yet wasn't I right? It is the spiritual ark of the covenant, the spirit of the law, and not the letter that killeth, which should be enshrined in the heart of the Jew. He may dream of Palestine, of its skies of the "few large stars," a land overflowing with milk and honey; but in the depths of his soul it is the living God to whom he must go for spiritual sustenance. God, the eternal reservoir of our earthly certitudes! Schma' Ysrael!

And now, for fear that all this sounds more like a sermon than a sonnet—and I'm in earnest, not forgetting that the lofty ethics of the Old Testament apply quite as much to Christians as to Jews on the second Sunday after Easter and Pesach—I'll conclude with the statement that the most Jewish composer I know of, bar none, is Ernest Bloch, a Swiss musician residing in this city. He has great gifts, abundant science, and an inborn sense of orchestral color and rhythms. I heard him conduct a concert at Philadelphia entirely devoted to his own works. I shall not soon forget the emotional impression created by his "Solomon" for violoncello solo and orchestra, interpreted on the solo instrument by that splendid young artist, Hans Kindler, the first 'cellist of the Philadelphia orchestra. It is a masterpiece. But the concert was too long; there were color and sentiment that cloyed, and the beat of the composer-conductor was not propulsive. With Leopold Stokowski things would have gone at a brisker tempo and charged with more vitality. As the final note was sounded a well-known wit and jurist, a Hebrew—if I say more Philadelphia will surely recognize the man—passed into the lobby of the Academy of Music. He sighed. He said with the self-mocking irony of his race, "Beautiful music, but another afternoon like this and I'll turn anti-Semite!" Selah!—Courtesy of the New York Times.

PUNISHING THE OPPRESSORS.

The history of the sufferings of the Jews of Palestine under Turkish rule now forms the topic of the day. Several of the former Turkish officials who took part in the cruel persecution and brutal maltreatment of the Jews have after long searching been arrested by the English military authorities. Thus the former Turkish head physician of Nazareth, Hassan Bey, has just been taken into custody. Already the mere mention of this execrable person awakens memories of horror in our hearts. He was the chief initiator of the purpose of ill-treating and blackmailing innocent people. Frightful things are related of this monster's barbarous cruelty. It was he who in the spring of 1917 in Nazareth subjected the Jewish workman Schwarz to the most dreadful tortures until the unhappy man put an end to his intolerable sufferings by committing suicide. It was also Hassan Bey who had the teacher Ehrlich, Mendel Chankin and the community president Rosenberg, flogged in the most barbarous manner. He had boiling eggs placed under the arms of the laborer Zwi Nadab in order to extort a confession from him. He was thoroughly merciless, and tortured Jewish men, women and children, including the aged and the sick. The English authorities had been long searching in vain for him until the Jewish colonist Gorki, one of his victims, succeeded in running him to earth. The colonist had him arrested and he is now confined in the prison at Jaffa with Jewish gendarmes guarding him. New witnesses against him and persons who have suffered injury at his hands are appearing every day. It is reported that the notorious Kaimakam of Haifa, who likewise has innumerable crimes against the Jews and Arabs on his conscience, has also been arrested.

JEWISH DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION IN LITHUANIA.

In harmony with the promises made to Jews in connection with the grant to them of cultural autonomy, a Jewish education department, headed by Dr. Deutchlander, has been established in Lithuania. The certificates of approved Jewish schools have been declared as equivalent to those issued to students at state schools.

NEWS FROM LONDON

By Our Correspondent Dr. M. Epstein

London, May 20, 1919.

At length we in London have a Reconstruction scheme. It originated with one of the younger men in the community and that is perhaps among its recommendations. The gentleman in question is Mr. Robert Waley Cohen, the Junior Vice-President of the United Synagogue. Himself the scion of a distinguished family with a proud record of communal service, Mr. Cohen is but maintaining a high tradition. He is of those who "think imperially", and therefore is able to conceive of great schemes. His own personal success in the city, whither he proceeded on leaving Cambridge, is perhaps due to this quality of his, and there is every reason to believe that the scheme for the community will bear fruit if it is properly run. In brief, Mr. Cohen wants to raise one million pounds sterling (five million dollars) as a great Jewish War Memorial. And what will he do with the money? He suggests that Jews' College should be moved from London to Oxford or Cambridge, that Jewish religious education in England should be placed on a sound footing, and that a system of District Rabbinates be introduced all over Great Britain.

The scheme was propounded before the Council of Jews' College, which would make it appear that the Jews' College Reform is the principal item in the program. The debate was remarkable for the interchange of views on the religious life of the community. The aim of the scheme was to lend support to Traditional Judaism. In the debate many thoughtful men questioned the extent of the actual traditional way of life which characterized most Anglo-Jews. What of the Dietary laws? What of Hebrew as the language of prayer? What of the Sabbath? But agreement was general that the old ways needed keeping, that the community should become more serious in its attitude to Jewish life. To this end its religious leaders should be of the best. To obtain the best, Jews' College must be remodeled, improved, changed.

This is an old controversy. Jews' College has never been popular with the community, and perhaps among its keenest critics were those who were brought up within its walls. Somehow the community was not content with the average type of minister whom the College produced. Again and again the suggestion was mooted to close the College altogether, or to remove it from London. Some said it was not English enough: the teachers were foreign to the life and ideals of the country. Others again said that the College was not Jewish enough and that it ought to be a real Yeshiba. But many considerations were urged both against its total closing down or its removal to the seat of one of the older universities. For a time the College Council stuck to its guns and carried on. Now, as it were, in an instant, the College looms favorably in the public eye and, wonderful to relate, the present Council at length agrees to its removal to either Oxford or Cambridge. It is hoped that the university atmosphere of either of these places will have a beneficial effect on the future generations of Jewish ministers in England. It is hoped that they will be cultured in the general sense and well acquainted with Hebrew learning.

Certainly the proposal is attractive. Its very comprehensiveness recommends it to the community. No less attractive are the other two items in the program. For one thing it is proposed to divide up the country into "dioceses", with a rabbi at the head of each. That must inevitably lead to raising the tone of many a small provincial congregation both in its own eyes and in the estimation of its neighbors. The improvement in Jewish religious education would be but the coping stone of the structure. Thoroughly sound and far reaching in its consequences—so the scheme may be described, and it only remains to collect the rather large amount mentioned. The promoters of the scheme have no fear on this score. They believe the community will respond. So it was decided to ask the lay head of the community, Mr. Lionel de Rothschild, to take the lead, and he has consented. In his reply to the invitation he wrote as follows:

"Your letter raises a question of the utmost importance to the future of Judaism in the British Empire. I shall take immediate steps to call a meeting as widely representative as possible of the whole of our Community to consider your scheme, and, if it is adopted, I shall gladly assist in any way I can to secure its consummation.

"Our Community has recently been divided by large issues in which the strong convictions held on either side have led to deep cleavages which we must all regret. There can certainly be no finer war memorial than one which will maintain for future generations that which we all have in common—the great traditions of Judaism and of British citizenship. If the proposals which you make find acceptance in the Community throughout the Empire, it will, I feel sure, be a great satisfaction to us all to find ourselves once more united in a great cause."

The reference of Mr. de Rothschild to the divisions in the Community refer obviously to the formation of the League of British Jews and to the conduct of some of its members. Ever since the league was started it has never been taken seriously by the Community in general. It was regarded as the offspring of fright, and most people rather poked fun at it. But the more it was chaffed the more seriously it took itself. Among those who chaffed it most was the "Jewish Chronicle," and naturally to the leaders of the league the "Communal organ" became anathema. Now it happened that the "Jewish Chronicle" recently printed an article on Bolshevism, which it was perfectly entitled to do. But the "Morning Post," which has made Anti-Semitism one of its "stunts," pounced upon this, crying in holy wrath: "Hal Behold the Jews. They are Bolshevists. Or they appear to be. They should loudly proclaim that they are not." And so on. It would have been surprising if the "Morning Post" had taken any other line. We expect this sort of criticism from that journal. But it is useless to protest. Would not the lamb have been foolish to protest to the wolf? One day the Jews are blamed for being "International Financiers," whatever that may mean; the next, they are held up to scorn for being Bolsheviks—without the least shred of evidence. People of the type of the "Morning Post" will have it both ways. Most people regarded its antics with disgust. But ten famous "leaguers," fearful as ever, wrote a letter to the "Post," protesting that British Jews are not Bolsheviks and giving their league a little advertisement. The letter was very much resented. It may be said that practically the whole of the Community was up in arms against it, while the excuses of some of the signatories prove that even they do not feel quite at ease about it. There is little doubt that the letter was cringing. Whether the "Morning Post" likes it or not, Jews surely claim the same right as other people either to accept or reject Bolshevism. It is a question of freedom of opinion, and we have yet to learn in this country that only the opinions of Jews are to be fettered. Jews claim the right of freedom of thought on all subjects under the sun, and if some Jews favor Bolshevism, that is their concern.

The "Morning Star" rather tried to indicate that Bolshevism was a specialty of the "foreign" Jew in the country. Needless to add, that is a gross travesty. Possibly there may be "foreign" or "native" Jews who welcome Bolshevism. Certainly there are others who detest the new doctrines. That is not the question at issue. The question at issue is that Jews, like their fellow-citizens, should have perfect freedom of thought. In bowing low to the "Morning Post" the ten signatories of the condemned letter were siding with repression of thought. Jews who know what all forms of oppression mean ought surely to be to the fore in support of liberty. The whole wretched business was an error of judgment, and the sooner the Community comes to realize that it needs union just now, the better.

In Anglo-Jewry and beyond a united front is essential. It is a thousand pities that men with honored names and influence should apparently be thinking more of themselves and less of the Community. All need to put their shoulders to the wheel. That is why Mr. Lionel de Rothschild's sentiment, expressed in the letter quoted above, is exceedingly welcome. It is to be hoped that in international affairs likewise Jews will unite. Their cause is one of Right and Justice, and even the "Morning Post" will admit (we presume) that as men and citizens of the British Empire Jews are in duty bound to do all they can to bring justice and fair treatment to Jews in such countries as Poland or Roumania. These people have suffered greatly, and relief can come only if Jews from western countries and America unite in a call for justice.

It was only right, therefore, for the Order to be represented at Paris. It would be a good thing likewise if a permanent General International Jewish Committee resulted from all the sectional deliberations at the French capital. We need not fear the "Morning Post" or its associates. Jews have as much right as other folk to organize themselves internationally if need be. Their patriotism will not suffer, and the "Morning Post" should be bluntly told so. But possibly the Jewish "stunt" will be neglected presently for the Irish "stunt." The existence of the "Morning Post" is conditioned by the Irish problem. The "Post" lives to croak against Ireland and Irish Home Rule. Be that as it may, Jews require a little more of the spirit of independence. Their cause is just and assistance is urgent.

This was well brought out at the meeting of protest against the Polish pogroms. Lord Parmore presided over a large and representative gathering, and Mr. Israel Cohen, who has returned from Poland, presented a heart-rending report. Is it not noteworthy that Jews should suffer more than other peoples? The Belgians suffered during the late war; so did the residents in the north of France; so did the Serbians; so did the Polish and Galician Jews. But when the war ceased the sufferings of all the others but the Jews ceased. The Jews continue to be oppressed. It would seem that the Poles are celebrating their newly-won national life by shedding blood merrily and behaving like brute barbarians. Even their own prime minister is ashamed of their conduct and threatens to resign. Mr. Paderewski makes promises at Paris which in Poland are broken. The Poles are suffering from too much liberty, and the Jew is their victim. It is not fair. A call of protest should be heard from all parts of the world where the sense of justice is not yet dead.

We have at present in London a distinguished Jewish visitor from Spain in the person of Dr. A. S. Yahuda. Dr. Yahuda is a British subject, born in Jerusalem and trained in Germany, where he lived for many years before the war as a teacher of Arabic and Semitic Philology. Before the war the German government were glad to have him in their country; when the war broke out he was cold-shouldered, and were it not for a lucky accident which found him in Spain in August, 1914, he would doubtless have been interned at Ruhleben. In Spain his work was admired, and a special law was passed to enable him, a foreigner, to hold a chair at the University of Madrid. His subject is interesting—the History and Literature of the Jews in Spain. It is a unique position, and Dr. Yahuda has been able to make the most of it. He is at present on a scientific mission for the Spanish government, and he relates with pleasure that gradually Jewish life is beginning to manifest itself in Spain, and that the Spanish government welcomes it.

Among the New Year's honors there was included a knighthood for Prof. Israel Gollancz. Sir Israel is one of the leading academic teachers of English in this country; he is professor at the University of London, secretary of the British Academy and popular everywhere. His lectures attract crowds of students, just as his personality attracts hosts of friends. Sir Israel is a brother of the Rev. Prof. Hermann Gollancz, who has a long record of faithful service in the Community, and both have sprung from the home of a Jewish minister.

Honor in another way was conferred on Mr. S. Rehfisch, who by the way, is a member of the London Lodge. For many years Mr. Rehfisch has been interpreter at the Whitechapel County Court, where, as may be expected, Jewish litigants abound. Not all of them can speak the King's English, and in order to assist Judge Cluer, Mr. Rehfisch acted as interpreter, being an official of the Board of Deputies. The Board recently resolved for financial reasons to discontinue the employment of Mr. Rehfisch, and Judge Cluer publicly testified to his integrity and ability.

Many Jews worked very hard all through the war in aid of the Belgian refugees in this country. They have been honored at the hands of King Albert, and now, for the purpose [illegible] tion in Belgium, Mr [illegible] late Home Secretary, has [illegible] by the British government [illegible] missioner to Belgium. It is a task in which Mr. Samuel may be expected to revel, and Belgium will be sure to profit by the work of so able an administrator.

The work of the London Lodge is proceeding apace. We are slowly gathering strength for increased activities in the coming period, and among other things we hope to extend our membership. Already this session we have had a couple of very successful meetings, and they will doubtless be followed by others after the summer recess.

RECORDS PROVE JEWISH TROOPS AMONG BRAVEST.

Members of Race Win 400 Citations for Valor During War—Casualties May Reach 12,000.

By Justin McGrath,
Editorial Correspondent Universal Service.

Jokes on the pacifist tendencies of the Jews will have no appeal to excite laughter when the statistics of Jewish partician in the great war, now being compiled by the American Jewish War Records committee, are completed.

This committee has 120,000 records of Jewish soldiers in its files. When all the returns are in, it expects to have the records of 200,000 Jews who saw service.

If this expectation is met the record will show that the Jews supplied about 5 per cent of the military and naval forces of the United States.

This can be appreciated when it is understood the proportion of Jews in the United States to the total population is only about 3 per cent.

Jewish Casualties Heavy.

The Jewish casualties, so far listed, number 7,200. It is expected the final count will show from 10,000 to 12,000.

Four hundred citations for bravery already have been listed.

The largest centers of Jewish population, of course, supplied the greatest number of Jews to the service. New York state and city supplied more than one-third of all of those listed up to the present time—the total for the state standing now at 26,866, of which 22,210 were from New York City.

Illinois is credited with 3,459, of which 2,670 were from Chicago, and Massachusetts with 3,777, of which 830 were from Boston.

Nine hundred and twelve answered the call to the colors from San Francisco.

Proved Their Mettle.

The famous "77th" Division, of which Colonel Whittlesey commanded a battallion, was largely Jewish. When Colonel Whittlesey was surrounded by the Germans and called upon to surrender, his reply to the German courier was "Tell 'em to go to hell." He and his men, many of whom were Jewish, fought on until they were rescued by other American forces.

Although the infantry branch of the American army constituted but 20.66 per cent of the entire army, the Jews attached to the infantry branch constituted 51.07 per cent of the total number of Jews in the service.

The Marine Corps is essentially a fighting organization. Every man who enlisted in this corps did so with the expectation that he would be sent where the fighting was the thickest. Of the 60,000 Marines, 1,700 or 3 per cent, were Jewish, according to the records already listed.

Fired by Chateau Thierry.

Of the 1,700 Jewish Marines, fully 30 per cent enlisted immediately after June 5, 1918, the day after it was published to the world that the Marines were the "shock troops" at Chateau Thierry.

The total of all the Jewish casualties thus far listed is about 10,000. The total number of deaths is 883, or 4.01 per cent of the total in the American Expeditionary Forces.

The total wounded is 1,397, or 3.08 per cent of the total.

Of the infantry branch the Jews had 1,060 commissioned officers and 1,678 noncommissioned officers.

In the field artillery they had 225 commissioned officers and 373 noncommissioned officers.

In the infantry they had six colonels and lieutenant colonels, 31 majors, 174 captains, 228 first lieutenants, 369 second lieutenants and 244 lieutenants not designated.

In the field artillery they had six colonels and lieutenant colonels, six majors, 29 captains, 59 first lieutenants, 80 second lieutenants and 42 lieutenants not designated.

CELEBRATION IN HONOR OF RABBI ISADORE ROSENTHAL, BY LANCASTER LODGE NO. 228, LANCASTER, PA.

Ending the ceremonies in honor of Rabbi Rosenthal, a banquet was held June 11, in the Hotel Brunswick by the congregation of the Temple Shaarai Shomayim. Along with the congregation members of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith a number of guests from all parts of the country, who came to pay tribute to the Rabbi, were present. The banquet was one of the most elaborate ever held in the hotel.

During the dinner presents were given the Rabbi as acknowledgements of the excellent work he has done during his service to the church and community. Louis Samler, president of the congregation, presented Rabbi Rosenthal with a check for $2,500 in behalf of the congregation.

The Rabbi was also presented with a loving cup by Rev. Haas, of Harrisburg, in behalf of the Salem Lodge, I. O. B. B., of Harrisburg. The District Lodge No. 3, I. O. B. B., presented him with a beautiful vase of silver which was placed in the center of an immense floral piece. The vase stands about two feet high and was given as a token of appreciation for the work that he has done in that organization.

The burning of the mortgage on the Temple Shaarai Shomayim was one of the most impressive features of the evening. This was started by Louis Samler, who with due ceremony, officially burned the paper.

Great tribute was paid to the Rabbi by the speakers, all of whom had worked with Rabbi Rosenthal either in civil life or in religious work. The speakers of the evening were: Hon. Harry L. Trout, mayor of Lancaster; Dr. William Rosenau, of Boston; Rev. Henry H. Apple, D. D., president of Franklin and Marshall College; Dr. J. B. Pollack, of Jersey City; Judge William H. Keller, judge of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania; Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle; John E. Malone, Joseph Salus, of Atlantic City; Rev. Haas, of Harrisburg; L. R. Geisenberger and Louis Samler, president of the Shaarai Shomayim congregation.

The first speech of the evening was delivered by Mayor Trout, who told of the work done by Dr. Rosenthal in the capacity of councilman. "Dr. Rosenthal is held high in the esteem and respect of everybody in the city," the mayor said. He also made mention of the great work of Dr. Rosenthal during war drives through the county.

Dr. William Roseneau, the next speaker, spoke on the reminiscences of their college days as they attended college at the same time in Cincinnati. He told many of the many fine points of Dr. Rosenthal during their college life.

Dr. Henry H. Apple, president of the Franklin and Marshall College, dwelt upon his association with Dr. Rosenthal during war work in Lancaster and paid high tribute to sterling qualities of the man.

Dr. J. B. Pollack, of Jersey City, head of the Hudson County Tuberculosis Sanatorium and past president of the District Lodge No. 3, I. O. B. B., was present to pay tribute in official manner to the Rabbi as was Marcus Feuchtwanger, of Newcastle, who is now president of the District.

Judge William H. Keller, of the Pennsylvania Superior Court, told of his association with Dr. Rosenthal in a legal way.

John E. Malone, who was one of the great workers in the drive throughout the city and county during the campaigns here, was present to pay tribute to the Rabbi for his work during these times.

Joseph Salus, of Atlantic City, ex-Senator of New Jersey and a brother of Sam Salus, a Senator of Pennsylvania, gave a very interesting address.

Lionel R. Geisenberger, the late partner of Rabbi Rosenthal for eighteen years, told of the finer qualities of the man as brought out in his business relations with him.

Presentation speeches were made by Dr. Haas, of Harrisburg, and Louis Samler, of the congregation. In presenting Dr. Rosenthal with the check for $2,500 Mr. Samler stated that it was little enough to give for the work that he has done during the past years with the church. Mr. Samler acted as toastmaster during the evening.

After the banquet the guests enjoyed dancing until an early hour in the morning. The music during the dinner was furnished by Roth's Orchestra and for the dancing by the Shure and Thorbahn Terpsichorean Jazz Orchestra.

TESTIMONIAL MEETING IN HONOR OF SOL HERZOG, PRESIDENT OF DISTRICT NO. 5, BY ARGO LODGE, WASHINGTON.

By A. Stern.

Argo Lodge No. 413 of Washington, D. C., held a testimonial meeting on the evening of May 28 in honor of Mr. Sol Herzog, President of District Grand Lodge No. 5. The members of Argo Lodge expressed their appreciation of the honor of again having a member of their lodge to head the District Grand Lodge. As a testimonial on this occasion a beautiful and appropriately engraved silver service was presented to him.

One of the many valuable services which Sol Herzog rendered to Argo Lodge for more than twenty-five years has been the editing of a most original and interesting monthly lodge paper known as the Argo News.

The wit and humor of this little paper bears the stamp of Bro. Sol Herzog's pleasing, polished and up-to-date style. Each wit coming from his pen always leaves a lasting impression of a sound moral effect.

The meeting was opened with the "Star Spangled Banner," played by the Y. M. H. A. orchestra. Bro. Hyman N. Levy, the president of Argo Lodge, introduced Judge Milton Strasburger as chairman of the evening. In his presentation address the judge gave a terse review of the history of the Order and its noble work. "Upon brotherly love and harmony," said he, "this great International Order was founded 76 years ago, and tonight, with a feeling of the purest brotherly love, we, the members of Argo Lodge and our friends have assembled to honor the sterling qualities of our beloved Bro. Sol Herzog, on the occasion of his being President of our District Grand Lodge, by presenting him with FOUR pieces of sterling silver."

Brother Herzog responded in his novel and original manner. "Originality" is born with him. He is original in his speeches in the lodge room as well as in his daily business life, and this born gift has made him one of the most popular men in the Capital of the Nation.

Capt. Julius I. Peyser, as an ex-President of the District Grand Lodge and ex-Chief of the Housing Division, Department of War, took for his text "Americanism." He said in part: "It is the duty of every good Jew to be a member of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. Not only to be in good standing with the Financial Secretary, but to be an active worker in the lodge, for the good of our race and the welfare of humanity. For a good Ben B'rith is unquestionably a good American."

Miss Rosalie Livingston, the youngest sister of Bro. Ben Livingston, entertained the audience with a vocal solo. The Rev. Dr. Abram Simon spoke on "B'nai B'rith Ideals."

Judge Charles F. Feidelson, the First Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 5, came from Savannah, Ga., especially to attend this Testimonial Meeting. In his eloquent address he expressed the hope that the Order will in the near future begin to take in members from 14 to 16 years of age, prepare them and teach them according to the B'nai B'rith ideals, in order that when at the age of 21 they will be initiated as full members of the Order they may be trained and well prepared to carry forward the noble work according to the plans, which we now lay out for them.

Bro. Edwin L. Levy, the Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 5, came from Richmond, Va., to honor the occasion with his presence. On account of the lateness of the hour he declined to speak.

The main hall of the Jewish Welfare Board, Eleventh and Pennsylvania ave., was packed to the doors by members and their friends.

The enthusiastic meeting closed with the singing of "America," and refreshments were served.

The District Grand Lodge was organized in 1868. Since that time Argo Lodge has had the honor of having eight of its members as Presidents of the District Grand Lodge, of whom the living ones are Simon Wolf, Samuel Gans and Capt. Julius I. Peyser, the latter having occupied this high office seven years ago.

JEWS FERVENTLY PATRIOTIC.

Be it remembered, and all history will show it, that in those lands in which the Jews are treated with justice and equality, there is a fervid patriotism and a faith of citizenship that will bear comparison with any class in any community and in any country. It is only what should be expected from those who, after all, have been known throughout the generations as men who have done their duty, who have sought justice and who have tried to do justice.—Lord Reading.

PALESTINE SELF-GOVERNMENT BEGINS.

Four hundred delegates, democratically chosen at elections participated in by every Jewish resident of Palestine, over twenty years of age, and regardless of sex, will convene at Jerusalem on May 18, L'ag B'omer, as the first Constituent Assembly of the land, and although the results of the elections are not yet known here, it is believed that a number of women will have seats in this historic body.

The Constituent Assembly was called into being by the Zionist Administrative Commission and its purposes were defined at a Conference of Palestine Jews which took place at Tel Aviv from the 15th to the 19th Shevat (Dec. 18 to 22). The conference was participated in by representatives of all parties in Jewish Palestine, and limited the scope of the Constituent Assembly to internal questions, such as (1) the strengthening of Hebrew Culture and the recognition of Hebrew as the official Jewish language of Palestine; (2) determining the status and the functions of the Court of Arbitration (Mishat Hasholom); and (3) the political organization of Palestinian Jewry. It was determined that the Constituent Assembly should consist of a legislative and an executive body.

The campaign for the election of delegates to this historic body followed closely all of the finer features of American political campaigns. The various viewpoints found their expression in party slogans, and all elements, from the extremest conservative to the most radical, agitated vigorously, yet without rancor, for the selection of candidates whose views were in keeping with their own. One small faction, composed of extreme orthodox elements, declined to participate in the elections because of the full-suffrage provision, on the ground that it would not be in keeping with their religious views to sit in council with women. But the number who held this reactionary attitude was very negligible, notwithstanding that it was led by Reb Laibele, the Dayan of Jerusalem, who is the spokesman of the old, extremist settlement which is opposed to every innovation, including Zionism. It is hinted in Jerusalem that one of the compelling motives of Reb Laibele and his adherents was not so much a fundamental objection to sitting in council with the opposite sex, but the fact that the Mizrachi in Palestine agreed to full suffrage. The question had been submitted to the Rabbis of Palestine, and only eight sustained Reb Laibele's views, the rest declining to express any opinion.

The vast majority of the Orthodox participated in the elections, and many of their candidates were voted for by the women.

This fact is a source of deep disappointment to the Poale Zion who fought vigorously at the Provisional Conference for the enfranchisement of women, and during the campaign organized a special committee "Agudath Hanaschim" to carry on a campaign for their candidates to capture the female vote. In most of the results already known it is apparent that the women cast their votes for the conservative candidates, in many instances voting against candidates of their own sex. This has been especially gratifying to the Orthodox elements, who, notwithstanding that they accepted the full suffrage plan, nevertheless suffered many misgivings over the possibility of a feminized assembly.

Besides the Constituent Assembly for all Palestine, special provincial committees were elected. The following electoral districts had their own special committees: Jerusalem, Hebron, Jaffa, the Jewish colonies, Emek Israel, Haifa, the lower Galilean colonies, Tiberias, the Upper Galilean colonies, Saffed.

"POGROM" IN BUENOS AIRES.

Thousands of Jews were slaughtered in a "pogrom" conducted in Buenos Aires, January 9, according to a statement issued by the Zionist Organization of America, quoting a report it has received from the Argentine capital. According to this report a "White Guard" was organized there following a rumor that strikes in that city were the beginning of a Bolshevist revolution incited by the Jews. The report charged that, with co-operation of the police, the "White Guard" raided the Jewish quarters, "killing a number that cannot be estimated because all the bodies were buried in a common grave." The Argentine branch of the Zionist Organization, the report continued, finally succeeded in getting the police to end the "pogrom" after it had asserted there were no Bolsheviki among Argentine Jews.

JEWS ARE BLAMED FOR BOLSHEVISM IN RUSSIA.

We quote the following extracts from "A Collection of Reports on Bolshevism in Russia," presented to the British Parliament by command of His Majesty during April, 1919:

"The foregoing report will indicate the extremely critical nature of the present situation. The danger is now so great that I feel it my duty to call the attention of the British and all other governments to the fact that if an end is not put to Bolshevism in Russia at once the civilization of the whole world will be threatened. This is not an exaggeration, but a sober matter of fact; and the most unusual action of German and Austrian consul-general before referred to, in joining in protest of neutral legations appears to indicate that the danger is also being realized in German and Austrian quarters. I consider that the immediate suppression of Bolshevism is the greatest issue now before the world, not even excluding the war, which is still raging, and unless, as above stated, Bolshevism is nipped in the bud immediately, it is bound to spread in one form or another over Europe and the whole world, as it is organized and worked by Jews who have no nationality and whose one object is to destroy for their own ends the existing order of things. The only manner in which this danger could be averted would be collective action on the part of all powers."

The foregoing is an extract from a report by the Netherlands Minister of Petrograd to the British Minister at Christiania for transmission to Mr. Balfour.

"From examination of several laborer and peasant witnesses, I have evidence to the effect that the very smallest percentage of this district were pro-Bolsheviki, the majority of the laborers sympathizing with the summoning of a Constituent Assembly. Witnesses further stated that Bolshevik leaders did not represent Russian working classes, most of them being Jews".

From Dr. Alston, British Consul at Ekaterinburg, to Earl Curzon, Feb. 8, 1919.

"The Bolsheviki comprised chiefly Jews and Germans who were exceedingly active and enterprising."

From report of Lord Bilmarnock to Earl Curzon, Feb. 3, 1919.

"With regard to murder of the Imperial family at Ekaterinburg, there is further evidence to show that there were two parties in the local Soviet, one of which was anxious to save the Imperial family and the latter, headed by five Jews, two of whom were determined to have them murdered. These two Jews, by name Vainen and Safarof, went with Lenin when he made a journey across Germany. On pretext that a Russian Guard had stolen 70,000 roubles, they were removed from the house between the 8th and 12th. The guards were replaced by a house guard of thirteen, consisting of ten Letts and three Jews, two of whom were called Laipont and Yurowcki, and one whose name is not known."

From report of General Knox to War Office, Feb. 5, 1919.

"I have been for ten years in Russia, and have been in Petrograd through the whole of the revolution. I spent six weeks in the Fortress of Peter and Paul, acted as chaplain in His Majesty's submarines in the Baltic for four years, and was in contact with the 9th Russian Army in Roumania during the autumn of 1917, whilst visiting German missions and hospitals, and had ample opportunity of studying Bolshevik methods. It originated in German propaganda and was, and is being carried out by international Jews.

"All business became paralyzed, shops were closed, Jews became the possessors of most of the business houses, and horrible scenes of starvation became common in the country districts. The peasants put their children to death rather than see them starve. In a village on the Dvina, not far from Schlusselberg, a mother hanged three of her children."

A TRIBUTE TO JEWS.

The Protestants and Catholics of this country are, of course, a thousand times as rich as all the Jews combined, and richer. Yet the Jews of this country have given to Protestant and Catholic charities at least a thousand times as much as all the Protestants and Catholics have given to the Jewish charities. This is not written by a Jew, as readers perhaps know, and is not said in criticism of Protestants or Catholics. A man may do as he pleases. It is mentioned because it is truth and ought to put to shame those that ignorantly and stupidly attack the Jews, not realizing their good qualities, hating them with the inherited hate of ignorance and prejudice.—Arthur Brisbane in the Washington Times.

PORTLAND LODGE, PORTLAND, OREGON.

(By A. Weinstein.)

To me has been assigned the duty of reporting our weekly metings. This is an entirely new task to me and as this is my first attempt to write you and feeling that our lodge should appear in our paper in the true light, I am perhaps writing at greater length this time than I will in the future.

So here we appear on the scene to take advantage of the kind offer of the press committee of the B'nai B'rith News, and we beg to report the proceedings of the last meeting of Portland Lodge No. 65, which we are happy and proud to say is the largest in number West of Chicago, and, may we add, not at all behind on all matters appertaining to the good of the cause the Order represents and the consciousness of our duties at large. Due to the efforts of a few far-seeing brethren, we have succeeded in consolidating the Portland lodges and are today reaping its benefits. Meeting after meeting an amazing progress can readily be noted and the exchange of views and ideas is bound to redound to general education and mental development. We are becoming a factor in communal life. Our leaders know where to go to and where to find us and there is no shirking of responsibilities and anything that is of a Jewish nature interests the members of our lodge. Looking upon it in this manner, we hope to enlist every good self-respecting Jew, if not directly with us as an active member at least as a passive one.

May we at this time add that at our last meeting held Tuesday, May 6, we received over forty new members into the Order. Our degree team gave the amplified form of initiation. We have a great deal of timber to choose from and will in the very near future have a substitute team as well. After the initiatory ceremony a very impressive lecture was delivered by one of our brothers, who is Professor of Psychology at Reed College, Dr. Koehs, impressing on the candidates the principles of Service, Culture and Philanthropy, all of which was well received not only by the candidates, but the membership at large.

We in Portland are the proud possessors of the greatest Jewish citizen in the West—our own Bro. Ben Selling—who was one of the advocates of the consolidation of the lodges. He attends when possible and is always ready and willing to give a helping hand. When called upon for a talk at our last meeting, it was several minutes before the applause subsided so he could proceed. His remarks were good and timely and highly appreciated and his words were, as always, interwoven with the thought of doing good for the Jew in need wherever he may be. Bro. Dr. A. Tilzer, who just recently returned from California, was also listened to very attentively, and our own secretary, Bro. Ed. Weinbaum, who just recently returned from the East, spoke of the interview he had with Brother Seelenfreund in Chicago and the cordial reception given him.

Under "the good and welfare of the Order," light refreshments and cigars were passed around. Lodge closed with the promise of a larger attendance at the next meeting, Tuesday, May 10.

TORONTO LODGE, TORONTO, CANADA.

A banquet under the auspices of Toronto Lodge No. 836, of Toronto, Canada, was held in the King Edward Hotel on June 8, 1919. Two members of Parliament, other distinguished government officials, and leading co-religionists of that city were guests of honor and the Montefiore Lodge Degree Team of Buffalo, N. Y., officiated at a class initiation of seventy candidates.

Bro. Charles H. Shapiro, of Bridgeport, Conn., senator from the state of Connecticut, represented the District Grand Lodge on that occasion. The class initiation was held during the day at a special meeting of the lodge. Addresses were delivered by Alderman Louis M. Singer, Joseph G. Shapiro and others.

The address of Mr. Singer was as follows:

The Jew was too numerically inferior to turn any country into Bolshevism, even if he would, and the appellation "Bolsheviks" to the general body of Jews was a wicked slander and calumny, declared ex-Alderman Louis M. Singer, to some 300 members of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, who held a banquet in the King Edward Hotel last night.

Mr. Singer outlined first the details of this new order which has made such amazing strides in Toronto during the last few months. The name, he said, showed clearly that there were no Bolshevik tendencies among the Jews, for it meant "Children of the Covenant," those who observe their covenants, and want others to observe them, said the speaker.

Because one renegade Jew, Leon Trotzky, had allied himself with a band of murderers and cut-throats was no reason that the rest of the Jews should be termed Bolsheviks, although, said Mr. Singer, he was putting forth no argument against the term, for to argue was an admission.

Could Not Tyrannize.

He pointed out that the percentage of Jews in Russia was 4 per cent, in Canada 1 per cent, in the United States 3 per cent, ½ per cent in the British Empire, and 3 per cent in Roumania. In the United States alone more Jews in proportion to other nationalities had offered their services, and laid down their lives for the allied cause. Bolshevism in any country, declared Mr. Singer, depended wholly upon physical power, then how could 4 per cent in a country like Russia control and tyrannize over the other 96 per cent, in Russia, too, where, if anything, the Jew is restricted more than in any other country.

Mr. Singer in elaborating his cause gave a large number of facts and figures to show that the terming of the Jews, "Bolsheviks," was only done so by those who did not think. For the greatest authorities, said the speaker, had declared that Jews were a menace to Bolshevism.

Fought for Allies.

Hon. Joseph Shapiro, senator for the state of Connecticut and representative of District Grand Lodge No. 1, outlined the work of the Order, which he declared was closely united with the work of Israel.

The speaker told of the 200,000 Jewish boys who had gone from the United States to fight for the cause of the allies. "These boys," he declared, "were not Bolshevists." Hon. Mr. Shapiro in his speech delved far back into the history of the Jews, and related the divine ancestry of the Jews. He sounded a warning also to those Jews who wanted to give up the name of "Jew" and substitute something else in its place. Judaism, he said, had gone on and on for thousands of years, and it was needed now just as much as ever, for there was need of all the different religions on earth. Each should seek to gain an insight into the other's perspective.

H. Hartley Dewart, K. C., M. L. A., after a witty introduction, in which he wanted to know if it were not possible for him to join such a model Order as he felt this would be, praised the Jew for the loyalty he displayed in every case to the country of his adoption. The sufferings of the Jew in Russia, said Mr. Dewart, were the result of their loyalty.

Honored and Trusted.

Regarding Bolshevism, the speaker said he had only to point to the positions of honor and trust enjoyed by Jews in the British Empire to refute the miserable suggestion of Bolshevism. The Jew, said Mr. Dewart, showed no signs of Bolshevism when he enlisted all over the world to fight for democracy. In Canada especially had the Jewish young men showed their worth by loyally upholding every tradition of the British race.

Joseph Singer, chairman of the banquet last night, in a few words told of the work of the association, its aims and objects. It was an association, he said, which hoped to do away with petty strife among mankind. They were asking in this attainment, however, a fair field and no favor. They asked not to be judged by a few, for there were black sheep in every flock, but they wanted judgment on their record.

Too Intelligent.

Congratulating the Jews for their recent accomplishment of retrieving Palestine with the help of Great Britain, Wm. Proudfoot, K. C., M. L. A., leader of the opposition in the provincial house, said he for one did not even trouble himself with the imputation of Bolshevik which had been hurled against the Jewish race. He knew they were too intelligent to trouble with such a cause.

MINNESOTA LODGE, ST. PAUL, MINN.

"Impressions of Service in France" was the subject of an address delivered by Major Moses Barron before Minnesota Lodge No. 157, at St. Paul, on the evening of May 26. Dr. Barron served with the colors about sixteen months, a considerable portion of the time in France. He gave a vivid description of life in the French villages and cities, dealing with his personal observation of French psychology. A musical program preceded the talk, and dancing followed it. The meeting was an open one attended by a large audience.

HUNTINGTON LODGE NO. 795, HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

(By Sam Abraham.)

Huntington Lodge No 795 continues to grow and its membership and the entire Jewish community take much pride in its club rooms, which is the Jewish Social Center of Huntington.

The lodge has just enlarged its quarters, and has improved very much the facilities and convenience of its patrons. New furniture has been added and the entire premises have been decorated, and with the return of our soldier members from government service, our club rooms will be in constant use, and social affairs will be held regularly.

On Sunday, June 1, our club room was the scene of a very brilliant affair, given by some of our members whose children were confirmed. A delightful reception was given which was quite a notable event and largely attended not only by guests from our city, but from Ironton, Ashland and Catlettsburg.

The hall never was more elaborately decorated with greenery and choice blooms. A professional orchestra was present to furnish music and dancing was indulged in until a late hour. Appropriate speeches were made during the evening, and the hostesses, Mrs. Harry Glick, Mrs. Harry Solomon, Mrs. Sam Fox, Mrs. Leon Pach, Mrs. Albert Schlossburg, Mrs. Abe Kahn, presented Rabbi Mark Kauffman with gold cuff links, and to Mrs. Abe Kahn for her untiring efforts as superintendent of the Sunday School was presented a silver bowl, while to each of her assistants, Mrs. E. A. Reich and Mrs. Max Hirschman, were presented silk umbrellas. At a late hour refreshments were passed and when departing time came all were loath to go, so pleasurable was the evening.

This is one of the many ways in which the B'nai B'rith club rooms are being utilized by the Jewish Community of Huntington. The Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent Society now makes its headquarters here entirely. Social events are planned by the society, to which all Jewish persons are invited.

Our meetings are largely attended, and the members are all taking great interest in the lodge and the Order.

On Thursday evening, May 22, at Royal Palace Casino, Atlantic Lodge tendered a reception and dance to the Jewish soldiers and sailors having returned from overseas and from the American camps.

There were about 400 persons present when his honor, Mayor Harry Bacharach, ascended the platform to welcome the boys on behalf of the city. He said in part that it gave him great pleasure to be able to welcome and honor these boys who were ready to sacrifice their lives for the world's safety. "Atlantic City," he said, "can be proud of its great business, its fine hotels and unsurpassed Boardwalk, but it should be most proud and is of its loyal and patriotic citizens.

"Atlantic City did not wait for Congress to act, but went ahead and formed the Liberty Club which took care of the dependents of the men who offered their services to the country. All classes were cared for, but this was not a charity. It was the government taking care of its people when their main support was away.

"Thirty-five hundred of Atlantic City's best men went into service, a far greater percentage than was alloted for this city, and as these men fought shoulder to shoulder on the fields of France, all race questions were cast aside. There was the one great thought, all to fight for humanity. The north, south, east and west, were all as one. This is one of the greatest things the war did for the world; it made all classes one.

"That the race question will be eliminated is assured in time and there is no better way to do this than for us to show, as we have shown, patriotism and loyalty as good citizens. We do not believe in Bolshevism nor what it stands for. We must show the world that those who came to this country should stay and be loyal to the country that they live in and fight for Old Glory."

His address at times was interrupted by tremendous applause.

Mr. Jos. Herbach, Philadelphia, Secretary District No. 3, delivered a masterly address on behalf of the Jews and the Order B'nai B'rith. Mayor Dr. Samuel Stern responded on behalf of the army. Lieut. Dr. David Allman responded on behalf of the navy. Both these young men did service in France.

During the evening an exhibition dance was given by Miss Cora G. Viola of the Viola School of Dancing, assisted by Mr. Ward A. Kentnov.

Ovation Tendered Mr. Adolph Freund

A supplemental class [illegible] tured the resumption of [illegible] of Pisgah Lodge No. 34 Monday night, April 28. Over 50 applicants were inducted into the Order. In former times the initiation of this number would have called for an extraordinary communal affair, but the fact that this was a regular lodge meeting indicates the wonderful strides made by Pisgah lodge in the past year.

The beautiful meeting hall in the new lodge quarters was filled to overflowing by several hundred enthusiastic members. The occasion also marked the formal dedication of the new lodge rooms and B'nai B'rith Club.

The initiation ceremonies were most impressive and beautiful, and were conducted by the highly trained initiation team that performed so well at the great class initiation held at the Hotel Statler recently.

Only Speaker of Evening.

The tribute to Mr. Freund was made doubly impressive in the fact that he was the only speaker of the evening. His return to the lodge was formally announced by President Maurice Garvett, who acted as toastmaster. At the mention of Mr. Freund's name every person present sprang to his feet and cheered. The demonstration lasted several minutes. Mr. Freund, visibly stirred with emotion at the splendid ovation to him, responded in his eloquent and forceful manner.

He expressed his sincere appreciation at the evidence of good feeling towards him, and stated that the strides made by Pisgah lodge, even in the short period of his absence, was a fact to be marveled at. He congratulated the members of the Order on their renewed interest in the objects of the great international force of which they had become an active part, and pledged his every energy to aid in the further upbuilding of the movement that is the greatest thing in his life.

(By Max Rothschild.)

The Home for the Aged and Infirm of District No. 1 is known as the "pride of the district", such a "pride" as can scarcely be duplicated anywhere in fraternal circles.

Our old people are housed, clothed, fed and generally cared for in a manner that leaves little to be desired. Scarcely any, if any of them, could obtain a home with all that this term implies, equal to the one in which they are spending the winter of their lives, and yet there are things needed to make their comforts complete, as the following extract of the superintendent's report for April will show: "The electrification of the house, thanks to the splendid munificence of our good brother, Governor Kashman, of Hartford, Conn., is now about complete."

The pleasure given to our old people by such great generosity of one brother whose generous heart has repeatedly led him to such deeds should certainly induce others to follow his example, as there are many things requiring action to bring this "home" up to date, to make it a modern institution.

The ravages of time have brought the building to a condition requiring radical means of correction. The exaction of war time prices have made great inroads into the bank accounts of the home, so that the ordinary means for improvements are practically lacking.

The writer of this is wondering if it could not be possible for one lodge as well as some of the brethren to show that active interest in the home that would give evidence of that fact that personal interest will and must redound to the glory of the Order generally, it will not only open the hearts of the brethren, it will open their pocketbooks as well.

Let it not be said that the Order B'nai B'rith is composed of men who feel that by attending lodge meetings and paying dues they have done their full duty: the humanitarian principles of the Order demand much more than that from [illegible]

Pisgah Lodge No. 34 has already outgrown its present quarters! This startling revelation dawned on many members of the Order at one of the most enthusiastic meetings ever held in the history of the lodge on May 5, 1919. Several hundred members crowded the large auditorium of the B'nai B'rith Club, at 25 Broadway, early in the evening. Late comers were unable to find chairs, and at the close of the meeting standing room was at a premium.

The fact that no special program or feature had been announced made the lack of accommodations all the more acute. It was only one week ago that the new lodge rooms of Pisgah Lodge were formally dedicated. The rapid and steady growth of the organization has outdistanced the calculations of the most optimistic in the Order.

The suggestions that Pisgah Lodge immediately lay plans for larger quarters were made by Rabbi Samuel S. Mayerberg, who took the occasion to call attention to the urgent need of a pretentious Jewish community center for Detroit, a building of structural beauty that would combine the activities of the B'nai B'rith, a Y. M. H. A. and such other Jewish organizations of a general communal nature that Detroit will eventually develop.

Committee to Begin Work.

This suggestion met with universal approval, and the proposal was eloquently seconded by several others present. A motion to appoint a committee to begin work at once to consider practical methods to further the object of a Detroit Jewish Community building was carried unanimously. This committee is also empowered to investigate the need of a Jewish Hospital and a Convalescent Home for Detroit.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Abraham Cohen, vice-president of the Toronto Lodge of the B'nai B'rith. Mr. Cohen expressed his great admiration for the wonderful work already accomplished by the Detroit "dynamic" lodge, and stated that Pisgah Lodge had become the model lodge of the international Order. That Toronto would some day equal the brilliant record of Detroit was his earnest hope.

Another Initiation.

One of the finest speeches heard by the members was delivered by Mr. Leo Newman of Braddock, who was formerly a resident of Detroit and secretary of Pisgah Lodge. He said that the marvelous strides made by the lodge which he once knew to be insignificant in the life of the city was dazzling to him.

In the course of the evening, President Garvett announced the appointment of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, consisting of L. J. Rosenberg, chairman; Adolph Freund, Samuel S. Mayerburg, N. J. Gould and Jacob Nathan.

The next meeting will be devoted to another initiation. Over 125 applicants still remain to be initiated into the Order. A feature of the meeting will be an address by Mr. I. George Dobsevage, General Secretary of the Jewish Publication Society of America. He will discuss the advancement of Jewish literature in this country.

LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital, of Hot Springs, Ark., is taking the liberty of appealing for co-operation on these grounds:

The Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital is a Jewish institution, maintained solely for the benefit of the poor-sick and admits no pay patients.

It was erected under the auspices of the I. O. B. B. at a cost of $100,000.00, and is modern in every respect.

It is equipped with a bath house, supplied with therapeutic hot springs which are owned by the United States Government, and is, therefore, of unique service in many diseases.

It maintains a free clinic which has now become a United States Public Health Service Clinic, and is co-operating with the Government in its campaign against social diseases.

It is national in the scope of its activities, its patients coming from every part of the country. Since its opening, in November, 1914, the institution provided for about 800 cases, and the number of applicants is constantly growing.

To be self-sustaining, the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital needs 5,000 members, paying $5 per year or more each. If you desire to be one of these, kindly fill out the enclosed membership card and return to the undersigned.

Yours for the alleviation of human suffering, A. B. RHINE,
Secretary.

TOLEDO LODGE, TOLEDO, OHIO.

The last few meetings of Toledo Lodge No. 183, have been characterized by a most enthusiastic attendance. At the meeting on May 13, 1919, in addition to regular business, the Lodge voted $50.00 to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital. An extended and interesting discussion was then held on the work of the Denver Sheltering Home for Jewish Children, in whose welfare Toledo Lodge is deeply interested. A committee consisting of Brothers Ben Fain, Ben Green and Leo Klefter, was appointed to act with the General Committee of Toledo of the Jewish War Relief. The meeting then gave way to an interesting report on the convention at Louisville by Brothers David Alexander, Lou Frank and Samuel Messing. Seldom has Toledo Lodge been so impressed with the real importance of the constructive work the Grand Lodge is doing. An interesting feature of the discussion was the clarification of the attitude of the B'nai B'rith on Zionism and the controversy regarding Congressman Kahn. Broher Walter Rosengarten exploded a bomb when he started a discussion on the participation of Jews in strikes and labor agitation. The Toledo Lodge went on record unequivocally to support law and order and to condemn and fight propaganda which imputes violence to Jews. Brother Archie Stone, just returned from Italy, entertained with some sparkling and spicy stories of foreign service.

On May 18, 1919, at a special meeting, memorial services were held for the six brothers who passed away during the last year. An eloquent address was made by Brother Messing. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Davies rendered an artistic musical program. Cantor Bachmann and his choir gave a beautiful rendition of the psalms appropriate to the occasion.

The next regular meeting, on May 27, 1919, was full of pep. Brother Sidney Kusworm's letter requesting that Flag Day services be held as soon as possible to June 14, was favorably received. The Toledo Lodge donated $25.00 to the Denver Sheltering Home for Jewish Children. Brother Dr. Shapiro, who has seen extended and valuable service abroad entertained and instructed in an illuminating talk.

On the evening of June 10, 1919, Toledo Lodge, after a short recess, reconvened for Flag Day services, assisted by members of the Y. M. H. A., and Y. W. H. A., and hosts to one hundred Jewish Boy Scouts. Miss Esther Antin read a History of the Flag. Flowers of red, white and blue were unfolded and their symbolism beautifully expressed. Brother Sam Messing delivered an eloquent valedictory on Old Glory. Brother Lou Frank touched the hearts of all when he spoke of the Toledo Lodge Service Flag, not one of whose seventy stars has changed to silver or gold. One minute of silent prayer was held for those who will and have come back. With the singing of patriotic songs an altogether impressive ceremony was concluded.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Rev. Dr. Nathan Krass of New York addressed the members of Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., at an unusually well attended meeting, held June 8, 1919. The subject was "The League of Nations," and it was stated that the League of Nations will thrive only if the makers will unanimously elect God as permanent President.

"We fought to make the world safe for democracy", said the New York rabbi, "but how many were clear in their minds concerning the meaning of that democracy for which they were fighting? There are many definitions that come clamoring for recognition, but none has the standing, the dignity, the verity of that ancient claim that leaps into our day out of the pages of the Hebrew Bible. There we find democracy defined in terms of everlasting value. Neither the mutations of time nor the changes of circumstances can alter that old declaration. Democracy does not mean the rule of the people. It means the righteous rule of the people under the perpetual suzerainty of God. The ideal democracy must be theocratic. No international contracts based on selfishness can endure. No democratic ideals that are tainted by subconscious egotism can move the race toward fellowship and peace. Morality implies the surrender of selfish interests. The nation must have some paramount power to which it is willing to give unstinted loyalty. In a league of nations of which each nation is a unit that unit in being loyal to the league incidentally includes itself. But to be totally freed from any individual consideration it must defer to a greater power not itself that makes for righteousness."

PINE TREE LODGE, BANGOR, ME.

Fifty of the returned Jewish soldiers, sailors and marines were the guests of Pine Tree Lodge No. 817 in A. O. U. W. Hall on June 8 at a banquet and reception held in their honor. Bangor Jews have been among the best soldiers sent from Bangor and their record in the World War has been a most inspiring one. It was therefore deemed an honor by the lodge to mark their arrival home by a social affair which would be in keeping with the courage and gallantry shown by the boys and would be significant of the feeling of pride with which Bangor Jews regard their representatives.

At 6:30 o'clock the members of the Order and their guests, with the speakers, Mayor Woodman, Col. F. H. Parkhurst and Hon. Henry Lasker, of Springfield, Mass., entered the banquet hall where a delicious dinner was served. The hall had been very prettily arranged with flags, the Stars and Stripes being a very effective part of the decorations. Remarks were made by Abram Rudman welcoming the boys home and praising their work in the American army while overseas.

After the banquet a short reception was held after which the members and guests went to the main hall where the entertainment and speech-making were held. M. L. Rosen presided as chairman and the speakers were Hon. John F. Woodman, mayor of Bangor; Col. F. H. Parkhurst, chairman of the Penobscot Public Safety Committee and Hon. Henry Lasker, first vice-president of the B'nai B'rith.

Mr. Lasker spoke of the work that had been done by the B'nai B'rith to place the Jews of America in their proper position with all the rest of the country. He told of the work done by the young Jews in the war and said that their patrioism and courage could no longer be doubted. It was now a matter of history. What the Jews had always felt would be done was now in the records for all men to read. It was a wonderful record.

Mayor Woodman and Col. Parkhurst also paid splendid tributes to the patriotism of the Jews and the Mayor requested the pictures of all the Jewish boys who had served be brought to City Hall to be included in the big war album which is to be placed in the Public Library as one of the historical documents, one of the most valuable that any city could have, the pictures and war records of its heroic sons.

After the speech-making a short entertainment was presented.

A number of excellent musical numbers were given and the entertainment was rich in quality and very much worth while.

Pine Tree Lodge has made a wonderful record in war work activities, and, particularly for such a small community, it is remarkable that about thirty-three and a third per cent of the members were in actual service.

PUEBLO LODGE, PUEBLO, COLO.

On Sunday, May 18, Pueblo Lodge No. 524 celebrated Colorado Springs Day, the occasion being a visit to our Lodge by our brothers of Colorado Springs Lodge No. 5231, I. O. B. B. Twenty-seven members of the latter Lodge favored us with their presence.

The festivities began with a luncheon at the Congress Hotel, where in behalf of Pueblo Lodge Brother Ben Bergerman welcomed the visitors and Brother Nathan happily replied in behalf of Colorado Springs Lodge.

The members and guests again met at 3 p. m. in the lodge room, where a regular meeting was held and a class of fourteen candidates was initiated into membership in Pueblo Lodge. The initiation ceremonies were conducted by Denver Lodge Team, composed of Brothers Anfenger, Heller, Zwetow and Friedman. The ceremonies were splendidly and impressively conducted, the Denver team thereby rendered a great service to the Order, and has merited and received the sincere thanks of the membership of Pueblo Lodge.

After the initiation a telegram from Sidney Kusworm, President District No. 2, I. O. B. B., was read congratulating the officers and members of Pueblo Lodge, which message evoked much enthusiasm. The members of Denver team, Brother Newman of Colorado Springs, Brother Benj. F. Koperlik of Pueblo, and other speakers, delivered able and interesting talks on the purpose of the Order and the work before us.

The day was closed with a reception and dance in the evening, which was enjoyed thoroughly by every one of the large number in attendance.

On every hand the day was pronounced a success and the sentiment expressed that affairs of this kind be often repeated.

SPRINGFIELD LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Springfield Lodge No. 684, of Springfield, Mass., arranged to hold an annual banquet in honor of its members who have returned from the United States service. The banquet was to take place on May 21 but was postponed until June 10. The following correspondence furnishes the reasons for the postponement:

Philip S. Silbert, President,
Springfield Lodge, B'nai B'rith,
244 Main St., Springfield, Mass.

Committee for Defense of Polish Jews have asked Stephen S. Wise to address great demonstration arranged for May 21 at Madison Square Garden, New York City, to protest against Polish massacres of Jews. Dr. Wise wires me from Columbus, Ohio, he has engagement to speak at B'nai B'rith banquet, Springfield, Mass., and if released by you will address Madison Square Garden meeting. We earnestly appeal to you in the interest of our unfortunate people in Poland, now being threatened with extermination by pogroms, to release Dr. Wise, so that his power and appeal may be heard by the American people at the great mass meeting at Madison Square Garden. Other men of prominence in national life have been similarly released for this meeting from former engagements.

MORRIS ROBENSDER,
For Committee, 5 Beekman St., New York City.

Morris Robensder,

NEWPORT NEWS LODGE, NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

(By M. Spier.)

A very interesting meeting of the local B'nai B'rith Lodge was held at Rosenbaum's Hall on Sunday evening, 8 o'clock sharp. It was a real congenial "get together" of the members of this society and a selected number of friends.

The meeting was opened by E. J. Graff, President, who after a few introductory remarks introduced the chairman of the evening, J. H. Kass, and afterwards the guest of honor, Sol Herzog of Washington, D. C., President of District Grand Lodge No. 5, I. O. B. B. The following program was rendered, J. H. Kass, Chairman, introducing each number in well chosen words:

Recitation, "Woman"—Miss Sallie Rome.
Adress—Sol Herzog.
Two Vocal Solos—Mrs. J. H. Kass, accompanied by Miss Peltz.
Words of Greeting—Herman Levy, President B'nai B'rith of Washington, D. C.
Instrumental Solo—Prof. Smith and associate.
Refreshments.

Sol Herzog's address on the "Work of the B'nai B'rith" was a masterpiece of oratory, clear and to the point. He described the manifold activities of the Order so vividly and so convincingly that, as a result of his address, sixteen new members joined the organization. It was also decided to make a membership drive for 100 members. Herman Levy invited the members of the Newport News B'nai B'rith to attend a testimonial which will be given in Washington on May 28 in honor of Sol Herzog. Sol Herzog is a brother-in-law of Mrs. William Garner and also Sol Peyser of our city.

HOREB LODGE VISITED BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE ORDER.

At a special meeting of Horeb Lodge No. 25, of New Haven, Conn., held at the Hotel Taft, Mr. Adolf Kraus, of Chicago, President of the Order, accompanied by the Secretary of the Order, Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund, paid an official visit to the Lodge, and addressed nearly 600 of its members.

A class of forty-five candidates were initiated in honor of the occasion, and the President of the Lodge, Mr. Joseph Koletsky, announced that the Lodge has nearly 800 members on its rolls and that it is making an effort to bring the membership to 1,000 within a short time.

"The Order and Its Work" was discussed by various speakers. President Koletsky, in his address, gave a brief review of the activities of the Order during his term, and during the past fifteen years.

Assuring the members of Horeb Lodge of the support of President Woodrow Wilson toward the establishment of equal rights for the Jews in those countries where they are denied, and emphasizing the duty of the B'nai B'rith to take measures through its foreign delegates and its influence and power throughout the world, to put an immediate stop to the murderous and barbarous attacks upon the Jews in the enlightened twentieth century. Mr. Kraus exhorted the members to unite all worthy Jews, so that success might be obtained.

During the administration of President Kraus, extending over fifteen years, the B'nai B'rith has made phenomenal progress and enlarged its activities so that every branch of service for humanity might be included. In 1905 the total number of members in the American districts was less than 17,000; it is now over 40,000.

In outlining the history of the developments of the B'nai B'rith under President Kraus' administration, one can receive an insight into the history of the times. From the prevention of the massacre of the Jews in Russia in 1906 and the removal from office of an anti-semitic governor of Jaffa in 1908, to the assistance given the city of Constantinople inhabited principally by Jews, when it was destroyed by fire in 1911 and during the earthquake in 1912 in European Turkey and the mitigation of much misery and destruction which followed in the wake of the war of Bulgaria, Servia, Greece and Montenegro against Turkey, to the time when President Taft presented the Order with the pen with which he signed the notice of the abrogation of the Russian treaty of 1832, and including the successful appeals in thousands of cases of judgment of deportation of immigrants who sought American shores to avoid religious persecution and the establishment throughout the country of hospitals, orphan asylums, homes for aged and infirm, night schools, nurses' training schools, free employment bureaus, summer camps for boys and many other institutions to benefit mankind, and the material assistance furnished the people during the San Francisco earthquake and the Ohio floods, together with the establishment of the powerful Anti-Defamation League and the installation of the investigation which abolished white slavery in the United States, together with social service and big brother movements which did much to correct erring citizens, the Order has well earned the reputation given it by ex-President Taft when he said:

"I have known the B'nai B'rith for many years for its good work, for the social opportunities it gives, and as a model Jewish Society. And when I say model Jewish society, I mean a society that may be a model for all societies."

Other speakers described the progress made by the Order in New England and Canada, explaining various matters of interest. Following the speaking a smoker was held and the guests of the evening welcomed. The guests were:

Adolf Kraus, of Chicago, president of the B'nai B'rith Order of the World.

Judge A. K. Cohen, of Boston, Mass., Past President of District No. 1, and chairman of Committee on Laws.

Wednesday, June 18, at 6 p. m., at the Lincoln Club, 222 Craft avenue, this Lodge will hold its testimonial dinner.

The B'nai B'rith members throughout Allegheny County are particularly busy these days to secure reservations to do honor to Marcus Feuchtwanger, President of District Grand Lodge No. 3. The committee of arrangements is exerting every effort to accommodate all members, but in order that everyone may be comfortable, reservations must be mailed not later than June 14 to Henry Jena, Treasurer, 4305 Butler street.

The degree team presided over by A. L. Solomon, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, has accepted the invitation to officiate, and every Son of the Covenant is familiar with the masterly manner in which Mr. Solomon usually conducts the ceremonies.

Dr. Samuel H. Goldenson of Congregation Rodef Shalom will deliver his first official message to the B'nai B'rith membership of this county, and his forceful and intelligent presentation of the Order's past and of its possible future will be an event of importance.

Hon. Josiah Cohen, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, will be the principal speaker. At this time we may mention that he was among the advisers of the charter members when Lippman Lodge was organized a few years ago.

Oscar H. Rosenbaum, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, will give an outline on the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the Order and District.

Morris Schaffner, of Erie, Pa., Second Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, will spread the news concerning the latest achievements of the lovely children, wards of the membership, so well cared for at the Erie Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children, where amid splendid surroundings and with healthful accommodations a fine record is being established.

Simon Davis, President of Lippmann Lodge and one of its most active members, will be chairman of the meeting. For many years he has taken a keen interest in all the philanthropic movements in this vicinity and is looked upon as a splendid leader along the line of the higher development of philanthropy.

Necessarily only members of the Order or candidates for membership can be admitted; we respectfully suggest that every reader of this announcement realize the propriety of his lending a helping hand toward the success of this affair. The banquet hall will be comfortably cool, the music will add harmony to the occasion and a general joy will be widespread. The committee in charge are as follows: Mark Alexander (general chairman), Simon Davis, Myer Wiesenthal, Gus Oestreicher, Henry Jena, Louis Beigel, Chas. I. Luntz, Harry Sirvan, Lieut. H. Lasker, Louis Bloch, B. Pearlman, W. Joseph, Joseph Seiger.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION BY JACOB J. ULLMAN LODGE, STAMFORD, CONN.

With prominent guests from Boston, New Haven and Bridgeport, Jacob B. Ullman Lodge No. 685 celebrated its eighth anniversary, on May 28, at the Hebrew Institute. The evening was marked with initiation work, which was followed by a banquet and several addresses.

The Stamford B'nai B'rith Lodge, organized eight years ago, was named in honor of the late Jacob B. Ullman, who was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas for New Haven County, and who, while connected with the Order, was a very active member of the general committee. His name has been cherished by the Jews of the state of Connecticut.

The degree team of Horeb Lodge of New Haven, which has traveled more than 6,600 miles and has received many honors, initiated a class of ten members into the Lodge early in the evening with impressive ceremony.

With the team came S. Campner, former mayor of New Haven, and Joseph H. Ullman, Past President of the District.

There were about fifty couples seated about the banquet tables in the hall of the Institute, which was specially decorated for the occasion.

Isadore Hurwitz of New Haven, a member of the degree team who has just returned from France, entertained the diners with several songs, which were exceedingly well rendered.

Attorney Albert Phillips, Secretary of Ullman Lodge, was toastmaster of the evening. Calling the diners to order, he opened the exercises with a short introductory address outlining the progress of the Lodge during the past eight years. The local Lodge of B'nai B'rith, he pointed out, has been the center of activity for the Stamford Hebrew Institute. It has carried on educational and social work, as well as charitable programs.

The President of the District, Charles H. Shapiro, of Bridgeport, was first introduced by Mr. Phillips. He told of his regard for the local organization, for its own sake and because of the memory of the man whose name it bears. He outlined the work of the B'nai B'rith in the various cities in and about Connecticut, pointing out that this organization has been the center of activity everywhere.

In concluding, the speaker pointed out to the guests that Americanization is woven into the ideal of the B'nai B'rith association. He held that, although Americanization work is now just beginning, the B'nai B'rith, when formed, about three-quarters of a century ago, by several men who met in the rear of an old store in New York, had for its chief object to make men good Americans, for the speaker pointed out it is worth while living in America and a country like this.

Remarks by Mr. Ullman.

Joseph H. Ullman, the Past President of the District, was one of those who initiated the charter members of the local Lodge, eight years ago. The other member present was Samuel Weitz, also of New Haven. Mr. Ullman was called upon by Mr. Phillips to say a few words to the guests. He said during the course of his interesting talk that the Jews are not seeking any special rights but are seeking their rights as American citizens, when they ask for something which others already have.

Former Mayor Samuel Campner of New Haven in his short talk dwelt upon the honors which have been bestowed upon certain worthy Jews, by which the Jews as a whole, he said, were honored. In the election, some time ago, of Toastmaster Albert Phillips to the office of Secretary of State the Jews were honored, and now again, with the appointment of a judge to the Supreme Court, Isaac Wolfe, the Jews again have been honored. The former mayor bestowed praise upon the man for whom the local Lodge is named, saying that the late judge's character is indicated by the ideals of the Ullman Lodge, of Stamford.

A most impressive talk was given by Rabbi S. J. Abrams of the Park Avenue Temple, Bridgeport. Dr. Abrams told of the book entitled "The Great War", written by a certain captain, in which it was stated that the Jewish soldiers were inferior to the others. President Wilson had stricken those words from out of the volume. The rabbi's address was well received.

Hebrew Author Speaks.

The treat of the evening came with the introduction of Harris L. Zelacowsky of Boston, the renowned Jewish author, who, as Harris L. Selig, is known also for his work in the Jewish relief associations. He spoke first in Jewish and then in English. He stated that the President of the United States, in reading the covenant of the League of Nations, has chosen the ninth chapter of Isaiah for his preamble, which is the program of the B'nai B'rith. He outlined President Wilson's covenant and concluded hoping that the President would seek for the safety of the world.

Attorney Abram Wofsey of Stamford also gave a fine talk, pleading for the organization of the Jews. He was followed by Sol Wagner, whose address was well received. George Greenspun of Bridgeport led the party in singing, putting all in a fine mood and affording much entertainment and pleasure.

B'NAI B'RITH IN ATLANTIC CITY.

Atlantic City Lodge No. 494, I. O. B. B., tendered a reception and dance to the Jewish soldiers and sailors having returned from overseas and camps in this country, on Thursday evening, May 22, at Royal Palace Casino. There were about 400 persons present. When Hon. Mayor Harry Bacharach ascended the platform to welcome the guests on behalf of the city, he said in part:

"Atlantic City did not wait for Congress to act but went ahead and formed the Liberty Club, which took care of the dependents of the men who offered their services to the country. All classes were cared for, but this was not a charity. It was the government taking care of its people when their main support was away."

Mr. Joseph Herbach, Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 3, I. O. B. B., delivered a masterly address of welcome on behalf of the Order B'nai B'rith.

Major Dr. Samuel Stern responded on behalf of the army and Lieutenant Dr. David Allman for the navy.

During the evening an exhibition dance was given by Mrs. Cora G. Viola, assisted by Mr. Ward A. Kentnor of the Viola School of Dancing.

GALA CLASS INITIATION BY ETHAM LODGE OF SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

By Leo Garfinkle.

A gala occasion was the class initiation of thirty-nine members by Etham Lodge No. 37, I. O. B. B., on Tuesday, May 6, in the presence of First Grand Vice-President Mendelsohn, of Fresno, Calif., and a delegation of fifty visiting members from Hope Lodge of Stockton.

The initiation was conducted by the degree team of Etham Lodge, District Deputy Leo Garfinkle acting as president. Rev. M. Fried, monitor, Brothers Blumberg, Rotholtz and Markel comprising the team. The initiatory work was most impressing. The monitor in particular distinguished himself by his stirring and impassioned presentation of the Ritual. The entire work was rendered without the use of the books.

Due to the efforts of the winning membership team, headed by Bro. Oliver Goldblatt, over fifty candidates were secured, and another class initiation will be held on Tuesday, May 20. Each of the five members on the winning team was presented by the District Deputy, Bro. Leo Garfinkle with a Bible, the Jewish Publication Society's latest rendition, Brother Goldblatt responded for the membership team, with the assurance that more members will be added to Etham Lodge.

Bro. Simon J. Lubin, who acted as toastmaster at the banquet, which followed the initiation, dwelt on his impressions gathered during his recent trip to Europe, expressing his disappointment at the selfishness of the European Nations, yet hopeful of the final outcome in which America is destined to figure largely, also of a religious regeneration which must emanate from the ews and he sponsored by the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

Bro. Leo Garfinkle discussed matters of interest to the Lodge, and was especially cordial in his welcome to the delegation from Hope Lodge of Stockton, and expressed the thanks of the Lodge to each of the membership teams for their successful efforts in adding fifty members to Etham Lodge.

Rev. M. Fried evoked thunderous applause by his eloquent appeal for unity and in referring to the terrible inconsistency of the Peace Conference in refusing to grant the Jewish plea for equal rights in all lands, also urging a stronger religious spirit in the home as well as in the Synagogue.

Brother Mendelsohn, first grand vice-president, told of the lack of Judaism in Fresno when he arrived there seven years ago, and of having been warned not to be too openly Jewish, and how the B'nai B'rith Lodge has in a few years made itself so manifest, that today the Jews of Fresno have no longer any need for disguising themselves.

A letter from Grand Secretary Ascheim expressing his regret at being unable to be present on account of the Golden Jubilee of his own Lodge. The Golden Gate, was read. Bro. U. Arnheim, one of the newly initiated members; Brother Aaron and Brother Shapiro of the Stockton delegation also spoke. Bro. Herman Davis spoke on a purely local matter asking the Sacramento members to help carry the clear water issue at the next election in June.

Each of the 125 members present at this gala meeting was highly elated and very much enthused. It was a "red letter" evening for Etham Lodge, the second oldest in District No. 4 and inspired every one to a greater degree of activity in B'nai B'rith work and all matters affecting Jewish welfare.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK

Jordan Lodge No. 15, through its various committees has started a "Membership Drive" and if the results do not show a marked increase in membership during the present year it will be indeed surprising. The Publicity Committee (Bro. Nathan Cherof, chairman) and the Entertainment Committee (Bro. David Kraus, past president, chairman) are giving their full support to the Membership Committee in its "drive" activities.

A dance was given at the headquarters on Saturday evening, May 24, and was largely attended. The annual visit to the "Home" at Yonkers took place on Sunday, June 8, 1919. On that occasion, entertainment and refreshments were provided. The summer vacation will somewhat interfere with the membership drive, but the committee which is composed of the president, Bro. Jesse Friedlander: the vice-president, Bro. Harry A. Silberstein, and the secretary, Bro. Adolph Schwarzbaum, are convinced that their work will prove successful, and when the meetings are again resumed in October, invitations will be the rule.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

After having traveled more than 6,000 miles, the Degree Team of Horeb Lodge has again been honored by being selected by the General Committee of the District to initiate a large class of candidates at Stanford, Conn. Accompanying the Degree Team were Mr. Joseph Williams, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, and Mr. Samuel Kampner, ex-mayor of the city, who are participating in the degree work.

The meeting of Horeb Lodge on Sunday evening, May 25, 1919, was enthusiastic throughout, due principally to the two forceful and splendid speakers of the evening, Hon. Leonard J. Obermeirer and Joshua Kantrowitz, of New York City. Mr. Obermeirer emphasized the work ahead for the Jews in the Order and urged the members to direct every effort toward putting a stop to the outrages and brutal murders being perpetrated in Poland and Galicia.

Attorney Joshua Kantrowitz, past president of District No. 1 and a power in B'nai B'rith work, read a very interesting letter received from Russia telling of some of the horrible and chaotic conditions existing there, and exhorted every member of Horeb Lodge to continue the splendid work being performed by the administration. Both speakers were enthusiastically received.

Sergeant Daniel Cohen, who had just returned from service in time to attend a Horeb Lodge meeting and who had so interestingly entertained Horeb Lodge throughout the war by his remarkable letters, was given a tremendous ovation. "I have no family and therefore have adopted Horeb Lodge as my family," said Sergeant Cohen as he told of some of the trying conditions that met him in France.

Horeb Lodge voted $400.00 to the New Haven Hospital campaign, being the first organization to make a contribution.

GRAND PRESIDENT MEYER OF B'NAI B'RITH RETURNS FROM OFFICIAL TOUR.

Enthusiastic over the flourishing condition of B'nai B'rith lodges in Southern California and in Arizona, Grand President Milton Meyer and Grand Orator Edgar C. Levy of District Grand Lodge No. 4, of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and their wives returned to San Francisco last week after several weeks spent in touring the southern portion of the state and Arizona.

Both expressed themselves as highly gratified with the work being done by the lodges in the cities they visited.

Membership was one of the principal messages carried by the visiting grand lodge officers, who urged their brethren to devote themselves in greater measure to adding to the rolls of their lodges.

Grand President Meyer said:

"I am greatly gratified over the progress made by the lodges in the territory we visited. All are showing the true Jewish spirit and are making great progress.

"I had the honor of being the first grand president to visit officially the lodges of Arizona, and it was well worth while. Our brethren in that state are doing wonderful work. There I learned that it was through the efforts of the B'nai B'rith members in Arizona that Governor Campbell vetoed a bill which had passed both houses of the legislature providing for the reading of the Bible in the public schools.

"The bill left the choice of testaments to the teachers, and with only two or three Jewish teachers in the schools, the New Testament would have been read in the classes.

"The members of the B'nai B'rith lodge in Miami, a small community, promised me that they would have their own building next year. In that city we were banqueted by our lodge brethren at the Y. M. C. A.—a circumstance which shows a true spirit of co-operation and friendly feeling."

WILMINGTON LODGE, WILMINGTON, DEL.

An open meeting of Wilmington Lodge No. 470, of Wilmington, Del., was held at the Y. M. H. A. Building on Sunday evening, May 25, 1919. Previous to the public meeting, initiation of candidates took place. The open meeting included a popular musical given by the members to their wives and friends. The evening was considered a ladies' night. The committee of entertainment with J. H. Gordon as chairman arranged a complete program for the occasion, which was very much appreciated by the large attendance present. The program was brought to a close with a collation and dance.

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF GOLDEN GATE LODGE NO. 129, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Golden Jubilee of Golden Gate Lodge of San Francisco was, as had been expected, in every way a very successful and highly enjoyable affair. For the success of that celebration much credit should be given to Harry Banks, chairman of the Jubilee Committee, who received the heartiest co-operation not only from the others on the committee but from almost all the members of the Lodge. The attendance and interest shown at the jubilee surpassed anything experienced in the last twenty-five years.

In the lodge room all of the General Committee officers spoke, except Lucius L. Solomons, whose attractive effort was reserved for the later banquet. Those who were heard from in the lodge room comprised Grand President Milton Meyer, Past Grand President Richard Gutstadt, Grand Orator Edgar Levy and Past Grand Orator Edmund Tauszky. In the banquet room a grand collation was spread and partaken of amid the melodious outpourings of music.

The room was artistically decorated in every respect. A Menorah made out of flowers adorned the platform. A long golden sign hung across the room to indicate the celebration. This appropriate decoration was the result of the careful supervision of District Grand Secretary I. J. Ascheim, a devoted member of the Lodge, who, as toastmaster, was altogether in his element. Various congratulatory telegrams were read, including one from Sacramento from Nathan Newmark.

Among the members who spoke at the banquet table on the history and glories of the Lodge were District Grand Treasurer Goldsmith, Past Grand President Wascerwitz and I. Stein. The younger members were represented by Mr. Banks. But three minutes were allotted to each speaker.

A notable attendant and speaker was Mr. Silver, organizer of the Lodge. The final address was delivered by Lucius L. Solomon in his usual finished and pleasing style. The festivities ended at midnight with the singing of "America".

Among those present were the following members who have returned from the national service: Past President Sidney Hotchner and his brothers, Harold Hotchner and Fred Hotchner, Past Vice-President Charles Fineberg, Charles Todfeld and M. Laub.

Altogether the celebration was in every way worthy of this active, wide-awake Lodge, which at the recent class initiation by the Committee of Fifty of the Order furnished 40 per cent of the candidates.

NEW HAMPSHIRE LODGE, MANCHESTER, N. H.

New Hampshire Lodge No. 839, of Manchester, cabled a resolution to President Wilson protesting against the murdering of Jews in Poland.

The resolution was as follows:

Whereas a number of most inhumane outrages have been perpetrated against the Jewish population in Poland, and

Whereas the Jewish population has been recently massacred and men and women shot in public and innocent women outraged without cause or provocation, but simply on grounds of religious distinction, and

Whereas the Jews throughout the world have played a most important part in the World War, and have sacrificed themselves beyond expectation, not only for the freedom of the allied nations, but for the freedom of Poland, and

Whereas these self-same Jews have now been killed, slaughtered, and persecuted by the Poles, for whose very freedom they have fought four long years, on the eve of the formation of a League of Nations whose basic principle is to permit all peoples, of whatever creed or sect, to follow their religion and to exercise it freely in all the countries of Europe,

Be it resolved, that we, the New Hampshire Lodge No. 39, of the Order of B'nai B'rith, composed of representative Jews of the state of New Hampshire and representing the sentiment of the state, do protest on behalf of our Jews against these atrocities and outrages that have taken place in the newly formed republic of Poland, and we pray you, Mr. President, as the spokesman of American ideals, in order to prevent the recurrence of these atrocities, to exert your power and influence in the formation of the League of Nations, to see to it that in the treaties that are made with all the newly formed states and the Balkan states that national minority and group rights are recognized and religion is protected.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN AND TESTIMONIAL DINNER BY ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LODGE No. 672, PITTSBURGH.

On Wednesday evening, June 18, 1919, at 6 p. m., an informal dinner will be tendered to the President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, Marcus Feuchtwanger, and as a mark of respect to his first official visit one hundred candidates will be inducted and presented him for a class initiation.

This affair will take place in the blue room of the Lincoln Club, 222 Craft avenue, East End. Immediately following the dinner the initiatory ceremonies will start, and a degree team composed of prominent men of the Order will conduct the services.

A cordial invitation to the members of the various lodges of western Pennsylvania is extended.

Simon Davis, President of the Lodge is in close touch with the committee, using his best endeavors to have the Lodge succeeded in getting over the quota of 100 new candidates.

The arrangements for this affair are under the direction of Mark Alexander, general chairman, and with the assistance of his committee, it is hoped every one who attends will be more than repaid, by having the rare treat of listening to the prominent men of the Order who will be present.

MOTHERS' DAY CELEBRATION BY EAST LIVERPOOL LODGE, EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO.

(By L. Washitzky.)

Our Mothers' Day Celebration was held one week late, May 18. As the honor guests on this occasion we had Mr. Sidney G. Kusworm, president of District No. 2, I. O. B. B.; Rabbi David Alexander, of Toledo; Mr. Lou M. Frank, of Toledo; Mr. Edward Hemple, of Pittsburgh, and the officers of our sister lodge, Steubenville, Ohio. President Kusworm and Rabbi Alexander gave brilliant addresses at the afternoon meeting. A dinner was held at the Elks Club in the evening and short addresses were given by all the honored guests. After dinner an appeal was made to those present by Rabbi Alexander and Brother Kusworm for money for a Reformed Temple. Nothing so pleasing as the success obtained in such a short while in our records as was secured on this occasion. In one hour's time we raised $11,000 from twenty-three subscribers.

We heartily recommend Brothers Kusworm and Alexander to communities where money is needed to be raised.

FREDA LARGMAN LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Freda Largman Lodge No. 805 had a splendid meeting on Monday evening, May 26, at which fifty of its members attended the initiation of candidates, David Preis, M. Kaliner and Jacob Neuman. Bro. M. S. Meyerhoff, Treasurer of District Grand Lodge No. 3, delivered an address, followed by Bro. Abraham Berkowitz, chairman of the Social Service Committee of District No. 3. He presented the conditions of the Prison Aid Work, Brotherhood Movement, and Americanization Movement. The two former movements have been in vogue for some time. He dwelt upon their purpose and showed what the B'nai B'rith is doing to help promote its activity. The Americanization Movement is to be inaugurated. Centers are to be established where prominent men of the community (Jewish) will be called upon to speak upon the importance of our foreign Jews becoming naturalized and assuming the duties of citizenship. At the conclusion of this, Secretary of the District, Brother Joseph Herbach, spoke, followed by a personal contribution of $50.00 from those present, for the purpose of aiding the Social Service work in the city of Philadelphia.

OAKLAND LOGE, OAKLAND, CAL.

On Tuesday evening, May 20, 1919, Ophir Lodge No. 252 held a drum-head court-martial in its club rooms at Covenant Hall, Temple Sinai. Morris N. Schneider, Past Grand President of D. G. L. No. 4, was formally welcomed home from his Eastern trip by his lodge brothers. The affair was one of the most original ever given by the Order. The stunts and entertainment features were enjoyed by the members who attended to make the affair a tremendous success. Several hundred members of the Oakland Lodge were present.

"The State and Its Responsibilities, Especially in Regard to Public Health," was the subject of Dr. Herbert J. Samuel's address recently given before Oakland Lodge. Dr. Samuels is chairman of the forum of B'nai B'rith Lodge and some interesting discussions are planned for future dates.

HERZL LODGE, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

The members of the B'nai B'rith and their friends in Houston were guests of Herzl Lodge No. 608 on Tuesday, May 13, 1919.

Four minute talks were made by Messrs. E. Goldberg, chairman, S. J. Westheimer, Chas. Mendelsohn, H. Grossman, each of whom spoke of some different institutions supported by the B'nai B'rith. These talks were interspersed by a piano solo by Miss Clara Radoff, vocal solo by Miss Lena Mendelsohn and a reading by Miss Leona Westheimer. Mr. Maurice Hirsch concluded the set program by an appeal for greater voluntary support for the various organizations. It became known that the Jewish Orphans' Home finances showed a deficit of about $9,000 last year and a need of many improvements during this year. Several volunteered to become members of the Association for the Relief of Jewish Widows and Orphans.

Rabbi Willner opened the meeting with prayer.

Past President of the District, Mr. Sol Schoenmann, was among the audience and was called on. His remarks concerned the welfare of the Order and its continued activity.

WAUSAU LODGE, WAUSAU, WIS.

Wausau Lodge No. 670, Wausau, Wis., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, June 8, 1919. The lodge held a regular meeting in the morning at which a class of candidates was initiated. In the evening a celebration was held which was well attended. Not only were the members of the lodge and their friends from Wausau present, but a number came from Stevens Point and other surrounding towns. Some of those present came as far as eighty-five miles to attend the celebration.

Mr. Gustavus Loevinger, of St. Paul, chairman of the Propaganda Committee of the District, was the guest of honor. He addressed the audience on the subject "Chosen Peoples," endeavoring to point out that the Jewish people were a chosen people not by reason of any special favor, but by reason of their own power of distributing ethical and spiritual ideals; that their mission is to unite in harmony the family of nations; and that by analogy the members of the Order were also a chosen people by their own choice serving the same purpose in bringing together the various factions within the family of Israel.

The program was brought to a close with musical numbers and a dance.

BRIDEPORT, CONN.

As a result of the appeal of the President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, Brother Chas. H. Shapiro, Flag Day exercises under the auspices of the District Grand Lodge were held at Bridgeport, Conn., on Wednesday evening, June 11, 1919. The following was the program of exercises:

Opening Selection—Bridgeport High School Orchestra; Miss Ingeborg Svendsen, Tune Director.

"America."

"Keep the Home Fires Burning."

Americanization Address—Miss Stella Worth Jones, Community Service Woman Organizer.

"Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean"—Talmud Torah Chorus; George Greenspun, Leader.

Address. "Our Country and Flag"—Charles H. Shapiro.

"Long, Long Trail"—Talmud Torah Chorus.

"Freedom for All, Forever," "Victory at Last"—High School Orchestra.

Illustrated Lecture—Rabbi William Wittenstein.

"Star-Spangled Banner."

Musical program arranged by Mrs. Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport Section, Council of Jewish Women: Mrs. Louis Baumrind of Ladies' Machzeke Talmud Torah Society.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

A program and dance were the features of the evening at the meeting of Isadore Straus Lodge No. 519 of Fort Worth, Texas, held on Sunday evening, May 25, at the Hebrew Institute.

A report of the session of the convention held at New Orleans was read by the delegates—Messrs. Meyer Mehl, Theo. Mack, Dr. George Fox. Speeches were made by Mr. U. M. Simon and Mr. Eli Gilbert. The rest of the program was rendered by Mrs. Louis Morris, vocal solo, accompanied by Mrs. James Weltman on the piano; Sweetie Wolfe, piano solo, and Mannie Dohan, violin solo. After the program, dancing was indulged in.

B'NAI B'RITH OF PORTLAND.

The Daughters of the Covenant, Auxiliary to Portland Lodge, entertained their members with a luncheon on June 9, at the Hotel Benson. The luncheon was followed by a bridge party at which prizes were awarded and a splendid time was had by all.

Portland lodge will give its annual Kiddies' Day on June 29. Arrangements have been completed by the entertainment committee, and a big day is anticipated for the kiddies. They will be taken to some park, not yet decided on, in automobiles, given lunch and refreshments, and games and other entertainment will be arranged to make the day an enjoyable one. The automobiles will be supplied by members of the lodge, and those who have not yet offered their autos are requested to unselfishly offer their cars and their services for these children who need this outing. Phone your willingness to give your car and your services and advise the number you can accommodate, to Ben W. Rubin, chairman of the entertainment committee, Main 89.

At the meeting of Portland Lodge No. 65, held on April 22, 1919, Honorable Ben Selling presented to Mr. Max Hirsch in behalf of the lodge, a gold engraved card-case in recognition and appreciation of his efforts in the recent War Relief Drive.

Mr. Joseph Shemanski, president of Portland Lodge, gave a luncheon on May 15, 1919, at the Hazelwood, to the chairmen of the various lodge committees. Plans were outlined for further work.

Daughters of the Covenant of Portland Lodge were most diligent workers in the recent Victory Loan Campaign. Besides its personal efforts, the Lodge invested all its funds in these bonds.

The B'nai B'rith Club Girls were hostesses at a big dance and party on Saturday evening, June 7, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building. This party was the last of a series which continued throughout the winter and caused so much pleasure to the young people attending them.

The card party given by the Portland Auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith on Tuesday afternoon, May 27, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building for the benefit of their flower fund was a successful affair. Mrs. E. H. Cook contributed to the program with a number of songs.

Portland Lodge No. 65 held a large class initiation on Tuesday evening, May 6, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Building.

B'NAI B'RITH OF BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Memorial services, under the joint auspices of Abraham Lodge No. 89, and Harmony Lodge No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., were held in memory of their departed members at the Park Avenue Temple, May 30, 1919.

The following was the program of exercises:

Memorial Address—Hon. Jacob B. Goodhart, of New Haven.
Anthem: "The Lord Is My Shepherd"—Bischoff.
Roll Call of Departed.
Funeral March—Chopin.
Adoration and Kaddish.
(During the Kaddish, Leo Daniels will play the Elegie by Massenet.)
Closing Hymn.
Benediction.

Services.

Friday, May 30th, at 7:45 p. m. (Decoration Day), Memorial Services in memory of the Brothers of Abraham Lodge No. 89, of Harmony Lodge No. 711, of the I. O. B. B., and of one of our boys on our Honor Roll, who have answered the call of the Almighty, and left our ranks in this and past years.

Order of Services

"Star Spangled Banner"
Choir and Congregation
Opening Prayer
Rabbi Samuel J. Abrams
Anthem: "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes"—Galbraith
Service for Sabbath
Solo—by Mrs. Lena Mason Barnsley.

MAHONING LODGE. YOUNGSTOWN. OHIO.

(By Mr. Louis Fried.)

Mahoning Lodge 339 held a community Sedar with success. Mothers' Day was observed with an appropriate entertainment, also a success. May 25 a class of seventeen was initiated. Applications are still coming. Brother Kusworm is keeping in touch with the local lodge as usual. Everytime he writes a letter, he spits fire and never without results. Keep it up, Brother Kusworm, we are just waking up to realize that it does not pay to sleep. However, there is always plenty of room for encouragement.

B'NAI B'RITH OF CHICAGO.

David Fish Lodge No. 130, I. O. B. B., held its regular meeting May 19, 1919, at the Covenant Club. A class of five candidates was initiated, and Bro. A. F. Mecklenburger, who gave the initiatory services, aroused a great deal of enthusiasm, and the members present insisted upon his coming again.

Bro. Dr. Martin M. Ritter delivered an address on the "Aims and Objects of the I. O. B. B.," and Brother Zucker read a report on the B. B. summer camp for poor boys.

David Fish Lodge meetings are being well attended, and it is the aim and object of its officers to have interesting meetings at all times.

Ramah Lodge.

An unusually well attended meeting of the Lodge was held at the Covenant Club on Monday, May 12, 1919. The meeting was called earlier than usual so as to have ample time to transact the routine business of the Lodge, and to initiate a large class of candidates.

After the close of the regular order of business the doors were thrown open to the public and an audience of more than 300 enjoyed the following program:

Address by Dr. I. Elfenbein, on the subject: "Hebrew Conception of the World's League of Nations".
Dramatic Readings by Mr. Lester Alden.
Songs and Recitals by Mrs. Maurice M. Strauss.

The Lodge has inaugurated a short but active campaign to increase its membership before the summer season starts. A campaign committee has been appointed with Bro. O. G. Finkelstein as chairman, and it is the aim of the Lodge to secure at least 500 new members to be initiated before the convention of the District Grand Lodge meets on July 4. At the present time of writing over 200 candidates have been secured, and the prospects are bright that the goal will be reached.

McKEESPORT LODGE, McKEESPORT, PA.

McKeesport Lodge No. 573 held a well-attended meeting on May 4, 1919. Among the new candidates initiated into the lodge was Mr. Adolph Krow. Mr. Krow is probably the oldest member of the local lodge. He expressed his regret that he had not joined earlier. It was the activity of the B'nai B'rith, he said, that influenced him to join at this time, his seventy-fifth birthday. Dr. Abe Fisher was also among those initiated at this meeting.

An important report was heard in the efforts of the B'nai B'rith at the Peace Conference in Paris. Several delegates of the B'nai B'rith have presented a petition praying that a blank assuring religious and political equality, irrespective of creed, be written into the covenant of the League of Nations. The conferees assured the delegates that the operation of the covenant would effect the equality prayed for.

The Entertainment Committee announces that the annual picnic and outing will be given in June. The committee plans to arrange the affair on an elaborate scale so as to provide for all the Jewish residents of the city.

BANQUET BY MONTEFIORE LODGE, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Montefiore Lodge No. 70 of Buffalo gave a banquet on Sunday, May 18, at the Lafayette Hotel, for the returned soldiers, sailors and marines. There were approximately 500 guests. The toastmaster, Sol Ginsburg, made several fitting remarks. The chaiman of the committee was David Rodenberg, assisted by A. Greenbaum, chairman of the entertainment committee. Others of the entertainment committee were: A. Bohne, Levi Ruslander, S. Brown, I. Settel, S. Cristall, M. Fineberg and J. Harris.

The chairman of the vaudeville committee was Jack Yellin, assisted by Nate Fernandez and I. M. Helwitz. Dave Rodenberg gave a splendid talk. Isidore Settel gave some interesting experiences of camp life, as viewed from the kitchen end of it. Mr. Sidney Pfeiffer gave a very interesting discourse of his work while with the Secret Service during the war.

A splendid dinner was served.

The affair was one of the most successful that the B'nai B'rith has ever given.

GILEAD LODGE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Gilead Lodge No. 41, of Milwaukee, Wis., gave a dance on May 22, 1919, in honor of those soldiers and sailors who returned from their overseas duties. The attendance was about 400 and the members enjoyed it so much that they want another dance when the others return. Lieutenants Seidelman and Max Ross have returned from overseas duties.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Harmony Lodge No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., held an unusually well attended meeting at Masonic Temple on June 10, 1919. The meeting was designated as Past President's Night. Mr. Leonard K. Obermeier, of New York, was the guest of honor and in his address quoted the Jew's War Service as proof of loyalty. Pointing to the Service Stars on the altar he designated that as the best refutation of Bolshevism.

"It's a lie that the Jew is the founder of Bolshevism or any other kind of government that goes backward rather than forward," declared Mr. Obermeier.

"No class of people was ever raised up by dragging others down. by attempting to stop progress, and it is false and libelous for those opposed to us to charge the Jew with being the founder of Bolshevism.

"The Jew's service to his country is manifested by the totals shown in our conscription act, by the thousands who served, the thousands of dead and wounded, the service stars which adorn the altars all over the country."

Preceding the address, a class of fifty candidates was initiated. Addresses were made by Past Presidents Sigmund Loewith, Isaac Moss, Maximilian Stein and Joseph Shapiro. Corporal Horwitz, who served in France with the all-American division, gave two vocal selections. Community singing was enjoyed under George Greenspun.

NEWPORT NEWS LODGE, NEWPORT NEWS, W. VA.

On Sunday, May 18, 1919, Bro. Sol Herzog visited Newport News Lodge No. 782, in his official capacity. The brethren of Newport News gave him a royal reception, and assisted him in a hurry up campaign. This lodge was organized by Bro. Adolph Brand on Sunday, Dec. 12, 1915. Forty charter members were at that time all the available material that town could furnish. But in spite of the fact that the young men of Newport News Lodge have enlisted in the Army and Navy, their total membership was nevertheless forty-eight on May 18, and Brother Herzog's personal campaign increased them with twenty-four applicants. This remarkable progress is due to increased Jewish population in Newport News during the war, and to the splendid efforts of the secretary of the lodge, Dr. Speier, and Brethren Sol Peyser, William Garner and the Mirmelsteins.

MENORAH LODGE, BALTIMORE, MD.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 5 met on Sunday, April 27, 1919, in Baltimore, Md. After the business session the officers of the Grand Lodge were escorted to Veterans Hall on Madison Avenue, where a public meeting was arranged by Menorah Lodge No. 771, I. O. B. B. Refreshments were served and followed by dancing.

Menorah Lodge No. 771 was organized on Flag Day, June 14, 1915, by the Field Secretary, Bro. Adolph Brand, of Washington, D. C. The charter members were 120, consisting of the most prominent business and professional men of the Monumental City. This lodge has ever since been in a healthy and progressive condition. In honor of the meeting of the General committee twenty-seven applicants for membership were received.

ISADORE STRAUS LODGE, FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

Isadore Straus Lodge No. 519, of Fort Worth, Texas, held an open meeting on Sunday evening, May 25, 1919, at the Hebrew Institute.

Preceding the public meeting a class of twelve candidates as initiated. The lodge was honored by the personal visit of Mr. Victor Hexter, of Dallas, Texas, President of the District Grand Lodge.

The public meeting included a special musical program and addresses by Messrs. E. Gilbed and W. M. Simon.

A dance concluded the evening's festivities.

The affair was one of the best the lodge ever gave and was complimentary to the many workers who were active in serving the lodge.

B'NAI B'RITH OF BRIDGEPORT.

Harmony Lodge No. 71, of Bridgeport, Conn., held a Past President's Night and a Class Initiation on Tuesday evening, June 10, 1919. The guest of the evening was Hon. Leonard J. Obermeier of New York. The degree team in full regalia exemplified the ritual. Short talks were given by all the Past Presidents of the Lodge. At the close of the meeting a smoker was held.

COUNCIL BLUFFS LODGE, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA

(By J. W. Freiden.)

Council Bluffs Lodge No. [illegible] has assumed a spirit of new activity. With the homecoming of its nineteen members in service, new enthusiasm has been shown in all its recent meetings. A class of twelve candidates has been duly initiated and the membership of the lodge will soon pass the century mark.

At a recent meeting, the Lodge went on record in giving a big picnic and barbecue in July in honor of the returned soldiers and sailors. Great interest in this event is shown by members and their families and the committee in charge promises some real surprises and stunts.

Bro. Moses Bernstein has been appointed park commissioner by the mayor of this city. This is the second time that public service of the city has been tendered to B'nai B'rith members, for Bro. Oasis Hochman now sits as alderman-at-large in the city council.

LINCOLN LODGE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Those delightful "May" dances, given under the auspices of Lincoln Lodge 780 in the pre-war days were re-inaugurated this spring. It has been the pleasure of its members and friends to gather annually and enjoy an evening of wholesome fun and pleasure. On Tuesday evening, April 29, at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, a large number took advantage of this event, and were well repaid. David Phillips, chairman of the committee; Harry M. Miller, president of the organization, and Morris Ruberg, secretary, were assisted by efficient members of the lodge to make this affair a success.

AKRON LODGE, AKRON, OHIO.

Akron Lodge No. 719 met Wednesday evening, May 28, in the school room of Temple Israel. Reports were heard on the Big Brother work and $25 was appropriated for the children of Jewish tuberculosis victims. There will probably be a Flag Day celebration by the Lodge on June 15, combining the patriotic event with a large initiation of new members. A commitee was present sent by leaders in the movement to organize a large public demonstration of protest against the massacres of Jews in Poland. The Lodge agreed to participate in the demonstration.

B'NAI B'RITH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Members of the Committee of Fifty of the local B'nai B'rith lodges gathered at an informal dinner on May 28 in B'nai B'rith Hall. The affair was marked by a spirit of good fellowship and the work of the committee was discussed informally.

A feature of the evening was the singing and specialty entertainment by Erna and Ella Schmidt, pupils of Blanche Hertz.

A large attendance was present at the meeting of Ophir Lodge No. 21 on May 12, 1919, when Rabbi Dr. Martin Mahler spoke on his experiences in France as a Red Cross worker.

A "Welcome Home Evening" for members of the local B'nai B'rith lodges who have served in the army and navy was given Monday evening, June 9, by the ladies' auxiliaries of the B'nai B'rith, with the assistance of the Committee of Fifty. The affair took place in B'nai B'rith Hall. An interesting program had been arranged and there was dancing.

On June 8, 1919, the members of the ladies' auxiliaries and the Committee of Fifty entertained the inmates of the two homes for the aged with an automobile tour of the city, after which refreshments were served in the B'nai B'rith building.

Ophir Lodge No. 21 arranged a lecture by Dr. Geo. Herzog on his "Experiences in Siberia," on May 26, 1919, at the B'nai B'rith Hall. The affair was well attended, and the entertainment committee deserves appreciation for its efforts.

The Committee of Fifty of the local B'nai B'rith Lodges, in line with its program for increased social activities, is planning to hold a dance in the B'nai B'rith building at the end of each month.

The first of these "month-end" dances was held Thursday evening, May 29. These dances are to be strictly invitational.

RAINIER LODGE SEATTLE, WASH.

The meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627, of Seattle, Wash., held on May 21, 1919, was one of an exceptional character. After the usual business was disposed of, the members were privileged to hear Dr. Bowerman of the State University on "An Historic Evolution of Bolshevism."

DISTRICT NO. 1.

Mount Royal Lodge, Montreal, Canada, is arranging for a meeting soon to launch a renewal of activities which have been dormant for some time. The question of organizing a lodge in the city of Ottawa, Canada, will also be considered.

New Hampshire Lodge No. 839, of Manchester, N. H., recently instituted, expects to hold a class initiation and banquet at Portsmouth, N. H., on the first Sunday of July, which it is hoped will be a noteworthy affair. Portsmouth is the city where the President of the Order interviewed Count Witte, Premier of Russia, during the past negotiations between Russia and Japan concerning the status of our co-religionists in Russia. The governor of the state and other distinguished officials have been invited to attend the occasion.

President of the District, Mr. Charles Shapiro, accompanied by the executive committee of the Order, paid an official visit to Rehoboth Lodge No. 38, of New York City, on June 9, 1919, and assisted in the initiation of a class of forty-five candidadates.

Bro. J. J. Ullman, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, has been delegated to represent the District at the banquet of Springfield Lodge No. 684, of Springfield, Mass., on June 10, 1919, and on which occasion Dr. Stephen B. Wise delivered an address in honor of the members of the lodge who have returned from military service.

Mr. Henry Lasker, of Springfield, Mass., first vice-president of the lodge, visited Bangor, Maine, on Sunday, June 8, 1919, and instituted a Ladies' Auxiliary in connection with Pine Tree Lodge of that city.

As a result of the propaganda efforts of the District within New York City a new lodge will be instituted on June 30, to consist of about 100 members. It is expected that this will be the first of several neighborhood lodges which the Grand Lodge expects to institute in the large cities of the District, as the officers of the Grand Lodge feel that by establishing such communal centers it will greatly strengthen the interest of the members of the Order in the metropolitan districts.

Toronto Lodge No. 836, of Toronto, Canada, had an unusually well attended meeting on Sunday, June 8, 1919, on which occasion a class of 100 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge. Mr. Jos. G. Shapiro, of Bridgeport, Conn., District Grand Lodge No. 1, addressed the lodge on the work of the Order.

Mr. Chas. H. Shapiro, of Bridgeport, Conn., President of District No. 1, has asked the presidents of lodges of the District to arrange a meeting on or about June 14, the anniversary of the first American flag, for the purpose of paying honor to "Old Glory."

Harmony Lodge No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., had a "standing room only" meeting on May 13, 1919, when State Senator H. P. Kuppleman, of Hartford, addressed the lodge on "Legislative Experiences in War and Peace Times." A further address was delivered by Mr. T. W. Harrison on "Yankee Experiences in War-Time France."

On July 1, 1919, the next meeting will be held at Portsmouth, N. H., under the auspices of New Hampshire Lodge No. 829, of Manchester, N. H. This is the first lodge in District No. 1 and the state of New Hampshire and comprises co-religionists from the entire state. The meeting of July 1 is expected to be a memorable one and the governor of the state and a member of the District Grand Lodge are expected to attend.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

An address highly enjoyed was that given by Rev. Roscoe Graham at Temple Israel before the members of Akron Lodge No. 719, Akron, Ohio, Sunday evening, May 11. The occasion was the Mothers' Day observance of the B'nai B'rith lodge. Every member who attended was presented with flowers. The address was preceded by initiation of new members and was followed by dancing and refreshments.

Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47, of St. Louis, held a special regular meeting on May 15. One of the features of the meeting was initiation of a class of twenty candidates by a specially selected degree team of Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis, led by Bro. A. B. Frey. Report of the convention of the District Grand Lodge was presented by delegates to the lodge. At the close of the meeting luncheon was served.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Wilmington Lodge No. 470, of Wilmington, Del., had a great meeting on May 25, 1919.

A class of twenty of the prominent members of Wilmington were to be initiated, but owing to other meetings in the city only eleven were initiated at this meeting.

The occasion was celebrated with a musicale and dancing for the ladies of the members and a collation was served during the evening.

Bro. Marcus Feuchtwanger, of New Castle, Pa., President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, paid an official visit to Jerico Lodge No. 44, of Pittsburgh, Pa., at a well attended meeting held by the lodge on March 11.

Wilmington Lodge No. 470, of Wilmington, Del., held a well attended meeting on May 25, 1919, at which time a class of eleven candidates were initiated. The lodge expects to initiate a further class at the meeting on June 8, 1919. The entertainment committee of the lodge is also planning for an outing at Lenapee Park.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

On June 18 Ranier Lodge No. 627, of Seattle, Wash., will give a dance in honor of the members returned from "Over There." The affair will take place in the settlement house and the members and their families have been invited to make this welcome home a real warm and hearty one.

Etham Lodge No. 37, of Sacramento, Cal., the second oldest lodge in District No. 4, has taken on a new lease of life by adding fifty-two members to its roster. It is the aim of the lodge to secure fifty more members before the year ends, so as to show a one hundred per cent increase in its membership.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

A Victory reunion and smoker, under the auspices of Joseph Lodge No. 76, of Savannah, Ga., in celebration of the return of the boys of the lodge from military service, was held on Sunday evening, May 18, 1919, at the Mordecai Sheftall Memorial Chapel. An address was delivered by Hon. Chas. M. Feidelson. A discussion of the social and literary program for the ensuing year also took place.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

The Chicago members of District Grand Lodge No. 6, comprising all the Past Presidents of the Grand Lodge and the delegates, elected to the fifty-first convention of the District Grand Lodge, will give a dinner at the Covenant Club on June 17, 1919, in honor of Dr. Haim I. Davis, who recently returned from duties overseas.

Tri-City Lodge No. 37, of Rock Island, Ill., held a reception and dance on Thursday, May 29, 1919.

An informal home-coming dancing party was held by Gilead Lodge No. 41, Milwaukee, Wis., on May 22, at the Odd Fellows Hall.

Minnesota Lodge No. 157, of St. Paul, through its committee, is busily making arrangements for the convention of the District Grand Lodge, which will take place in St. Paul in July, 1919. The committee hopes the attendance of the delegates will be as great as possible, and is trying to do everything possible to make the stay of the delegates enjoyable, and to complete arrangements for their accommodation and convenience.

A special meeting of the Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was held in the Temple Emanuel Vestry rooms on May 19, 1919. At the close of the regular business meeting an entertainment was successfully carried out which was enjoyed by an unusually large attendance. During the performance refreshments and cigars were served.

At the meeting of Lake Cities Lodge No. 696, of Ft. William, Ontario, Canada, held on May 4, 1919, a degree team was formed, and the new team initiated a candidate in most excellent manner.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

At a meeting of Memphis Lodge No. 35, at Memphis, Tenn., May 11, the delegates who represented the lodge at the recent convention of the District held in New Orleans, made a report as to the proceedings at the convention.

The delegates reported that the matter in regard to Old Men's Home, to be located in Memphis, was delayed until the next convention of the District Grand Lodge.

At the meeting of Dallas Lodge No. 197, of Dallas, Texas, held on Wednesday evening, June 4, 1919, a class of six candidates as initiated.

The lodge voted to participate in the mass-meeting called in protest against the massacres of Jews in Poland.

RECEPTION AND DINNER.

that a new inspiration had come to all, that the mission of Israel was an important oee to be performed for "the noblest principles of humanity" and that through the activity of the B'nai B'rith, our people could perform the duties which devolved upon them as Jews and as loyal, patriotic and devoted citizens in the fullest measure.

"BRITISH" JEWS AND BOLSHEVISM.

Acrimonious Controversy in London Newspapers.

Under the heading of "Bolshevism and Jewry: A Repudiation," the London Morning Post a few weeks ago contained a letter signed by Maj. Lionel de Rothschild, Lord Swaything, Sir Philip Magnus, Sir Marcus Samuel, Sir Harry S. Samuel, Mr. Leonard L. Cohen, Prof. I. Gollancz, Gen. Sir John Monash, Mr. Claude G. Montefiore and Sir Isidore Spielmann, in the course of which they said:

We have read with the deepest concern and with sincere regret certain articles which have recently appeared in two closely associated Jewish newspapers in this country (The Jewish Chronicle and the Jewish World) on the topic of Bolshevism and its "ideals." In our opinion, the publication of these articles can have no other effect than to encourage the adoption of the theoretic principles of Russian Bolsheviks among foreign Jews who have sought and found a refuge in England. We welcome, accordingly, your suggestion that British Jews should "dissociate themselves from a cause which is doing the Jewish people harm in all parts of the world." This is profoundly true, and we, on our own behalf and on behalf of numbers of British Jews with whom we have conferred, desire to dissociate ourselves absolutely and unreservedly from the mischievous and misleading doctrine which those articles are calculated to disseminate. We repudiate them as dangerous in themselves and as false to the tenets and teachings of Judaism. Partly in order to counteract the mistaken policy of the newspapers referred to, the League of British Jews was founded in November, 1917.

The Morning Post on the same day published a leading article in which it observed: "We have never alleged, nor do we believe, that the leaders of the British Jews, or the British Jews as a community, have approved of or countenanced this (Bolshevist) propaganda. We have, however, remarked more than once that their silence may be misinterpreted. That misinterpretation is no longer possible after the letter which we publish today."

SAYS JEWS THEMSELVES ARRANGED POGROMS.

The latest explanation of the massacres of Jews in Poland is that the Jews themselves arranged these pogroms in order to discredit Poland in the eyes of the world. This explanation was offered publicly, in the Polish Diet, by a priest named Okon.

The Copenhagen Zionist Bureau, which reports this statement, adds that the Polish government proposes introducing a bill for the expulsion of all Russian Jews from Poland. Such a decree would be a catastrophe for about 60,000 people who lived in Poland for decades, speak Polish, and who have had a great share in the country's industrial evolution.

The Copenhagen bureau also advises the Zionist Organization of America that expulsion orders have already been served upon 900 Jews. All the Jewish post-office and telegraph officials, numbering 400, have been dismissed.

HOW TO APPRAISE A CITY.

There is but one way by which we may appraise the city that we live in, our civic home, and that is by the fruits of that city's spirit, and of its collective life. We may estimate it by the pride and loyalty of its children; by its public beauty; by the splendid men that it generates and develops; and by the wise education by which it enlightens all. And we must, above all, honor it for its distinction among the sister cities of our land in the higher fruits of civilization; in the Arts, in Literature, in Music—the things in which the souls of men blossom and express their fragrance and beauty.—Leon Harrison, St. Louis, Mo.

POLISH POGROMS STILL CONTINUE.

The new pogroms in Poland are reported in a cablegram via Copenhagen, one by Polish legionaires on May 22, at Poryck Volhynia, where eighteen, mostly women and girls, were killed, and another at Czenstochau on May 27, with a death toll of nine. The Jews of the latter city proclaimed a fast day on the 29th.

The Jewish members of the Polish Diet, on May 22, addressed an open letter to Premier Paderewski, detailing the outrages and setting forth that the soldiery of General Haller's army have been particularly conspicuous in the many attacks on Jews. The letter criticized the government's passive attitude, and pointed out that the government's organs are guilty of provoking the anti-Jewish agitations. The issue of the Cracow "Nowy Dziennik," in which this letter was published, was confiscated.

Isaac Heilblum, who was charged with being one of two men who attempted to shoot Premier Paderewski, has been liberated after the accusation against him was changed from attempted assassination to making insulting remarks. At Bialystok, the authorities have decreed that all notices, including religious announcements by the Rabbis, must be in Polish, which very few of the Jewish population can read.

In Pinsk all the Jewish prisoners have been set free. Six of them have lost their reason as a consequence of their suffering. The Rabbi has refused to sign a statement which the military commandant has asked him to make that the meeting which terminated in the killing of over thirty Jews was a gathering of Bolsheviks. The synagogues are all closed. The military commandant notified the Rabbi that he would permit two to be reopened on condition that the massacres would not be discussed. The Rabbinate declined to accept this "favor" and have forbidden public worship. All Jewish business houses remain closed in spite of an order by the commandant that they be reopened.

LEGISLATURE PROTESTS JEWISH POGROMS.

Harrisburg, June 2.

Resolutions calling upon the United States government to protest against reported massacres and ill treatment of Jews in Poland were adopted in the House, the rules requiring that resolutions being printed being waived. The first resolution came from Mr. Glass, Philadelphia, who provided that the matter be brought to attention of Congress. The second was introduced by Mr. Golder, Philadelphia, and asked that the American peace delegates be requested to act.

THE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF PALESTINE.

Whilst Palestine continues under a military administration, economic developments are being looked after by the Palestine Commission. The introduction of large numbers of motors by the British army has created a need for chauffeurs. It has therefore been decided to open a school for training chauffeurs, with a maximum number of ten pupils, the instruction to be given under the supervision of one of the Jaffa engineers. The cost of maintenance and teaching will be borne by the pupils. It is proposed to give them also special instruction in the manipulation of tractors.

Another loan is being provided by the Palestine Commission to a group of persons interested in starting a fishing industry. The supervision of this scheme will rest with the Agricultural and Colonization Department of the Palestine Office. The eight Russian fishermen already in Palestine will form a nucleus of those engaged in the industry. The loan is to be repaid in monthly installments over a period not exceeding twenty months.

The Palestine Commission has also made arrangements for having ten youths trained in horticulture and six in veterinary science. Dr. Rosenstein has submitted a proposal to the Commission for the establishment of a meterological observatory and a committee has been appointed to investigate the proposal. Previously to his departure from Palestine, Dr. M. D. Eder presented a scheme for establishing an employment bureau. A proposal has been made for amalgamating the Pasteur Institute with the Medical Unit. The institute, of which Dr. Beham is the director, receives a subvention from the Palestine Commission.

We reap what we sow; but nature has love over and above that justice, and gives us shadow and blossom and fruit that springs from no planting of ours.—George Eliot.
